[36] Alexamenus cum omnibus Aetolis citato gradu ad regiam occupandam pergit. corporis custodes, cum in oculis res gereretur, pauor primo cepit; deinde, postquam abire Aetolorum agmen uidere, concurrunt ad relictum tyranni corpus, et spectatorum turba ex custodibus uitae mortisque ultoribus est facta. nec mouisset se quisquam si extemplo positis armis uocata in contionem multitudo fuisset et oratio habita tempori conueniens, frequentes inde retenti in armis Aetoli sine iniuria cuiusquam; sed, ut oportuit in consilio fraude coepto, omnia in maturandam perniciem eorum qui fecerant sunt acta. dux regia inclusus diem ac noctem in scrutandis thesauris tyranni absumpsit; Aetoli uelut capta urbe quam liberasse uideri uolebant in praedam uersi. simul indignitas rei, [ac] simul contemptus animos Lacedaemoniis ad coeundum fecit. alii dicere exturbandos Aetolos et libertatem, cum restitui uideretur interceptam, repetendam; alii, ut caput agenda rei esset, regii generis aliquem in speciem adsumendum. Laconicus eius stirpis erat puer admodum, eductus cum liberis tyranni. eum in equum imponunt et armis arreptis Aetolos uagos per urbem caedunt. tum regiam inuadunt; ibi Alexamenum cum paucis resistentem obruncant. Aetoli circa Chalcioecon — Mineruae aereum est templum — congregati caeduntur; pauci armis abiectis pars Tegeam, pars Megalen polin perfugiant; ibi comprehensi a magistratibus sub corona uenierunt.

[37] Philopoemen audita caede tyranni profectus Lacedaemonem cum omnia turbata metu inuenisset, euocatis principibus et oratione habita, qualis habenda Alexameno fuerat, societati Achaeorum Lacedaemonios adiunxit, eo etiam facilius quod ad idem forte tempus A. Atilius cum quattuor et uiginti quinquere milibus ad Gytheum accessit. iisdem diebus circa Chalcidem Thoas per Euthymidam principem, pulsum opibus eorum qui Romanae societatis erant, post T. Quincti legatorumque aduentum, et Herodorum, Cianum mercatorem sed potentem Chalcide propter diuitias, praeparatis ad prodicionem iis qui Euthymidae factionis erant, nequaquam eandem fortunam qua Demetrias per Eurylochum occupata erat habuit. Euthymidas ab Athenis — eum domicilio delegerat locum — Thebas primum, hinc Salganea processit, Herodorus ad Thronium. inde haud procul in Maliaco sinu duo milia peditum Thoas et ducentos equites, onerarias leues ad triginta habebat. eas cum sescentis peditibus Herodorus traicere in insulam Atalanten iussus, ut inde, cum pedestres copias adpropinquare iam Aulidi atque Euripo sensisset, Chalcidem traiceret; ipse ceteras copias nocturnis maxime itineribus quanta poterat celeritate Chalcidem ducebat.

[38] Micythio et Xenoclides, penes quos tum summa rerum pulso Euthymida Chalcide erat, seu ipsi per se suspicati seu indicata re, primo pauidi nihil usquam spei nisi in fuga ponebant; deinde postquam resedit terror et prodi et deserere non patriam modo sed etiam Romanorum societatem cernebant, consilio tali animum adiecerunt.

Sacrum anniuersarium eo forte tempore Eretriae Amarynthidis Dianae erat, quod non popularium modo sed Carystiorum etiam coetu celebratur. eo miserunt qui orarent Eretrienses Carystiosque ut et suarum fortunarum in eadem insula geniti misererentur et Romanam societatem respicerent: ne sinerent Aetolorum Chalcidem fieri; Euboeam habituros, si Chalcidem habuissent; graue fuisse Macedonas dominos, multo minus tolerabiles futuros Aetolos. Romanorum maxime respectus ciuitates mouit et uirtutem nuper in bello <et> in uictoria iustitiam benignitatemque expertas. itaque quod roboris in iuuentute erat utraque ciuitas armauit misitque. iis tuenda moenia Chalcidis oppidani cum tradidissent, ipsi omnibus copiis transgressi Euripum ad Salganea posuerunt castra. inde caduceator primum, deinde legati ad Aetolos missi percunctatum quo suo dicto factoue socii atque amici ad se oppugnandos uenirent. respondit Thoas dux Aetolorum non ad oppugnandos sed ad liberandos ab Romanis uenire sese: splendidiore nunc eos catena sed multo grauiore uinctos esse quam cum praesidium Macedonum in arce habuissent. se uero negare Chalcidenses aut seruire ulli aut praesidio cuiusquam egere. ita digressi ex conloquio legati ad suos; Thoas et Aetoli, ut qui spem omnem in eo ut improuiso opprimerent habuissent, ad iustum bellum oppugnationemque urbis mari ac terra munitae haudquaquam pares, domum rediere. Euthymidas postquam castra popularium ad Salganea esse profectosque Aetolos audiuit, et ipse a Thebis Athenas rediit; et Herodorus cum per aliquot dies intentus ab Atalante signum nequiquam expectasset, missa speculatoria naue ut quid morae esset sciret, postquam rem omissam ab sociis uidit, Thronium unde uenerat repetit.

[39] Quinctius quoque his auditis ab Corintho ueniens nauibus in Chalcidi<co> Euripo Eumeni regi occurrit. placuit quingentos milites

praesidii causa relinqui Chalcide ab Eumene rege, ipsum Athenas ire. Quinctius quo profectus erat Demetriadem contendit, ratus Chalcidem liberatam momenti aliquid apud Magnetas ad repetendam societatem Romanam facturam, et ut praesidii aliquid esset suae partis hominibus, Eunomo praetori Thessalorum scripsit ut armaret iuuentutem, et <Uillium> ad Demetriadem praemisit ad temptandos animos, non aliter nisi pars aliqua inclinaret ad respectum pristinae societatis rem adgressurus. Uillius quinquerei naue ad ostium portus est inuectus. eo multitudo Magnetum omnis cum se effudisset, quaesiuit Uillius utrum ad amicos an ad hostes uenisse se mallent. respondit Magnetarches Eurylochus ad amicos uenisse eum, sed abstineret portu et sineret Magnetas in concordia et libertate esse nec per conloqui speciem multitudinem sollicitaret. altercatio inde non sermo fuit, cum Romanus ut ingratos increparet Magnetas imminentesque praediceret clades, multitudo obstreperet nunc senatum nunc Quinctium accusando. ita inrito incepto Uillius ad Quinctium sese recepit. at Quinctius nuntio ad praetorem misso ut reduceret domum copias, ipse nauibus Corinthum rediit.

[40] Abstulere me uelut de spatio Graeciae res immixtae Romanis, non quia ipsas operae pretium esset perscribere sed quia causae cum Antiocho fuerunt belli. consulibus designatis — inde namque deuerteram — L. Quinctius et Cn. Domitius consules in prouincias profecti sunt, Quinctius in Ligures, Domitius aduersus Boios. Boi quieuerunt, atque etiam senatus eorum cum liberis et praefecti cum equitatu — summa omnium mille et quingenti — consuli dederunt sese. ab altero consule ager Ligurum late est uastatus castellaque aliquot capta, unde non praeda modo omnis generis cum captiuis parta sed recepti quoque aliquot ciues sociique qui in hostium potestate fuerant.

Eodem hoc anno Uibonem colonia deducta est ex senatus consulto plebique scito. tria milia et septingenti pedites ierunt, trecenti equites; triumphum deduxerunt eos Q. Naeuius M. Minucius M. Furius Crassipes; quina dena iugera agri data in singulos pedites sunt, duplex equitibus. Bruttiorum proxime fuerat ager; Brutti ceperant de Graecis. Romae per idem tempus duo maximi fuerunt terrores, diutinus alter sed segnior: terra dies duodequadragesima mouit. per totidem dies feriae in sollicitudine ac metu fuere; [in] triduum eius rei causa supplicatio habita est. ille non pavor uanus sed uera multorum clades fuit: incendio a foro Bouario orto diem noctemque aedificia in Tiberim uersa arsere tabernaeque omnes cum magni pretii mercibus conflagrauerunt.

[41] Iam fere in exitu annus erat, et in dies magis et fama de bello Antiochi et cura patribus crescebat; itaque de prouinciis designatorum magistratuum, quo intentiores essent omnes, agitari coeptum est. decreuere ut consulibus Italia et quo senatus censuisset — eam esse bellum aduersus Antiochum regem omnes sciebant — prouinciae essent; cuius ea sors esset, quattuor milia peditum ciuium Romanorum et trecenti equites, sex milia socium Latini nominis cum quadringentis equitibus sunt decreta. eorum dilectum habere L. Quinctius consul iussus, ne quid moraretur quo minus consul nouus quo senatus censuisset extemplo proficisci posset. item de prouinciis praetorum decretum est, prima ut sors duae urbanae et inter ciues ac peregrinos iurisdictio esset, secunda Bruttii, tertia classis ut nauigaret quo senatus censuisset, quarta Sicilia, quinta Sardinia, sexta Hispania ulterior. imperatum praeterea L. Quinctio consuli est ut duas legiones ciuium Romanorum nouas conscriberet et socium ac Latini nominis uiginti milia peditum et octingentos equites. eum exercitum praetori cui Bruttii prouincia euenisset decreuerunt.

Aedes duae Iouis eo anno in Capitolio dedicatae sunt; uouerat L. Furius Purpurio praetor Gallico bello unam, alteram consul; dedicauit Q. Marcius Ralla duumuir. iudicia in faeneratores eo anno multa seuerè sunt facta, accusantibus priuatos aedilibus curulibus M. Tuccio et P. Iunio Bruto. de multa damnatorum quadrigae inauratae in Capitolio positae et in cella Iouis supra fastigium aediculae [et] duodecim clupea inaurata; et iidem porticum extra portam Trigeminam inter lignarios fecerunt.

[42] Intentis in apparatum noui belli Romanis ne ab Antiocho quidem cessabatur. tres eum ciuitates tenebant, Zmyrna et Alexandria Troas et Lampsacus, quas neque ui expugnare ad eam diem poterat neque condicionibus in amicitiam perlicere, neque ab tergo relinquere traiciens ipse in Europam uolebat. tenuit eum et de Hannibale deliberatio. et primo naues apertae quas cum eo missurus in Africam fuerat moratae sunt; deinde an omnino mittendus esset consultatio mota est, maxime a Thoante Aetolo, qui omnibus in Graecia tumultu completis Demetriadem adferebat in potestate esse, et quibus mendaciis de rege, multiplicando uerbis copias eius, erexerat multorum in Graecia animos, iisdem et regis spem inflabat: omnium uotis eum accersi; concursum ad litora futurum, unde classem regiam prospexissent. hic idem ausus de Hannibale est mouere sententiam prope iam certam regis. nam neque dimittendam partem nauium a classe regia censebat neque, si mittendae naues forent, minus quemquam ei classi quam Hannibalem praeficiendum: exulem illum et Poenum esse, cui mille in dies noua consilia uel fortuna sua uel ingenium possit facere, et ipsam eam gloriam belli qua uelut dote Hannibal concilietur nimiam in praefecto regio esse. regem conspici, regem unum ducem, unum imperatorem uideri debere. si classem, si exercitum amittat Hannibal, idem damni fore ac si per alium ducem amittantur; si quid prospere eueniat, Hannibalis eam, non Antiochi gloriam fore; si uero uniuerso bello uincendi Romanos fortuna detur, quam spem esse sub rege uicturum Hannibalem, uni subiectum, qui patriam prope non tulerit? non ita se a iuuenta eum gessisse, spe animoque complexum orbis terrarum imperium, ut in senectute dominum laturus uideatur. nihil opus esse regi duce Hannibale; comite et consiliario eodem ad bellum uti posse. modicum fructum ex ingenio tali neque grauem neque inutilem fore: si summa petantur, et dantem et accipientem prae-grauatura.

[43] Nulla ingenia tam prona ad inuidiam sunt quam eorum qui genus ac fortunam suam animis non aequant, quia uirtutem et bonum alienum oderunt. extemplo consilium mittendi Hannibalis, quod unum in principio belli utiliter cogitatum erat, abiectum est. Demetriadis maxime defectione ab Romanis ad Aetolos elatus non ultra differre profectionem in Graeciam constituit. priusquam solueret naues, Ilium a mari escendit ut Mineruae sacrificaret. inde ad classem regressus proficiscitur quadraginta tectis nauibus, apertis sexaginta, et ducentae onerariae cum omnis generis commeatu bellicoque alio apparatu sequebantur. Imbrum primo insulam tenuit; inde Sciathum traiecit; ubi conlectis in alto quae dissipatae erant nauibus ad Pteleum primum continentis uenit. ibi Eurylochus ei Magnetarches principesque Magnetum ab Demetriade occurrerunt; quorum frequentia laetus die postero in portum urbis nauibus est inuectus, copias haud procul inde exposuit. decem milia peditum fuere et quingenti equites, sex elephanti, uix ad Graeciam nudam occupandam satis copiarum, nedum ad sustinendum Romanum bellum.

Aetoli, postquam Demetriadem uenisse Antiochum allatum est, concilio indicto decretum quo accerserent eum fecerunt. iam profectus ab Demetriade rex, quia ita decreturos sciebat, Phalara in sinum Maliacum processerat. inde decreto accepto Lamiam uenit, exceptus ingenti fauore multitudinis cum plausibus clamoribusque et quibus aliis laetitia effusa uolgi significatur.

[44] In concilium ut uentum est, aegre a Phaenea praetore principibusque aliis introductus silentio facto dicere orsus rex. prima eius oratio fuit [primo] excusantis quod tanto minoribus spe atque opinione omnium copiis uenisset: id suae impensae erga eos uoluntatis maximum debere indicium esse, quod nec paratus satis ulla re et tempore ad nauigandum immaturo uocantibus legatis eorum haud grauate obsecutus esset credidissetque, cum se uidissent Aetoli, omnia uel in se uno posita praesidia existimatuos esse. ceterum eorum quoque se quorum expectatio destituta in praesentia uideatur spem abunde expleturum; nam simul primum anni tempus nauigabile praeuisset mare, omnem se Graeciam armis uiris equis, omnem oram maritimam classibus completurum, nec impensae nec labori nec periculo parsurum, donec depulso ceruicibus eorum imperio Romano liberam uere Graeciam atque in ea principes Aetolos fecisset. cum exercitibus commeatus quoque omnis generis ex Asia uenturos: in praesentia curae esse Aetolis debere ut copia frumenti suis et annona tolerabilis rerum aliarum suppeditetur.

[45] In hanc sententiam rex cum magno omnium adsensu locutus discessit. post discessum regis inter duos principes Aetolorum Phaeneam et Thoantem contentio fuit. Phaeneas reconciliatore pacis et disceptatore de iis quae in controuersia cum populo Romano essent utendum potius Antiocho censebat quam duce belli: aduentum eius et maiestatem ad uerecundiam faciendam Romanis uim maiorem habituram quam arma. multa homines, ne bellare necesse sit, uoluntate remittere quae bello et armis cogi non possint. Thoas negare paci studere Phaeneam sed discutere apparatus belli uelle, ut taedio et impetus relanguescat regis et Romani tempus ad comparandum habeant; nihil enim aequi ab Romanis impetrari posse totiens legationibus missis Romam, totiens cum ipso Quinctio disceptando satis expertum esse, nec nisi abscisa omni spe auxilium Antiochi imploratos fuisse. quo celerius spe omnium oblato non esse elanguescendum, sed orandum potius regem ut quoniam, quod maximum fuerit, ipse uindex Graeciae uenerit, copias quoque terrestres naualesque accersat. armatum regem aliquid impetraturum: inermem non pro Aetolis modo sed ne pro se quidem ipso momenti ullius futurum apud Romanos. haec uicit sententia, imperatoremque regem appellandum censuerunt et triginta principes cum quibus, si qua uellet, consultaret delegerunt.

[46] Ita dimisso concilio multitudo omnis in suas ciuitates dilapsa est; rex postero die cum apocletis eorum unde bellum ordiretur consultabat. optimum uisum est Chalcidem, frustra ab Aetolis nuper temptatam, primum adgredi, et celeritate magis in eam rem quam magno conatu et apparatu opus esse. itaque cum mille peditibus rex qui Demetriade secuti erant profectus per Phocidem est, et alio itinere principes Aetoli iuniorum paucis euocatis ad Chaeroneam occurrerunt et decem constratis nauibus secuti sunt. rex ad Salganea castris positus nauibus ipse cum principibus Aetolorum Euripum traiecit; et, cum haud procul portu egressus esset, magistratus quoque Chalcidensium et principes ante portam processerunt. pauci utrimque ad conloquium congressi sunt. Aetoli magnopere suadere ut salua Romanorum amicitia regem quoque adsumerent socium atque amicum; neque enim eum inferendi belli sed liberandae Graeciae causa in Europam traiecisse, et liberandae re, non uerbis et simulatione, quod fecissent Romani. nihil autem utilius Graeciae ciuitatibus esse quam utramque complecti amicitiam; ita enim ab utriusque iniuria tutas alterius semper praesidio et fiducia fore. nam si non recepissent regem, uiderent quid patiendum iis extemplo foret, cum Romanorum procul auxilium, hostis Antiochus, cui resistere suis uiribus non possent, ante portas esset. ad haec Micythio, unus ex principibus, mirari se dixit ad quos liberandos Antiochus relicto regno suo in Europam traiecisset; nullam enim ciuitatem se in Graecia nosse quae aut praesidium habeat aut stipendium Romanis pendat aut foedere iniquo adligata quas nolit leges patiatur; itaque Chalcidenses neque uindice libertatis ullo egere, cum liberi sint, neque praesidio, cum pacem eiusdem populi Romani beneficio et libertatem habeant. amicitiam regis non aspernari nec ipsorum Aetolorum. id primum eos pro amicis facturos, si insula excedant atque abeant; nam ipsis certum esse non modo non recipere moenibus sed ne societatem quidem ullam pacisci nisi ex auctoritate Romanorum.

[47] Haec renunciata regi ad naues ubi restiterat cum essent, in praesentia — neque enim iis uenerat copiis ut ui agere quicquam posset — reuerti Demetriadem placuit. ibi, quoniam primum uanum inceptum euasisset, consultare cum Aetolis rex quid deinde fieret. placuit <Boeotos>, Achaeos, Amynandrum regem Athamanum temptare. Boeotorum gentem auersam ab Romanis iam inde a Brachylli morte et quae secuta eam fuerant censebant; Achaeorum Philopoemenem principem aemulatione gloriae in bello Laconum infestum inuisumque esse Quinctio credebant. Amynander uxorem Apamam, filiam Alexandri cuiusdam Megalopolitani, habebat, qui se oriundum a magno Alexandro ferens filiis duobus Philippum atque Alexandrum et filiae Apamam nomina imposuerat; quam regiis inclutam nuptiis maior e fratribus Philippus secutus in Athamaniam fuerat. hunc forte ingenio uanum Aetoli et Antiochus impulerant in spem Macedoniae regni, quod is uere regum stirpis esset, si Amynandrum Athamanesque Antiocho coniunxisset; et ea uanitas promissorum non apud Philippum modo sed etiam apud Amynandrum ualuit.

[48] In Achaia legatis Antiochi Aetolorumque coram T. Quinctio Aegii datum est concilium. Antiochi legatus prior quam Aetoli est auditus. is, ut plerique quos opes regiae alunt, uaniloquus maria terrasque inani sonitu uerborum compleuit: equitum innumerabilem uim traici Hellesponto in Europam, partim loricatos, quos cataphractus uocant, partim sagittis ex equo utentes et, a quo nihil satis tecti sit, auerso refugientes equo certius figentes. his equestribus copiis quamquam uel totius Europae exercitus in unum coacti obrui possent, adiciebat multiplices copias peditum et nominibus quoque gentium uix fando auditis terrebat, Dahas Medos Elymaeosque et Cadusios appellans; naualium uero copiarum, quas nulli portus capere in Graecia possent, dextrum cornu Sidonios et Tyrios, sinistrum Aradios et ex Pamphylia Sidetas tenere, quas gentes nullae

unquam nec arte nec uirtute nauali aequassent. iam pecuniam, iam alios belli apparatus referre superuacaneum esse: scire ipsos abundasse semper auro regna Asiae. itaque non cum Philippo nec Hannibale rem futuram Romanis, principe altero unius ciuitatis, altero Macedoniae tantum regni finibus incluso, sed cum magno Asiae totius partisque Europae rege. eum tamen, quamquam ab ultimis orientis terminis ad liberandam Graeciam ueniat, nihil postulare ab Achaeis in quo fides eorum aduersus Romanos, priores socios atque amicos, laedatur; non enim ut secum aduersus eos arma capiant, sed ut neutri parti sese coniungant petere. pacem utrique parti, quod medios deceat amicos, optent: bello se non interponant. idem ferme et Aetolorum legatus Archidamus petiit ut, quae facillima et tutissima esset, quietem praestarent spectatoresque belli fortunarum alienarum euentum sine ullo discrimine rerum suarum opperirentur. prouectus deinde est intemperantia linguae in maledicta nunc communiter Romanorum, nunc proprie ipsius Quincti, ingratos appellans et exprobrans non uictoriam modo de Philippo uirtute Aetolorum partam sed etiam salutem, ipsumque et exercitum sua opera seruatos. quo enim illum unquam imperatoris functum officio esse? auspicantem immolantemque et uota nuncupantem sacrificuli uatis modo in acie uidisse, cum ipse corpus suum pro eo telis hostium obiceret.

[49] Ad ea Quinctius coram quibus magis quam apud quos uerba faceret dicere Archidamum rationem habuisse; Achaeos enim probe scire Aetolorum omnem ferociam in uerbis, non in factis esse, et in conciliis magis contionibusque quam in acie apparere; itaque parui Achaeorum existimationem, quibus notos esse se scirent, fecisse: legatis regis et per eos absenti regi eum se iactasse. quod si quis antea ignorasset quae res Antiochum et Aetolos coniunxisset, ex legatorum sermone potuisse apparere: mentiendo in uicem iactandoque uires quas non haberent, inflasse uana spe atque inflatos esse. 'dum hi ab se uictum Philippum, sua uirtute protectos Romanos et, quae modo audiebatis, narrant uos ceterasque ciuitates et gentes suam sectam esse secuturos, rex contra peditum equitumque nubes iactat et consternit maria classibus suis. est autem res simillima cenae Chalcidensis hospitis mei, et hominis boni et sciti conuiuatoris, apud quem solstitiali tempore comiter accepti cum miraremur unde illi eo tempore anni tam uaria et multa uenatio, homo non qua isti sunt gloriosus renidens condimentis ait uarietatem illam et speciem ferinae carnis ex mansueto sue factam.' hoc dici apte in copias regis, quae paulo ante iactatae sint, posse; uaria enim genera armorum et multa nomina gentium inauditarum, Dahas <et Medos> et Cadusios et Elymaeos, Syros omnes esse, haud paulo mancipiorum melius propter seruilia ingenia quam militum genus. 'et utinam subicere oculis uestris, Achaei, possem concursationem regis magni ab Demetriade nunc Lamiam in concilium Aetolorum, nunc Chalcidem: uideretis uix duarum male plenarum legiuncularum instar in castris regis, uideretis regem nunc mendicantem prope frumentum ab Aetolis quod militi admetiatur, nunc mutuas pecunias faenore in stipendium quaerentem, nunc ad portas Chalcidis stantem et mox, inde exclusum, nihil aliud quam Aulide atque Euripo spectatis in Aetoliam redeuntem. male crediderunt et Antiochus Aetolis et Aetoli regiae uanitati; quo minus uos decipi debetis sed expertae potius spectataeque Romanorum fidei credere. nam quod optimum esse dicunt, non interponi uos bello, nihil immo tam alienum rebus uestris est: quippe sine gratia, sine dignitate praemium uictoris eritis.'

[50] Nec absurde aduersus utrosque respondisse uisus est, et facile erat orationem apud fauentes aequis auribus accipi. nulla enim nec disceptatio nec dubitatio fuit quin omnes eosdem genti Achaeorum hostes et amicos quos populus Romanus censuisset iudicarent bellumque et Antiocho et Aetolis nuntiari iuberent. auxilia etiam quo censuit Quinctius, quingentorum militum Chalcidem, quingentorum Piraeum extemplo miserunt. erat enim haud procul seditione Athenis res, trahentibus ad Antiochum quibusdam spe largitionum uenalem pretio multitudinem, donec ab iis qui Romanae partis erant Quinctius est accitus et accusante Leonte quodam Apollodorus auctor defectionis damnatus atque in exilium est eiectus.

Et ab Achaeis quidem cum tristi responso legatio ad regem rediit; Boeoti nihil certi responderunt: cum Antiochus in Boeotiam uenisset, tum quid sibi faciendum esset se deliberaturos esse.

Antiochus cum ad Chalcidis praesidium et Achaeos et Eumenem regem misisse audisset, maturandum ratus ut et praeuenirent sui et uenientes, si possent, exciperent, Menippum cum tribus ferme milibus militum et cum omni classe Polyxenidan mittit, ipse paucos post dies sex milia suorum militum et ex ea copia quae Lamiae repente conligi potuit non ita multos Aetolos ducit. Achaei quingenti <et> ab Eumene rege modicum auxilium missum duce Xenoclide Chalcidensi nondum obsessis itineribus tuto transgressi Euripum Chalcidem peruenerunt. Romani milites, quingenti ferme et ipsi, cum iam Menippus castra ante Salganea ad Hermaeum, qua transitus ex Boeotia in Euboeam insulam est, haberet, uenerunt. Micythio erat cum iis, legatus ab Chalcide ad Quinctium ad id ipsum praesidium petendum missus. qui postquam obsessas ab hostibus fauces uidit, omisso ad Aulidem itinere Delium conuertit, ut inde in Euboeam transmissurus.

[51] Templum est Apollinis Delium, imminens mari; quinque milia passuum ab Tanagra abest; minus quattuor milium inde in proxima Euboeae est mari traiectus. ubi et in fano lucoque ea religione et eo iure sancto quo sunt templa quae asyla Graeci appellant, et nondum aut indicto bello aut ita commisso ut strictos gladios aut sanguinem usquam factum audissent, cum per magnum otium milites alii ad spectaculum templi lucique uersi, alii in litore inermes uagarentur, magna pars per agros lignatum pabulumque dilapsa esset, repente Menippus palatos passim adgressus ~eos cecidit, ad quinquaginta uiuos cepit; perpauci effugerunt, in quibus Micythio parua oneraria naue exceptus. ea res Quinctio Romanisque sicut iactura militum molesta, ita ad ius inferendi Antiocho belli adiecisse aliquantum uidebatur. Antiochus admoto ad Aulidem exercitu, cum rursus oratores partim ex suis partim Aetolos Chalcidem misisset qui eadem illa quae nuper cum minis grauioribus agerent, nequiquam contra Micythione et Xenoclide tendentibus facile tenuit ut portae sibi aperirentur. qui Romanae partis erant sub aduentum regis urbe excesserunt. Achaeorum et Eumenis milites Salganea tenebant, et in Euripo castellum Romani milites pauci custodiae causa loci communiebant. Salganea Menippus, rex ipse castellum Euripi oppugnare est adortus. priores Achaei et Eumenis milites pacti ut sine fraude liceret abire, praesidio excesserunt; pertinacius Romani Euripum tuebantur. hi quoque tamen cum terra marique obsiderentur et iam machinas tormentaue adportari uiderent, non tulere obsidionem. cum id, quod caput erat Euboeae, teneret rex, ne ceterae quidem insulae eius urbes imperium abnuerunt; magnoque principio sibi orsus bellum uidebatur, quod tanta insula et tot opportuna urbes in suam dicionem uenissent.

LIBER XXXVI

[1] P. Cornelium Cn. filium Scipionem et M'. Acilium Glabionem consules inito magistratu patres, priusquam de prouinciis agerent, res diuinas facere maioribus hostiis iusserunt in omnibus fanis, in quibus lectisternium maiorem partem anni fieri solet, precarique, quod senatus de nouo bello in animo haberet, ut ea res senatui populoque Romano bene atque feliciter eueniret. ea omnia sacrificia laeta fuerunt, primisque hostiis perlitatum est, et ita haruspices responderunt, eo bello terminos populi Romani propagari, uictoriam ac triumphum ostendi. haec cum renuntiata essent, solutis religione animis patres rogationem ad populum ferri iusserunt, uellent iuberentne cum Antiocho rege, quique eius sectam secuti essent, bellum iniri; si ea perlata rogatio esset, tum, si ita uideretur consulibus, rem integram ad senatum referrent. P. Cornelius eam rogationem pertulit; tum senatus decreuit, ut consules Italiam et Graeciam prouincias sortirentur; cui Graecia euenisset, ut praeter eum numerum militum, quem L. Quinctius consul in eam prouinciam ex auctoritate senatus scripsisset imperassetue, ut eum exercitum acciperet, quem M. Baebius praetor anno priore ex senatus consulto in Macedoniam traiecisset; et extra Italiam permissum, ut, si res postulasset, auxilia ab sociis ne supra quinque milium numerum acciperet. L. Quinctium superioris anni consulem legari ad id bellum placuit. alter consul, cui Italia prouincia euenisset, cum Bois iussus bellum gerere utro exercitu mallet ex duobus, quos superiores consules habuissent, alterum ut mitteret Romam, eaeque urbanae legiones essent paratae quo senatus censuisset.

[2] His ita in senatu, <incerto> ad id, quae cuius<que> prouincia foret, decretis, tum demum sortiri consules placuit. Acilio Graecia, Cornelio Italia euenit. certa deinde sorte senatus consultum factum est, quod populus Romanus eo tempore duellum iussisset esse cum rege Antiocho, quique sub imperio eius essent, ut eius rei causa supplicationem imperarent consules, utique M'. Acilius consul ludos magnos Ioui uoueret et dona ad omnia puluinaria. id uotum in haec uerba praeunte P. Licinio pontifice maximo consul nuncupauit: 'si duellum, quod cum rege Antiocho sumi populus iussit, id ex sententia senatus populiue Romani confectum erit, tum tibi, Iuppiter, populus Romanus ludos magnos dies decem continuos faciet, donaque ad omnia puluinaria dabuntur de pecunia, quantam senatus decreuerit. quisquis magistratus eos ludos quando ubique faxit, hi ludi recte facti donaque data recte sunt.’ supplicatio inde ab duobus consulibus edicta per biduum fuit.

Consulibus sortitis prouincias extemplo et praetores sortiti sunt. M. Iunio Bruto iurisdictio utraque euenit, A. Cornelio Mammulae Bruttii, M. Aemilio Lepido Sicilia, L. Oppio Salinatori Sardinia, C. Liuius Salinatori classis, L. Aemilio Paulo Hispania ulterior. his ita exercitus decreti: A. Cornelio noui milites, conscripti priore anno ex senatus consulto a L. Quinctio consule, dati sunt, iussusque tueri omnem oram circa Tarentum Brundisiumque. L. Aemilio Paulo in ulteriorem Hispaniam, praeter eum exercitum, quem a M. Fuluius proconsule accepturus esset, decretum est, ut nouorum militum tria milia duceret et trecentos equites, ita ut in iis duae partes socium Latini nominis, tertia ciuium Romanorum esset. idem supplementi ad C. Flaminium, cui imperium prorogabatur, in Hispaniam citeriorem est missum. M. Aemilius Lepidus ab L. Ualerio, cui successurus esset, simul prouinciam exercitumque accipere iussus; L. Ualerium, si ita uideretur, pro praetore in prouincia retinere et prouinciam ita diuidere, ut una ab Agrigento ad Pachynum esset, altera a Pachyno Tyndareum; eam maritimam oram L. Ualerius uiginti nauibus longis custodiret. eidem praetori mandatum, ut duas decumas frumenti exigeret; id ad mare comportandum deuehendumque in Graeciam curaret. idem L. Oppio de alteris decumis exigendis in Sardinia imperatum; ceterum non in Graeciam sed Romam id frumentum portari placere. C. Liuius praetor, cui classis euenerat, triginta nauibus paratis traicere in Graeciam primo quoque tempore iussus, et ab Atilio naues accipere. ueteres naues, quae in naualibus erant, ut reficeret et armaret, M. Iunio praetori negotium datum est, et in eam classem socios nauales libertinos legeret.

[3] Legati terni in Africam ad Carthaginenses et in Numidiam ad frumentum rogandum, quod in Graeciam portaretur, missi, pro quo pretium solueret populus Romanus. adeoque in apparatus curamque eius belli ciuitas intenta fuit, ut P. Cornelius consul ediceret, qui senatores essent quibusque in senatu sententiam dicere liceret, quique

minores magistratus essent, ne quis eorum longius ab urbe Roma abiret, quam unde eo die redire posset, neue uno tempore quinque senatores ab urbe Roma abessent. in comparanda impigre classe C. Liuium praetorem contentio orta cum colonis maritimis paulisper tenuit. nam cum cogerentur in classem, tribunos plebi appellarunt; ab iis ad senatum reiecti sunt. senatus ita, ut ad unum omnes consentirent, decreuit uacationem rei naualis eis colonis non esse. Ostia et Fregenae et Castrum Nouum et Pyrgi et Antium et Tarracina et Minturnae et Sinuessa fuerunt, quae cum praetore de uacatione certarunt. consul deinde M'. Acilius ex senatus consulto ad collegium fetialium rettulit, ipsine utique regi Antiocho indiceretur bellum, an satis esset ad praesidium aliquod eius nuntiari; et num Aetolis quoque separatim indici iuberent bellum, et num prius societas et amicitia eis renuntianda esset quam bellum indicendum. fetiales responderunt, iam ante sese, cum de Philippo consulerentur, decreuisse nihil referre, ipsi coram an ad praesidium nuntiaretur; amicitiam renuntiatam uideri, cum legatis totiens repetentibus res nec reddi nec satisfieri aequum censuissent; Aetolos ultro sibi bellum indixisse, cum Demetriadem, sociorum urbem, per uim occupassent, Chalcidem terra marique oppugnatum issent, regem Antiochum in Europam ad bellum populo Romano inferendum traduxissent. omnibus iam satis comparatis M'. Acilius consul edixit, ut quos L. Quinctius milites conscripsisset et quos sociis nominique Latino imperasset, quos secum in prouinciam ire oporteret, et tribuni militum legionis primae et tertiae, ut ii omnes Brundisium idibus Mais conuenirent. ipse a. d. quintum nonas Maias paludatus urbe egressus est. per eosdem dies et praetores in prouincias profecti sunt.

[4] Sub idem tempus legati ab duobus regibus, Philippo et Ptolomaeo, [Aegypti rege,] Romam uenerunt, Philippo pollicente ad bellum auxilia et pecuniam et frumentum; ab Ptolomaeo etiam mille pondo auri, uiginti milia pondo argenti adlata. nihil eius acceptum; gratiae regibus actae; et cum uterque se cum omnibus copiis in Aetoliam uenturum belloque interfuturum polliceretur, Ptolomaeo id remissum; Philippi legatis responsum gratum eum senatui populoque Romano facturum, si M'. Acilio consuli non defuisset. item ab Carthaginiensibus et Masinissa rege legati uenerunt. Carthaginienses tritici modium milia, hordei quingenta ad exercitum, dimidium eius

Romam apportaturos polliciti; id ut ab se munus Romani acciperent, petere sese, et classem [suorum] suo sumptu comparaturos, et stipendium, quod pluribus pensionibus in multos annos deberent, praesens omne daturus; Masinissae legati quingenta milia modium tritici, trecenta hordei ad exercitum in Graeciam, Romam trecenta milia modium tritici, ducenta quinquaginta hordei, equites quingentos, elephantos uiginti regem ad M'. Acilium consulem missurum. de frumento utrisque responsum, ita usurum eo populum Romanum, si pretium acciperent; de classe Carthaginiensibus remissum, praeterquam si quid nauium ex foedere deberent; de pecunia item responsum, nullam ante diem accepturos.

[5] Cum haec Romae agebantur, Chalcide Antiochus, ne cessaret per hibernorum tempus, partim ipse sollicitabat ciuitatum animos mittendis legatis, partim ultro ad eum ueniebant, sicut Epirotae communi gentis consensu et Elei e Peloponneso uenerunt. Elei auxilium aduersus Achaeos petebant, quos post bellum non ex sua sententia indictum Antiocho primum ciuitati suae arma illaturos <credebant>. mille iis pedites cum duce Cretensi Euphane sunt missi. Epirotarum legatio erat minime in partem ullam liberi aut simplicis animi; apud regem gratiam initam uolebant cum eo, ut cauerent, ne quid offenderent Romanos. petebant enim, ne se temere in causam deduceret, expositos aduersus Italiam pro omni Graecia et primos impetus Romanorum excepturos; sed si ipse posset terrestribus naualibusque copiis praesidere Epiro, cupide eum omnis Epirotas et urbibus et portibus suis accepturos; si id non posset, deprecari, ne se nudos atque inermes Romano bello obiceret. hac legatione id agi apparebat, ut siue, quod magis credebant, abstinuisset Epiro, integra sibi omnia apud exercitus Romanos essent, conciliata satis apud regem gratia, quod accepturi fuissent uenientem, siue uenisset, sic quoque spes ueniae ab Romanis foret, quod non expectato longinquo ab se auxilio praesentis uiribus succubuissent. huic tam perplexae legationi quia non satis in promptu erat, quid responderet, legatos se missurum ad eos dixit, qui de iis, quae ad illos seque communiter pertinerent, loquerentur.

[6] In Boeotiam ipse profectus est, causas in speciem irae aduersus Romanos eas, quas ante dixi, habentem, Brachyllae necem et bellum a Quinctio Coroneae propter Romanorum militum caedes illatum, re uera per multa iam saecula publice priuatimque labante egregia quondam disciplina gentis et multorum eo statu, qui diuturnus esse sine mutatione rerum non posset. obuiam effusis undique Boeotiae principibus Thebas uenit. ibi in concilio gentis, quamquam et ad Delium impetu in praesidium Romanum facto et ad Chalcidem commiserat nec paruis nec dubiis principiis bellum, tamen eandem orationem <est> exorsus, qua in colloquio primo ad Chalcidem quaque per legatos in concilio Achaeorum usus erat, ut amicitiam secum institui, non bellum indici Romanis postularet. neminem, quid ageretur, fallebat; decretum tamen sub leni uerborum praetextu pro rege aduersus Romanos factum est.

Hac quoque gente adiuncta Chalcidem regressus, praemissis inde litteris, ut Demetriadem conuenirent principes Aetolorum, cum quibus de summa rerum deliberaret, nauibus eo ad diem indictum concilio uenit. et Amynder, accitus ad consultandum ex Athamania, et Hannibal Poenus, iam diu non adhibitus, interfuit ei consilio. consultatum de Thessalorum gente est, quorum omnibus, qui aderant, uoluntas temptanda uidebatur. in eo modo diuersae sententiae erant, quod alii extemplo agendum, alii ex hieme, quae tum ferme media erat, differendum in ueris principium, et alii legatos tantummodo mittendos, alii cum omnibus copiis eundem censebant terrendosque metu, si cunctarentur.

[7] Cum circa hanc fere consultationem disceptatio omnis uerteretur, Hannibal nominatim interrogatus sententiam in uniuersi belli cogitationem regem atque eos, qui aderant, tali oratione auertit. ‘si, ex quo traiecimus in Graeciam, adhibitus essem in consilium, cum de Euboea deque Achaeis et de Boeotia agebatur, eandem sententiam dixissem, quam hodie, cum de Thessalis agitur, dicam. ante omnia Philippum et Macedonas in societatem belli quacumque ratione censeo deducendos esse. nam quod ad Euboeam Boeotosque et Thessalos attinet, cui dubium est, quin, ut quibus nullae suae uires sint, praesentibus adulando semper, quem metum in consilio habeant, eodem ad impetrandam ueniam utantur, simul ac Romanum exercitum in Graecia uiderint, ad consuetum imperium se auertant, nec iis noxae futurum sit, quod, cum Romani procul abessent, uim tuam praesentis exercitusque tui experiri noluerint? quanto igitur prius potiusque est Philippum nobis coniungere quam hos? cui, si

semel in causam descenderit, nihil integri futurum sit, quique eas uires adferat, quae non accessio tantum ad Romanum esse bellum, sed per se ipsae nuper sustinere potuerint Romanos. hoc ego adiuncto — absit uerbo inuidia — qui dubitare de euentu possim, cum, quibus aduersus Philippum ualuerint Romani, iis nunc fore uideam, ut ipsi oppugnentur? Aetoli, qui Philippum, quod inter omnes constat, uicerunt, cum Philippo aduersus Romanos pugnabunt; Amynander atque Athamanum gens, quorum secundum Aetolos plurima fuit opera in eo bello, nobiscum stabunt; Philippus tum te quieto totam molem sustinebat belli; nunc duo maximi reges Asiae Europaeque uiribus aduersus unum populum, ut meam utramque fortunam taceam, patrum certe aetate ne uni quidem Epirotarum regi parem — qui quid tandem erat uobiscum comparatus? — geretis bellum. quae igitur res mihi fiduciam praebet coniungi nobis Philippum posse? una, communis utilitas, quae societatis maximum uinculum est; altera, auctores uos Aetoli. uester enim legatus hic Thoas inter cetera, quae ad exciendum in Graeciam Antiochum dicere est solitus, ante omnia hoc semper adfirmavit, fremere Philippum et aegre pati sub specie pacis leges seruitutis sibi impositas. ille quidem ferae bestiae uinctae aut clausae et refringere claustra cupienti regis iram uerbis aequabat. cuius si talis animus est, soluamus nos eius uincula et claustra refringamus, ut erumpere diu coercitam iram in hostes communes possit. quod si nihil eum legatio nostra mouerit, at nos, quoniam nobis eum adiungere non possumus, ne hostibus nostris ille adiungi possit, caueamus. Seleucus filius tuus Lysimachiae est; qui si eo exercitu, quem secum habet, per Thraciam proxima Macedoniae coeperit depopulari, facile ab auxilio ferendo Romanis Philippum ad sua potissimum tuenda auertet. de Philippo meam sententiam habes; de ratione uniuersi belli quid sentirem, iam ab initio non ignorasti. quod si tum auditus forem, non in Euboea Chalcidem captam et castellum Euripi expugnatum Romani, sed Etruriam Ligurumque et Galliae Cisalpinae oram bello ardere, et, qui maximus iis terror est, Hannibalem in Italia esse audirent. nunc quoque accersas censeo omnis naualis terrestisque copias; sequantur classem onerariae cum commeatibus; nam hic sicut ad belli munera pauci sumus, sic nimis multi pro inopia commeatuum. cum omnis tuas contraxeris uires, diuisa classe partem Corcyrae in statione habebis, ne transitus

Romanis liber ac tutus pateat, partem ad litus Italiae, quod Sardiniam Africamque spectat, traicies; ipse cum omnibus terrestribus copiis in Bullinum agrum procedes; inde Graeciae praesidebis, et speciem Romanis traiecturum te praebens et, si res poposcerit, traiecturus. haec suadeo, qui ut non omnis peritissimus sim belli, cum Romanis certe bellare bonis malisque meis didici. in quae consilium dedi, in eadem nec infidelem nec segnem operam polliceor. dii approbent eam sententiam, quae tibi optima uisa fuerit.’

[8] Haec ferme Hannibalis oratio fuit; quam laudarunt magis in praesentia, qui aderant, quam rebus ipsis exsecuti sunt; nihil enim eorum factum est, nisi quod ad classem copiasque accersendas ex Asia Polyxenidam misit. legati Larisam ad concilium Thessalorum sunt missi, et Aetolis Amyandroque dies ad conueniendum exercitui Pheras est dictus; eodem et rex cum suis copiis confestim uenit. ubi dum opperitur Amynandrum atque Aetolos, Philippum Megalopolitanum cum duobus milibus hominum ad legenda ossa Macedonum circa Cynoscephalas, ubi debellatum erat cum Philippo, misit, siue ab ipso, quaerente sibi commendationem ad Macedonum gentem et inuidiam regi, quod insepultos milites reliquisset, monitus, siue ab insita regibus uanitate ad consilium specie amplum, re inane animo adiecto. tumulus est in unum ossibus, quae passim strata erant, coaceruatis factus, qui nullam gratiam ad Macedonas, odium ingens ad Philippum mouit. itaque qui ad id tempus fortunam esset habiturus in consilio, is extemplo ad M. Baebium propraetorem misit, Antiochum in Thessaliam impetum fecisse; si uideretur ei, moueret ex hibernis; se obuiam processurum, ut, quid agendum esset, consultarent.

[9] Antiocho ad Pheras iam castra habenti, ubi coniunxerant ei se Aetoli et Amynander, legati ab Larisa uenerunt quaerentes, quod ob factum dictumue Thessalorum bello lacerasset eos, simul orantes, ut remoto exercitu per legatos, si quid ei uideretur, secum disceptaret. eodem tempore quingentos armatos duce Hippolochio Pheras in praesidium miserunt; ii exclusi aditu, iam omnia itinera obsidentibus regiis, Scotusam se receperunt. legatis Larisaeorum rex clementer respondit, non belli faciendi, sed tuendae et stabiliendae libertatis Thessalorum causa se Thessaliam intrasse. similia his, qui cum Pheraeis ageret, missus; cui nullo dato responso Pheraei ipsi legatum ad regem principem ciuitatis Pausaniam miserunt. qui cum haud dissimilia iis, ut in causa pari, quae pro Chalcidensibus in colloquio ad Euripi fretum dicta erant, quaedam etiam ferocius egisset, rex etiam atque etiam deliberare eos iussos, ne id consilii caperent, cuius, dum in futurum nimis cauti et prouidi essent, extemplo paeniteret, dimisit. haec renuntiata Pheras legatio cum esset, ne paulum quidem dubitarunt, quin pro fide erga Romanos, quidquid fors belli tulisset, paterentur. itaque et hi summa ope parabant se ad urbem defendendam, et rex ab omni parte simul oppugnare moenia est adgressus et, ut qui satis intellegeret — neque enim dubium erat — in euentu eius urbis positum esse, quam primam adgressus esset, aut sperni deinde ab uniuersa gente Thessalorum aut timeri se, omnem undique terrorem obsessis iniecit. primum impetum oppugnationis satis constanter sustinuerunt; dein cum multi propugnantes caderent aut uulnerarentur, labare animi coeperunt. reuocati deinde castigationibus principum ad perseuerandum in proposito, relicto exteriore circulo muri, deficientibus iam copiis in interiorem partem urbis concesserunt, cui breuior orbis munitionis circumiectus erat; postremo uicti malis, cum timerent, ne ui captis nulla apud uictorem uenia esset, dediderunt sese. nihil deinde moratus rex quattuor milia armatorum, dum recens terror esset, Scotusam misit. nec ibi mora deditiois est facta cernentibus Pheraeorum recens exemplum, qui, quod pertinaciter primo abnuerant, malo domiti tandem fecissent; cum ipsa urbe Hippolochus Larisaeorumque deditum est praesidium. dimissi ab rege inuiolati omnes, quod eam rem magni momenti futuram rex ad conciliandos Larisaeorum animos credebatur.

[10] Intra decimum diem, quam Pheras uenerat, his perfectis Crannonem profectus cum toto exercitu primo aduentu cepit. inde Cierium et Metropolim et iis circumiecta castella recepit; omniaque iam regionis eius praeter Atracem et Gyrtonem in potestate erant. tunc adgredi Larisam constituit ratus uel terrore ceterarum expugnatarum uel beneficio praesidii dimissi uel exemplo tot ciuitatum deditum sese non ultra in pertinacia mansuros. elephantis agi ante signa terroris causa iussis quadrato agmine ad urbem incessit, ut incerti fluctuarentur animi magnae partis Larisaeorum inter metum praesentem hostium et uerecundiam absentium sociorum. per eosdem dies Amynder cum Athamanum

iuuentute occupat Pellinaeum, et Menippus cum tribus milibus peditum Aetolorum et ducentis equitibus in Perrhaebiam profectus Malloeam et Cyretias ui cepit <et> depopulatus est agrum Tripolitanum. his raptim peractis Larisam ad regem redeunt; consultant, quidnam agendum de Larisa esset, superuenerunt. ibi in diuersum sententiae tendebant aliis uim adhibendam et non differendum censentibus, quin operibus ac machinis simul undique moenia adgrederetur urbis sitae in plano, aperto et campestri undique aditu, aliis nunc uires urbis nequaquam Pheris conferendae memorantibus, nunc hiemem et tempus anni nulli bellicae rei, minime obsidioni atque oppugnatione urbium aptum. incerto regi inter spem metumque legati a Pharsalo, qui ad dedendam urbem suam forte uenerant, animos auxerunt. M. Baebius interim cum Philippo in Dassaretiis congressus Ap. Claudium ex communi consilio ad praesidium Larisae misit, qui per Macedoniam magnis itineribus in iugum montium, quod super Gonnos est, peruenit. oppidum Gonni uiginti milia ab Larisa abest, in ipsis faucibus saltus, quae Tempe appellantur, situm. ibi castra metatus latius quam pro copiis et plures quam quot satis in usum erant ignes cum accendisset, speciem, quam quaesierat, hosti fecit omnem ibi Romanum exercitum cum rege Philippo esse. itaque hiemem instare apud suos causatus rex unum tantum moratus diem ab Larisa recessit et Demetriadem rediit, Aetolique et Athamanes in suos receperunt se fines. Appius etsi, cuius rei causa missus erat, solutam cernebat obsidionem, tamen Larisam ad confirmandos in reliquum sociorum animos descendit; duplexque laetitia erat, quod et hostes excesserant finibus, et intra moenia praesidium Romanum cernebant.

[11] Rex Chalcidem a Demetriade, amore captus uirginis Chalcidensis, Cleoptolemi filiae, cum patrem primo allegando, deinde coram ipse rogando fatigasset, inuitum se grauioris fortunae condicioni illigantem, tandem impetrata re tamquam in media pace nuptias celebrat et relicum hiemis, oblitus, quantas simul duas res suscepisset, bellum Romanum et Graeciam liberandam, omissa omnium rerum cura, in conuiuio et uinum sequentibus uoluptatibus ac deinde ex fatigatione magis quam satietate earum in somno traduxit. eadem omnis praefectos regios, qui ubique, ad Boeotiam maxime, praepositi hibernis erant, cepit luxuria; in eandem et milites effusi sunt, nec quisquam eorum aut arma induit aut stationem aut uigilias seruauit aut quicquam, quod militaris operis aut muneris esset, fecit. itaque principio ueris, cum per Phocidem Chaeroneam, quo conuenire omnem undique exercitum iusserat, uenisset, facile animaduertit nihilo seueriore disciplina milites quam ducem hibernasse. Alexandrum inde Acarnana et Menippum Macedonem Stratum Aetoliae copias ducere iussit; ipse Delphis sacrificio Apollini facto Naupactum processit. consilio principum Aetoliae habito uia, quae praeter Calydonem et Lysimachiam fert ad Stratum, suis, qui per Maliacum sinum ueniebant, occurrit. ibi Mnasilochus princeps Acarnanum, multis emptus donis, non ipse solum gentem regi conciliabat, sed Clytum etiam praetorem, penes quem tum summa potestas erat, in suam sententiam adduxerat. is cum Leucadios, quod Acarnaniae caput est, non facile ad defectionem posse cerneret impelli propter metum Romanae classis, quae cum Atilio quaeque circa Cephallaniam erat, arte eos est adgressus. nam cum in concilio dixisset tuenda mediterranea Acarnaniae esse et omnibus, qui arma ferrent, exeundum ad Medionem et Thyrraeum, ne ab Antiocho aut Aetolis occuparentur, fuere qui dicerent nihil attinere omnis tumultuose concitari, satis esse quingentorum hominum praesidium. eam iuuentutem nactus, trecentis Medione, ducentis Thyrraei in praesidio positus, id agebat, ut pro obsidibus futuri uenirent in potestatem regis.

[12] Per eosdem dies legati@ regis Medionem uenerunt; quibus auditis cum in contione, quidnam respondendum regi esset, consultaretur, et alii manendum in Romana societate, alii non aspernandam amicitiam regis censerent, media uisa est Clyti sententia eoque accepta, ut ad regem mitterent legatos peterentque ab eo, ut Medionios super tanta re consultare in concilio Acarnanum pateretur. in eam legationem Mnasilochus et qui eius factionis erant de industria coniecti, clam missis, qui regem admouere copias iuberent, ipsi terebant tempus. itaque uixdum iis egressis [legatis] Antiochus in finibus et mox ad portas erat, et trepidantibus, qui expertes prodicionis fuerant, tumultuoseque iuuentutem ad arma uocantibus ab Clyto et Mnasilocho in urbem est inductus; et aliis sua uoluntate adfluentibus metu coacti etiam, qui dissentiebant, ad regem conuenerunt. quos placida oratione territatos cum permulsisset, ad spem uulgatae clementiae aliquot populi Acarnaniae defecerunt. Thyreum a Medione profectus est Mnasilocho eodem et legatis praemissis. ceterum detecta Medione fraus cautiores, non timidiores Thyreens fecit; dato enim haud perplexo responso, nullam se nouam societatem nisi ex auctoritate imperatorum Romanorum accepturos, portisque clausis armatos in muris disposuerunt. et peropportune ad confirmandos Acarnanum animos Cn. Octavius missus a Quintio, cum praesidium et paucas naues ab A. Postumio, qui ab Atilio legato Cephallaniae praepositus fuerat, acceperat, Leucadem uenit impleuitque spei socios M'. Acilium consulem iam cum legionibus mare traiecisse et in Thessalia castra Romana esse. hunc rumorem quia similem ueri tempus anni maturum iam ad nauigandum faciebat, rex praesidio Medione imposito et in quibusdam aliis Acarnaniae oppidis Thyreo abscessit et per Aetoliae ac Phocidis urbis Chalcidem rediit.

[13] Sub idem tempus M. Baebius et Philippus rex, iam ante per hiemem in Dassaretiis congressi, cum Ap. Claudium, ut obsidione Larisam eximeret, in Thessaliam misissent, quia id tempus rebus gerendis immaturum erat, in hiberna regressi, principio ueris coniunctis copiis in Thessaliam descenderunt. in Acarnania tum Antiochus erat. aduenientes Philippus Malloeam Perrhaebiae, Baebius Phacium est adgressus; quo primo prope impetu capto Phaestum eadem celeritate capit. inde Atracem cum se receperat, Cyretias hinc et Eritium occupat, praesidiisque per recepta oppida dispositis Philippo rursus obsidenti Malloeam se coniungit. sub aduentum Romani exercitus seu ad metum uirium seu ad spem ueniae cum dedidissent sese, ad ea recipienda oppida, quae Athamanes occupauerant, uno agmine ierunt. erant autem haec: Aeginium Ericinium Gomphi Silana Tricca Meliboea Phaloria. inde Pellinaeum, ubi Philippus Megalopolitanus cum quingentis peditibus et equitibus quadraginta in praesidio erat, circumsidunt et, priusquam oppugnarent, mittunt ad Philippum qui monerent, ne uim ultimam experiri uellet. quibus ille satis ferociter respondit uel Romanis uel Thessalis se crediturum fuisse, in Philippi se potestatem commissurum non esse. postquam apparuit ui agendum, quia uidebatur et Limnaeum eodem tempore oppugnari posse, regem ad Limnaeum ire placuit, Baebius restitit ad Pellinaeum oppugnandum.

[14] Per eos forte dies M'. Acilius consul cum uiginti milibus peditum, duobus milibus equitum, quindecim elephantis mari traiecto pedestris copias Larisam ducere tribunos militum iussit; ipse cum equitatu Limnaeum ad Philippum uenit. aduentu consulis deditio sine cunctatione est facta, traditumque praesidium regum et cum iis Athamanes. ab Limnaeo Pellinaeum consul proficiscitur. ibi primi Athamanes tradiderunt sese, deinde et Philippus Megalopolitanus; cui decedenti praesidio cum obuius forte fuisset Philippus rex, ad ludibrium regem eum consalutari iussit, ipse congressus fratrem haud sane decoro maiestati suae ioco appellauit. deductus inde ad consulem custodiri iussus <est> et haud ita multo post in uinculis Romam missus. cetera multitudo Athamanum aut militum Antiochi regis, quae in praesidiis deditorum per eos dies oppidorum fuerat, Philippo tradita regi est; fuere autem ad quattuor milia hominum. consul Larisam est profectus, ibi de summa belli consultaturus. in itinere ab Cierio et Metropoli legati tradentes urbes suas occurrerunt. Philippus Athamanum praecipue captiuos indulgenter habitis, ut per eos conciliaret gentem, nactus spem Athamaniae potiendae exercitum eo duxit praemissis in ciuitates captiuos. et illi magnam auctoritatem apud populares habuerunt, clementiam erga se regis munificentiamque commemorantes, et Amynder, cuius praesentis maiestas aliquos in fide continuisset, ueritus, ne traderetur Philippo iam pridem hosti et Romanis merito tunc propter defectionem infensis, cum coniuge ac liberis regno excesset Ambraciamque se contulit; ita Athamania omnis in ius dicionemque Philippi concessit. consul ad reficienda maxime iumenta, quae et nauigatione et postea itineribus fatigata erant, paucos Larisae moratus dies, uelut renouato modica quiete exercitu Crannonem est progressus. uenienti Pharsalus et Scotusa et Pherae quaeque in eis praesidia Antiochi erant deduntur. ex iis interrogatis, qui manere secum uellent, mille uolentis Philippo tradit, ceteros inermes Demetriadem remittit. Proernam inde recepit et quae circa eam castella erant. ducere tum porro in sinum Maliacum coepit. appropinquanti faucibus, super quas siti Thaumaci sunt, deserta urbe iuuentus omnis armata siluas et itinera insedit et in agmen Romanum ex superioribus locis incursauit. consul primo misit, qui ex propinquo colloquentes deterrent eos a tali furore; postquam perseuerare in incepto uidit, tribuno cum duorum signorum militibus circummisso interclusit ad urbem iter armatis, uacuumque eam cepit. tum clamore ab tergo captae urbis audito refugientium undique ex siluis insidiatorum caedes facta est. ab Thaumacis altero die consul ad Spercheum amnem peruenit, inde Hypataeorum agros uastauit.

[15] Cum haec agebantur, Chalcide erat Antiochus, iam tum cernens nihil se ex Graecia praeter amoena Chalcide hiberna et infames nuptias petisse. tunc Aetolorum uana promissa incusare et Thoantem, Hannibalem uero non ut prudentem tantum uirum sed prope uatem omnium, quae tum euenirent, admirari. ne tamen temere coepta segnitia insuper euerteret, nuntios in Aetoliam misit, ut omni contracta iuuentute conuenirent Lamiam; et ipse eo decem milia fere peditum ex iis, qui postea uenerant ex Asia, expleta et equites quingentos duxit. quo cum aliquanto pauciores quam umquam antea conuenissent, et principes tantummodo cum paucis clientibus essent, atque ii dicerent omnia sedulo ab se facta, ut quam plurimos ex ciuitatibus suis euocarent; nec auctoritate nec gratia nec imperio aduersus detractantes militiam ualuisse, destitutus undique et ab suis, qui morabantur in Asia, et ab sociis, qui ea, in quorum spem uocauerant, non praestabant, intra saltum Thermopylarum sese recepit. id iugum, sicut Appennini dorso Italia diuiditur, ita mediam Graeciam dirimit. ante saltum Thermopylarum in septentrionem uersa Epirus et Perrhaebia et Magnesia et Thessalia est et Phthiotae Achaei et sinus Maliacus; intra fauces ad meridiem uergunt Aetoliae pars maior et Acarnania et cum Locride Phocis et Boeotia adiunctaque insula Euboea et excurrente in altum uelut promunturio Attica terra et sita ab tergo Peloponnesus. hoc iugum ab Leucate et mari ad occidentem uerso per Aetoliam ad alterum mare orienti obiectum tendens ea aspreta rupesque interiectas habet, ut non modo exercitus sed ne expediti quidem facile ullas ad transitum calles inueniant. extremos ad orientem montis Oetam uocant, quorum quod altissimum est Callidromon appellatur, in cuius ualle ad Maliacum sinum uergente iter est non latius quam sexaginta passus. haec una militaris uia est, qua traduci exercitus, si non prohibeantur, possint. ideo Pylae et ab aliis, quia calidae aquae in ipsis faucibus sunt, Thermopylae locus appellatur, nobilis Lacedaemoniorum aduersus Persas morte magis memorabili quam pugna.

[16] Haudquaquam pari tum animo Antiochus intra portas loci eius castris positis munitionibus insuper saltum impediabat et, cum duplici uallo fossaque et muro etiam, qua res postulabat, ex multa copia passim iacentium lapidum permunisset omnia, satis fidens numquam ea uim Romanum exercitum facturum, Aetolos ex quattuor milibus — tot enim conuenerant — partim ad Heracleam praesidio obtinendam, quae ante ipsas fauces posita est, partim Hypatam mittit, et Heracleam haud dubius consulem oppugnaturum, et iam multis nuntiantibus circa Hypatam omnia euastari. consul depopulatus Hypatensem primo deinde Heracleensem agrum, inutiles utrobique auxilio Aetolorum, in ipsis faucibus prope fontes calidarum aquarum aduersus regem posuit castra. Aetolorum utraeque manus Heracleam sese incluserunt. Antiochum, cui, priusquam hostem cerneret, satis omnia permunita et praesidiis obsaepta uidebantur, timor incessit, ne quas per imminencia iuga calles inueniret ad transitum Romanus; nam et Lacedaemonios quondam ita a Persis circuitos fama erat, et nuper Philippum ab iisdem Romanis; itaque nuntium Heracleam ad Aetolos mittit, ut hanc saltem sibi operam eo bello praestarent, ut uertices circa montium occuparent obsiderentque, ne qua transire Romani possent. hoc nuntio audito dissensio inter Aetolos orta est. pars imperio parendum regis atque eundem censebant, pars subsistendum Heracleae ad utramque fortunam, ut, siue uictus ab consule rex esset, in expedito haberent integras copias ad opem propinquis ferendam ciuitatibus suis, siue uinceret, ut dissipatos in fugam Romanos persequerentur. utraque pars non mansit modo in sententia sua, sed etiam exsecuta est consilium: duo milia Heracleae substiterunt; duo trifariam diuisa Callidromum et Rhoduntiam et Tichiunta — haec nomina cacuminibus sunt — occupauere.

[17] Consul postquam in sessa superiora loca ab Aetolis uidit, M. Porcium Catonem et L. Ualerium Flaccum consularis legatos cum binis milibus delectorum peditum ad castella Aetolorum, Flaccum in Rhoduntiam et Tichiunta, Catonem in Callidromum mittit. ipse, priusquam ad hostem copias admoueret, uocatos in contionem milites paucis est adlocutus. ‘plerosque omnium ordinum, milites, inter uos esse uideo, qui in hac eadem prouincia T. Quincti ductu auspicioque militaueritis. Macedonico bello inxsuperabilior saltus

ad amnem Aoum fuit quam hic; quippe portae sunt hae, et unus inter duo maria clausis omnibus uelut naturalis transitus est; munitiones et locis opportunioribus tunc fuerunt et ualidiores impositae; exercitus hostium ille et numero maior et militum genere aliquanto melior; quippe illic Macedones Thracesque et Illyrii erant, ferocissimae omnes gentes, hic Syri et Asiatici Graeci sunt, uilissima genera hominum et seruituti nata; rex ille bellicosissimus et exercitatus iam inde ab iuuenta finitimis Thracum atque Illyriorum et circa omnium accolarum bellis, hic, ut aliam omnem uitam sileam, is est, qui cum ad inferendum populo Romano bellum ex Asia in Europam transisset, nihil memorabilius toto tempore hibernorum gesserit, quam quod amoris causa ex domo priuata et obscuri etiam inter popularis generis uxorem duxit, et nouus maritus, uelut saginatus nuptialibus cenis, ad pugnam processit. summa uirium speique eius in Aetolis fuit, gente uanissima et ingratiissima, ut uos prius experti estis, nunc Antiochus experitur. nam nec uenerunt frequentes, nec contineri in castris potuerunt, et in seditione ipsi inter sese sunt, et, cum Hypatam tuendam Heracleamque depoposcissent, neutram tutati refugerunt in iuga montium, pars Heracleae incluserunt sese. rex ipse confessus nusquam aequo campo non modo congredi se ad pugnam audere, sed ne castra quidem in aperto ponere, relictis omni ante se regione ea, quam se nobis ac Philippo ademisse gloriabatur, condidit se intra rupes, ne ante fauces quidem saltus, ut quondam Lacedaemonios fama est, sed intra penitus retractis castris; quod quantum interest ad timorem ostendendum, an muris urbis alicuius obsidendum sese incluserit? sed neque Antiochum tuebuntur angustiae, nec Aetolos uertices illi, quos ceperunt. satis undique prouisum atque praecautum est, ne quid aduersus uos in pugna praeter hostis esset. illud proponere animo uestro debetis, non uos pro Graeciae libertate tantum dimicare, quamquam is quoque egregius titulus esset, liberatam a Philippo ante nunc ab Aetolis et ab Antiocho liberare, neque ea tantum in praemium uestrum cessura, quae nunc in regiis castris sunt, sed illum quoque omnem apparatus, qui in dies ab Epheso expectatur, praedae futurum, Asiam deinde Syriamque et omnia usque ad ortum solis ditissima regna Romano imperio aperturos. quid deinde aberit, quin ab Gadibus ad mare rubrum Oceano finis terminemus, qui orbem terrarum amplexu finit, et omne humanum genus secundum deos nomen Romanum ueneretur? in haec tanta praemia dignos parate animos, ut crastino die bene iuuantibus diis acie decernamus.’

[18] Ab hac contione dimissi milites, priusquam corpora curarent, arma telaque parant. luce prima signo pugnae proposito instruit aciem consul, arta fronte, ad naturam et angustias loci. rex, postquam signa hostium conspexit, et ipse copias educit. leuis armaturae partem ante uallum in primo locauit, tum Macedonum robur, quos sarisophorus appellabant, uelut firmamentum circa ipsas munitiones constituit. his ab sinistro cornu iaculatorum sagittariorumque et funditorum manum sub ipsis radicibus montis posuit, ut ex altiore loco nuda latera hostium incesserent. ab dextro Macedonibus ad ipsum munimentorum finem, qua loca usque ad mare inuia palustri limo et uoraginibus claudunt, elephantos cum adsueto praesidio posuit, post eos equites, tum modico interuallo relicto ceteras copias in secunda acie. Macedones pro uallo locati primo facile sustinebant Romanos, temptantis ab omni parte aditus, multum adiuuantibus, qui ex loco superiore fundis uelut nimbum glandis et sagittas simul ac iacula ingerebant; deinde, ut maior nec iam toleranda uis hostium inferebat se, pulsus loco intra munimenta subductis ordinibus concesserunt; inde ex uallo prope alterum uallum hastis prae se obiectis fecerunt. et ita modica altitudo ualli erat, ut et locum superiorem suis ad pugnandum praeberet, et propter longitudinem hastarum subiectum haberet hostem. multi temere subeuntes uallum transfixi sunt; et aut incepto irrito recessissent aut plures cecidissent, ni M. Porcius ab iugo Callidromi deiectis inde Aetolis et magna ex parte caesis — incautos enim et plerosque sopitos oppresserat — super imminentem castris collem apparuisset.

[19] Flacco non eadem fortuna ad Tichiunta et Rhoduntiam, nequiquam subire ad ea castella conato, fuerat. Macedones quique alii in castris regiis erant primo, dum procul nihil aliud quam turba et agmen apparebat, Aetolos credere uisa procul pugna subsidio uenire; ceterum, ut primum signaque et arma ex propinquo cognita errorem aperuerunt, tantus repente pavor omnis cepit, ut abiectis armis fugerent. et munimenta sequentis impediunt, et angustiae uallis, per quam sequendi erant, et maxime omnium quod elephanti nouissimi agminis erant, quos pedes aegre praeterire, eques nullo poterat modo timentibus equis tumultumque inter se maiorem quam in proelio edentibus; aliquantum temporis et direptio castrorum tenuit; Scarpheam tamen eo die consecuti sunt hostem. multis in ipso itinere caesis captisque, non equis uirisque tantum, sed etiam elephantis, quos capere non potuerant, interfectis, in castra reuerterunt; quae temptata eo die inter ipsum pugnae tempus ab Aetolis, Heracleam obtinentibus praesidio, sine ullo haud parum audacis incepti effectum fuerant. consul noctis insequentis tertia uigilia praemisso equitatu ad persequendum hostem, signa legionum luce prima mouit. aliquantum uiae praeceperat rex, ut qui non ante quam Elatiae ab effuso constiterit cursu; ubi primum reliquiis pugnaeque et fugae collectis, cum perexigua manu semiermum militum Chalcidem se recepit. Romanus equitatus ipsum quidem regem Elatiae adsecutus non est; magnam partem agminis aut lassitudine subsistentes aut errore, ut qui sine ducibus per ignota itinera fugerent, dissipatos oppresserunt; nec praeter quingentos, qui circa regem fuerunt, ex toto exercitu quisquam effugit, etiam ex decem milibus militum, quos Polybio auctore traiecissemus secum regem in Graeciam scripsimus, exiguus numerus; quid, si Antiati Ualerio credamus sexaginta milia militum fuisse in regio exercitu scribenti, quadraginta inde milia cecidisse, supra quinque milia capta cum signis militaribus ducentis triginta? Romanorum centum quinquaginta in ipso certamine pugnae, ab incursu Aetolorum se tuentes non plus quinquaginta interfecti sunt.

[20] Consule per Phocidem et Boeotiam exercitum ducente consciae defectionis ciuitates cum uelamentis ante portas stabant metu, ne hostiliter diriperentur. ceterum per omnes dies haud secus quam <in> pacato agro sine uexatione ullius rei agmen processit, donec in agrum Coroneum uentum est. ibi statua regis Antiochi posita in templo Mineruae Itoniae iram accendit, permissumque militi est, ut circumiectum templo agrum popularetur; dein cogitatio animum subit, cum communi decreto Boeotorum posita esset statua, indignum esse in unum Coronensem agrum saeuire. reuocato extemplo milite finis populandi factus; castigati tantum uerbis Boeoti ob ingratum in tantis tamque recentibus beneficiis animum erga Romanos. inter ipsum pugnae tempus decem naues regiae cum praefecto Isidoro ad Thronium in sinu Maliaco stabant. eo grauis uulneribus Alexander Acarnan, nuntius aduersae pugnae, cum perfugisset, trepidae inde recenti terrore naues Cenaeum Euboeae petierunt. ibi mortuus sepultusque Alexander. tres, quae ex Asia profectae eundem portum tenuerant, naues audita exercitus clade Ephesum redierunt. Isidorus ab Cenaeo Demetriadem, si forte eo deferret fuga regem, traiecit. — per eosdem dies A. Atilius praefectus Romanae classis magnos regios commeatus iam fretum, quod ad Andrum insulam est, praeteruectos excepit; alias mersit, alias cepit naues; quae nouissimi agminis erant cursum in Asiam uerterunt. Atilius Piraeum, unde profectus erat, cum agmine captiuarum nauium reuectus magnam uim frumenti et Atheniensibus et aliis eiusdem regionis sociis diuisit.

[21] Antiochus sub aduentum consulis a Chalcide profectus Tenum primo tenuit, inde Ephesum transmisit. consuli Chalcidem uenienti portae patuerunt, cum appropinquante eo Aristoteles praefectus regis urbe excessisset. et ceterae urbes in Euboea sine certamine traditae; post paucosque dies omnibus perpacatis sine ullius noxa urbis exercitus Thermopylas reductus, multo modestia post uictoriam quam ipsa uictoria laudabilior. inde consul M. Catonem, per quem quae gesta essent senatus populusque Romanus haud dubio auctore sciret, Romam misit. is a Creusa — Thespiensium emporium est, in intimo sinu Corinthiaco retractum — Patras Achaiae petit; a Patris Corcyram usque Aetoliae atque Acarnaniae littora legit, atque ita ad Hydruntum Italiae traicit. quinto die inde pedestri itinere Romam ingenti cursu peruenit. ante lucem ingressus urbem a porta ad praetorem M. Iunium iter intendit. is prima luce in senatum uocauit; quo L. Cornelius Scipio, aliquot diebus ante a consule dimissus, cum adueniens audisset praegressum Catonem in senatu esse, superuenit exponenti, quae gesta essent. duo inde legati iussu senatus in contionem sunt producti, atque ibi eadem, quae in senatu, de rebus in Aetolia gestis exposuerunt. supplicatio in triduum decreta est et ut quadraginta hostiis maioribus praetor, quibus diis ei uideretur, sacrificaret. — per eosdem dies et M. Fuluius Nobilior, qui biennio ante praetor in Hispaniam erat profectus, ouans urbem est ingressus; argenti bigati prae se tulit centum triginta milia et extra numeratum duodecim milia pondo argenti, auri pondo centum uiginti septem.

[22] Acilius consul ab Thermopylis Heracleam ad Aetolos praemisit, ut tunc saltem, experti regiam uanitatem, resipiscerent

traditaque Heraclea cogitarent de petenda ab senatu seu furoris sui seu erroris uenia. et ceteras Graeciae ciuitates defecisse eo bello ab optime meritis Romanis; sed quia post fugam regis, cuius fiducia officio decessissent, non addidissent pertinaciam culpae, in fidem receptas esse; Aetolos quoque, quamquam non secuti sint regem, sed accersierint, et duces belli, non socii fuerint, si paenitere possint, posse et incolumis esse. ad ea cum pacati nihil responderetur, appareretque armis rem gerendam et rege superato bellum Aetolicum integrum restare, castra ab Thermopylis ad Heracleam mouit, eoque ipso die, ut situm nosceret urbis, ab omni parte equo moenia est circumuectus. sita est Heraclea in radicibus Oetae montis, ipsa in campo, arcem imminentem loco alto et undique praecipiti habet. contemplatus omnia, quae noscenda erant, quattuor simul locis aggredi urbem constituit. a flumine Asopo, qua et gymnasium est, L. Ualerium operibus atque oppugnationi praeposuit; partem extra muros, qua frequentius prope quam in urbe habitabatur, Ti. Sempronio Longo oppugnandam dedit; e regione sinus Maliaci, quae aditum haud facilem pars habebat, M. Baebium, ab altero amniculo, quem Melana uocant, aduersus Dianae templum Ap. Claudium opposuit. horum magno certamine intra paucos dies tures arietesque et alius omnis apparatus oppugnandarum urbium perficitur. et cum ager Heracleensis paluster omnis frequensque proceris arboribus benigne ad omne genus operum materiam suppeditabat, tum, quia refugerant intra moenia Aetoli, deserta, quae in uestibulo urbis erant, tecta in uarios usus non tigna modo et tabulas sed laterem quoque et caementa et saxa uariae magnitudinis praebebant.

[23] Et Romani quidem operibus magis quam armis urbem oppugnabant, Aetoli contra armis se tuebantur. nam cum ariete quaterentur muri, non laqueis, ut solet, exceptos declinabant ictus, sed armati frequentes <erumpebant>, quidam ignes etiam, quos aggeribus inicerent, ferebant. fornices quoque in muro erant apti ad excurrendum, et ipsi, cum pro dirutis reficerent muros, crebriores eos, ut pluribus erumperetur in hostem locis, faciebant. hoc primis diebus, dum integrae uires erant, et frequentes et inipgre fecerunt; in dies deinde pauciores et segnius. etenim cum multis urgerentur rebus, nulla eos res aeque ac uigiliae conficiebant, Romanis in magna copia militum succedentibus aliis in stationem aliorum, Aetolos propter paucitatem eosdem dies noctesque adsiduo labore urente. per quattuor et uiginti dies, ita ut nullum tempus uacuum dimicatione esset, aduersus quattuor e partibus simul oppugnantem hostem nocturnus diurno continuatus labor est. cum fatigatos iam Aetolos sciret consul et ex spatio temporis et quod ita transfugae adfirmabant, tale consilium init. media nocte receptui signum dedit et ab oppugnatione simul milites omnes deductos usque ad tertiam diei horam quietos in castris tenuit; inde coepta oppugnatio ad mediam rursus noctem perducta est, intermissa deinde usque ad tertiam diei horam. fatigationem rati esse causam Aetoli non continuandae oppugnationis, quae et ipsos adfecerat, ubi Romanis datum receptui signum esset, uelut ipsi quoque reuocati pro se quisque ex stationibus decedebant, nec ante tertiam diei horam armati in muris apparebant.

[24] Consul cum nocte media intermisisset oppugnationem, quarta uigilia rursus ab tribus partibus summa ui adgressus, ab una Ti. Sempronium tenere intentos milites signumque expectare iussit, ad ea in nocturno tumultu, unde clamor exaudiretur, haud dubie ratus hostis concursuros. Aetoli pars sopiti adfecta labore ac uigiliis corpora ex somno moliebantur, pars uigilantes adhuc ad strepitum pugnantium in tenebris currunt. hostes partim per ruinas iacentis muri transcendere conantur, partim scalis ascensus temptant, aduersus quos undique ad opem ferendam concurrunt Aetoli. pars una, in qua aedificia extra urbem erant, neque defenditur neque oppugnatur; sed qui oppugnarent, intenti signum expectabant; defensor nemo aderat. iam dilucescebat, cum signum consul dedit; et sine ullo certamine partim per semirutos, partim scalis integros muros transcendere. simul clamor, index capti oppidi, est exauditus; undique Aetoli desertis stationibus in arcem fugiunt. oppidum uictores permissu consulis diripiunt, non tam ab ira nec ab odio, quam ut miles, coercitus in tot receptis ex potestate hostium urbibus, aliquo tandem loco fructum uictoriae sentiret. reuocatos inde a medio ferme die milites cum in duas diuisisset partes, unam radicibus montium circumduci ad rupem iussit, quae, fastigio altitudinis par, media ualle uelut abrupta ab arce erat; sed adeo prope geminata cacumina eorum montium sunt, ut ex uertice altero conici tela in arcem possint; cum dimidia parte militum consul ab urbe escensurus in arcem signum ab iis, qui ab tergo in rupem euasuri erant, expectabat. non tulere qui in arce erant Aetoli primum eorum, qui rupem ceperant, clamorem, deinde impetum ab urbe Romanorum et fractis iam animis et nulla ibi praeparata re ad obsidionem diutius tolerandam, utpote congregatis feminis puerisque et imbelli alia turba in arcem, quae uix capere, nedum tueri multitudinem tantam posset. itaque ad primum impetum abiectis armis dederunt sese. traditus inter ceteros princeps Aetolorum Damocritus est, qui principio belli decretum Aetolorum, quo accersendum Antiochum censuerant, T. Quinctio poscenti responderat, in Italia daturum, cum castra ibi Aetoli posuissent. ob eam ferociam maius uictoribus gaudium traditus fuit.

[25] Eodem tempore, quo Romani Heracleam, Philippus Lamiam ex composito oppugnabat, circa Thermopylas cum consule redeunte ex Boeotia, ut uictoriam ipsi populoque Romano gratularetur excusaretque, quod morbo impeditus bello non interfuisset, congressus. inde diuersi ad duas simul oppugnandas urbes profecti. intersunt septem ferme milia passuum; et quia Lamia cum posita est in tumulo, tum regionem maxime Oetae spectat, oppido quam breue interuallum uidetur, et omnia in conspectu sunt. cum enixe, uelut proposito certamine, Romani Macedonesque diem ac noctem aut in operibus aut in proeliis essent, hoc maior difficultas Macedonibus erat, quod Romani aggere et uineis et omnibus supra terram operibus, subter Macedones cuniculis oppugnabant, et in asperis locis silex paene inpenetrabilis ferro occurrebat. et cum parum procederet inceptum, per colloquia principum oppidanos temptabat rex, ut urbem dederent, haud dubius, quin, si prius Heraclea capta foret, Romanis se potius quam sibi dedituri essent, suamque gratiam consul in obsidione liberanda facturum esset. nec eum opinio est frustrata; confestim enim ab Heraclea capta nuntius uenit, ut oppugnatione absisteret: aequius esse Romanos milites, qui acie dimicassent cum Aetolis, praemia uictoriae habere. ita recessum ab Lamia est, et propinquae clade urbis ipsi, ne quid simile paterentur, effugerunt.

[26] Paucis priusquam Heraclea caperetur diebus Aetoli concilio Hypatam coacto legatos ad Antiochum miserunt, inter quos et Thoas idem, qui et antea, missus est. mandata erant, ut ab rege peterent, primum ut ipse coactis rursus terrestribus naualibusque copiis in Graeciam traiceret, deinde, si qua ipsum teneret res, ut pecuniam et auxilia mitteret; id cum ad dignitatem eius fidemque pertinere, non prodi socios, tum etiam ad incolumitatem regni, ne sineret Romanos uacuos omni cura, cum Aetolorum gentem sustulissent, omnibus copiis in Asiam traicere. uera erant, quae dicebantur; eo magis regem mouerunt. itaque in praesentia pecuniam, quae ad usus belli necessaria erat, legatis dedit; auxilia terrestria naualiaque adfirmavit missurum. Thoantem unum ex legatis retinuit, et ipsum haud inuitum morantem, ut exactor praesens promissorum adesset.

[27] Ceterum Heraclea capta fregit tandem animos Aetolorum, et paucos post dies, quam ad bellum renouandum acciendumque regem in Asiam miserant legatos, abiectis belli consiliis pacis petendae oratores ad consulem miserunt. quos dicere exorsos consul interfatus, cum alia sibi praeuertenda esse dixisset, redire Hypatam eos datis dierum decem indutiis et L. Ualerio Flacco cum iis misso iussit eique, quae secum acturi fuissent, exponere, et si qua uellent alia. Hypatam ut est uentum, principes Aetolorum apud Flaccum concilium habuerunt consultantes, quonam agendum modo apud consulem foret. parantibus iis antiqua iura foederum ordiri meritaque in populum Romanum absistere iis Flaccus iussit, quae ipsi uiolassent ac rupissent; confessionem iis culpae magis profuturam et totam in preces orationem uersam; nec enim in causa ipsorum, sed in populi Romani clementia spem salutis positam esse; et se suppliciter agentibus iis adfuturum et apud consulem et Romae in senatu; eo quoque enim mittendos fore legatos. haec una uia omnibus ad salutem uisa est, ut in fidem se permitterent Romanorum; ita enim et illis uiolandi supplices uerecundiam se imposituros, et ipsos nihilo minus suae potestatis fore, si quid melius fortuna ostendisset.

[28] Postquam ad consulem uentum est, Phaeneas legationis princeps longam orationem et uarie ad mitigandam iram uictoris compositam ita ad extremum finiuit, ut diceret Aetolos se suaque omnia fidei populi Romani permittere. id consul ubi audiuit, ‘etiam atque etiam uidete’ inquit, ‘Aetoli, ut ita permittatis.’ tum decretum Phaeneas, in quo id diserte scriptum erat, ostendit. ‘quando ergo’ inquit ‘ita permittitis, postulo, ut mihi Dicaearchum ciuem uestrum et Menestam Epirotam’ — Naupactum is cum praesidio ingressus ad defectionem compulerat— ‘et Amyndrum cum principibus Athamanum, quorum consilio ab nobis defecistis, sine mora dedatis.’

prope dicentem interfatus Romanum ‘non in seruitutem’ inquit, ‘sed in fidem tuam nos tradidimus, et certum habeo te imprudentia labi, qui nobis imperes, quae moris Graecorum non sint.’ ad ea consul ‘nec hercule’ inquit ‘magnopere nunc curo, quid Aetoli satis ex more Graecorum factum esse censeant, dum ego more Romano imperium inhibeam in deditos modo decreto suo, ante armis uictos; itaque, ni propere fit, quod impero, uinciri uos iam iubebo.’ adferri catenas et circumstingere lictores iussit. tum fracta Phaeneae ferocia Aetolisque aliis est, et tandem cuius condicionis essent senserunt, et Phaeneas se quidem et qui adsint Aetolorum scire facienda esse, quae imperentur, dixit, sed ad decernenda ea concilio Aetolorum opus esse; ad id petere ut decem dierum indutias daret. petente Flacco pro Aetolis indutiae datae, et Hypatam reditum est. ubi cum in consilio delectorum, quos apocletos uocant, Phaeneas, et quae imperarentur et quae ipsis prope accidissent, exposuisset, ingemuerunt quidem principes condicioni suae, parendum tamen uictori censebant et ex omnibus oppidis conuocandos Aetolos ad concilium.

[29] Postquam uero coacta omnis multitudo eadem illa audiuit, adeo saeuitia imperii atque indignitate animi exasperati sunt, ut, si in pace fuissent, illo impetu irae concitari potuerint ad bellum. ad iram accedebat et difficultas eorum, quae imperarentur — quonam modo enim utique regem Amyndrum se tradere posse? — et spes forte oblata, quod Nicander eo ipso tempore ab rege Antiocho ueniens impleuit expectatione uana multitudinem, terra marique ingens parari bellum. duodecimo is die, quam conscenderat nauem, in Aetoliam perfecta legatione rediens Phalara in sinu Maliaco tenuit. inde Lamiam pecuniam cum deuexisset, ipse cum expeditis prima uespera inter Macedonum Romanaque castra medio agro, dum Hypatam notis callibus petit, in stationem incidit Macedonum deductusque ad regem est nondum conuiuio dimisso. quod ubi nuntiatum est, uelut hospitis, non hostis aduentu motus Philippus accumbere eum epularique iussit, atque inde dimissis aliis, solum retentum, ipsum quidem de se timere quicquam uetuit, Aetolorum praua consilia atque in ipsorum caput semper recidentia accusauit, qui primum Romanos, deinde Antiochum in Graeciam adduxissent. sed praeteritorum, quae magis reprehendi quam corrigi possint, oblitum se non facturum, ut insultet aduersis rebus eorum; Aetolos quoque

finire tandem aduersus se odia debere, et Nicandrum priuatim eius diei, quo seruatus a se foret, meminisse. ita datis, qui in tutum eum prosequerentur, Hypatam Nicander consultantibus de pace Romana superuenit.

[30] M'. Acilius uendita aut concessa militi circa Heracleam praeda, postquam nec Hypatae pacata consilia esse, et Naupactum concurrisse Aetolos, ut inde totum impetum belli sustinerent, audiuit, praemisso Ap. Claudio cum quattuor milibus militum ad occupanda iuga, qua difficiles transitus montium erant, ipse Oetam escendit Herculi que sacrificium fecit in eo loco, quem Pyram, quod ibi mortale corpus eius dei sit crematum, appellant. inde toto exercitu profectus reliquum iter satis expedito agmine fecit; ut ad Coracem uentum est — mons est altissimus inter Callipolim et Naupactum —, ibi et iumenta multa ex agmine praecipitata cum ipsis oneribus sunt et homines uexati; et facile apparebat, quam cum inerti hoste res esset, qui tam impeditum saltum nullo praesidio, ut clauderet transitum, insedisset. tum quoque uexato exercitu ad Naupactum descendit, et uno castello aduersus arcem posito ceteras partes urbis diuisis copiis pro situ moenium circumscivit. nec minus operis laborisque ea oppugnatio quam Heracleae habuit.

[31] Eodem tempore et Messene in Peloponneso ab Achaeis, quod concilii eorum recusaret esse, oppugnari coepta est. duae ciuitates, Messene et Elis, extra concilium Achaicum erant; cum Aetolis sentiebant. Elei tamen post fugatum ex Graecia Antiochum legatis Achaeorum lenius responderant: dimisso praesidio regio cogituros se, quid sibi faciendum esset: Messenii sine responso dimissis legatis mouerant bellum, trepidique rerum suarum, cum iam ager effuso exercitu passim ureretur castraque prope urbem poni uiderent, legatos Chalcidem ad T. Quinctium, auctorem libertatis, miserunt, qui nuntiarent Messenios Romanis, non Achaeis et aperire portas et dedere urbem paratos esse. auditis legatis extemplo profectus Quinctius a Megalopoli ad Diophanen praetorem Achaeorum misit, qui extemplo reducere eum a Messene exercitum et uenire ad se iuberet. dicto paruit Diophanes et soluta obsidione expeditus ipse praegressus agmen circa Andaniam, paruum oppidum inter Megalopolim Messenenque positum, Quinctio occurrit; et cum causas oppugnationis exponeret, castigatum leniter, quod tantam rem sine auctoritate sua conatus esset, dimittere exercitum iussit nec pacem omnium bono partem turbare. Messeniis imperauit, ut exules reducerent et Achaeorum concilii essent; si qua haberent, de quibus aut recusare aut in posterum cauere sibi uellent, Corinthum ad se uenirent; Diophanen concilium Achaeorum extemplo sibi praebere iussit. ibi de Zacyntho intercepta per fraudem insula questus postulauit, ut restitueretur Romanis. Philippi Macedonum regis Zacynthus fuerat; eam mercedem Amyndro dederat, ut per Athamaniam ducere exercitum in superiorem partem Aetoliae liceret, qua expeditione fractis animis Aetolos compulit ad petendam pacem. Amynder Philippum Megalopolitanum insulae praefecit; postea per bellum, quo se Antiocho aduersus Romanos coniunxit, Philippo ad munera belli reuocato Hieroclen Agrigentinum successorem misit.

[32] Is post fugam ab Thermopylis Antiochi Amyndrumque a Philippo Athamania pulsum missis ultro ad Diophanen praetorem Achaeorum nuntiis pecunia pactus insulam Achaeis tradidit. id praemium belli suum esse aequum censebant Romani: non enim M'. Acilium consulem legionesque Romanas Diophani et Achaeis ad Thermopylas pugnasse. Diophanes aduersus haec purgare interdum sese gentemque, interdum de iure facti disserere. quidam Achaeorum et initio eam se rem aspernatos testabantur et tunc pertinaciam increpitabant praetoris; auctoribusque iis decretum est, ut T. Quinctio ea res permitteretur. erat Quinctius sicut aduersantibus asper, ita, si cederes, idem placabilis. omissa contentione uocis uultusque 'si utilem' inquit, 'possessionem eius insulae censerem Achaeis esse, auctor essem senatui populoque Romano, ut eam uos habere sinerent; ceterum sicut testudinem, ubi collecta in suum tegumen est, tutam ad omnis ictus uideo esse, ubi exserit partis aliquas, quodcumque nudauit, obnoxium atque infirmum habere, haud dissimiliter uos, Achaei, clausos undique mari, quae intra Peloponnesi sunt terminos, ea et iungere uobis et iuncta tueri facile, simul auditate plura amplectendi hinc excedatis, nuda uobis omnia, quae extra sint, et exposita ad omnes ictus esse.' adsentienti omni concilio nec Diophane ultra tendere auso Zacynthus Romanis traditur.

[33] Per idem tempus Philippus rex proficiscentem consulem ad Naupactum percunctatus, si se interim, quae defecissent ab societate Romana, urbes recipere uellet, permittente eo ad Demetriadem copias admouit haud ignarus, quanta ibi tum turbatio esset. destituti enim ab omni spe, cum desertos se ab Antiocho, spem nullam in Aetolis esse cernerent, dies noctesque aut Philippi hostis aduentum aut infestiores etiam, quo iustius irati erant, Romanorum expectabant. turba erat ibi incondita regionum, qui primo pauci in praesidio relict, postea plures, plerique inermes, ex proelio aduerso fuga delati, nec uirum nec animi satis ad obsidionem tolerandam habebant; itaque praemissis a Philippo, qui spem impetrabilis ueniae ostendebant, responderunt patere portas regi. ad primum eius ingressum principum quidam urbe excesserunt, Eurylochus mortem sibi consciuit. Antiochi milites — sic enim pacti erant — per Macedoniam Thraeciamque prosequentibus Macedonibus, ne quis eos uiolaret, Lysimachiam deducti sunt. erant et paucae naues Demetriade, quibus praeerat Isidorus; eae quoque cum praefecto suo dimissae sunt. inde Dolopiam et Aperantiam et Perrhaebiae quasdam ciuitates recipit.

[34] Dum haec a Philippo geruntur, T. Quinctius recepta Zacyntho ab Achaico concilio Naupactum traiecit, quae iam per duos menses — et iam prope excidium erat — oppugnabatur, et si capta ui foret, omne nomen ibi Aetolorum ad internecionem uidebatur uenturum. ceterum quamquam merito iratus erat Aetolis, quod solos obtrectasse gloriae suae, cum liberaret Graeciam, meminerat, et nihil auctoritate sua motos esse, cum, quae tum maxime accidebant, casura praemonens a furioso incepto eos deterreret, tamen sui maxime operis esse credens nullam gentem liberatae ab se Graeciae funditus euertere, obambulare muris, ut facile nosceretur ab Aetolis, coepit. confestim a primis stationibus cognitus est, uulgatumque per omnes ordines, Quinctium esse. itaque concursu facto undique in muros manus pro se quisque tendentes consonante clamore nominatim Quinctium orare, ut opem ferret ac seruaret. et tum quidem, quamquam moueretur his uocibus, manu tamen abnuat quicquam opis in se esse; ceterum postquam ad consulem uenit, ‘utrum fefellit’ inquit ‘te, M’. Acili, quid agatur, an, cum satis peruideas, nihil id magnopere ad summam rem pertinere censes?’ erexerat expectatione consulem; et ‘quin expromis’ inquit, ‘quid rei sit?’ tum Quinctius ‘ecquid uides te deuicto Antiocho in duabus urbibus oppugnandis tempus terere, cum iam prope annus circumactus sit imperii tui, Philippum autem, qui non aciem, non signa hostium uidit, non solum urbes sed tot iam gentes, Athamaniam Perrhaebiam Aperantiam Dolopiam, sibi adiunxisse, et uictoriae tuae praemium te militesque tuos nondum duas urbes, Philippum tot gentes Graeciae habere? atqui non tantum interest nostra Aetolorum opes ac uires minui, quantum non supra modum Philippum crescere.’

[35] Adsentiebatur his consul; sed pudor, si irritio incepto abscederet obsidione, occurrebat. tota inde Quinctio res permissa est. is rursus ad eam partem muri, qua paulo ante uociferati Aetoli fuerant, rediit. ibi cum impensius orarent, ut miseretur gentis Aetolorum, exire aliquos ad se iussit. Phaeneas ipse principesque alii extemplo egressi sunt. quibus prouolutis ad pedes ‘fortuna’ inquit ‘uestra facit, ut et irae meae et orationi temperem. euenerunt quae praedixi euentura, et ne hoc quidem reliqui uobis est, ut indignis accidisse ea uideantur; ego tamen sorte quadam nutriendae Graeciae datus ne ingratis quidem benefacere abstineam. mittite oratores ad consulem, qui indutias tanti temporis petant, ut mittere legatos Romam possitis, per quos senatui de uobis permittatis; ego apud consulem deprecator defensorque uobis adero.’ ita, ut censuerat Quinctius, fecerunt, nec aspernatus est consul legationem; indutiisque in diem certam datis, qua legatio renuntiari ab Roma posset, soluta obsidio est et exercitus in Phocidem missus.

Consul cum T. Quinctio ad Achaicum concilium Aegium traiecit. ibi de Eleis et de exulibus Lacedaemoniorum restituendis actum est; neutra perfecta res, quia suae gratiae reseruari <exulum causam> Achaei, Elei per se ipsi quam per Romanos maluerunt Achaico contribui concilio. Epirotarum legati ad consulem uenerunt, quos non sincera fide in amicitia fuisse satis constabat; militem tamen nullum Antiocho dederant; pecunia iuuisse eum insimulabantur; legatos ad regem ne ipsi quidem misisse infitabantur. iis petentibus, ut in amicitia pristina esse liceret, respondit consul se, utrum hostium an pacatorum eos numero haberet, nondum scire; senatum eius rei iudicem fore; integram se causam eorum Romam reicere; indutias ad id dierum nonaginta dare. Epirotae Romam missi senatum adierunt. iis magis, quae non fecissent hostilia, referentibus quam purgantibus ea, de quibus arguebantur, responsum datum est, quo ueniam impetrasse, non causam probasse uideri possent. et Philippi regis legati sub idem tempus in senatum introducti, gratulantes de uictoria. iis petentibus, ut sibi sacrificare in Capitolio donumque ex auro liceret ponere in aede Iouis optimi maximi, permissum ab senatu. centum pondo coronam auream posuerunt. non responsum solum benigne regis legatis est, sed filius quoque Philippi Demetrius, qui obses Romae erat, ad patrem reducendus legatis datus est. bellum, quod cum Antiocho rege in Graecia gestum est a M'. Acilio consule, hunc finem habuit.

[36] Alter consul P. Cornelius Scipio, Galliam prouinciam sortitus, priusquam ad bellum, quod cum Bois gerendum erat, proficisceretur, postulauit ab senatu, ut pecunia sibi decerneretur ad ludos, quos praetor in Hispania inter ipsum discrimen pugnae uouisset. nouum atque iniquum postulare est uisus; censuerunt ergo, quos ludos inconsulto senatu ex sua unius sententia uouisset, eos uel de manubiis, si quam pecuniam ad id reseruasset, uel sua ipse impensa faceret. eos ludos per dies decem P. Cornelius fecit. per idem fere tempus aedes Matris Magnae [Idaeae] dedicata est, quam deam is P. Cornelius aduectam ex Asia P. Cornelio Scipione, cui postea Africano fuit cognomen, P. Licinio consulibus in Palatium a mari detulerat. locauerant aedem faciendam ex senatus consulto M. Liuius C. Claudius censores M. Cornelio P. Sempronio consulibus; tredecim annis postquam locata erat, dedicauit eam M. Iunius Brutus, ludique ob dedicationem eius facti, quos primos scenicos fuisse Antias Ualerius est auctor, Megalesia appellatos. item Iuuentatis aedem in circo maximo C. Licinius Lucullus duumuir dedicauit. uouerat eam sexdecim annis ante M. Liuius consul, quo die Hasdrubalem exercitumque eius cecidit; idem censor eam faciendam locauit M. Cornelio P. Sempronio consulibus. huius quoque dedicandae causa ludi facti, et eo omnia cum maiore religione facta, quod nouum cum Antiocho instabat bellum.

[37] Principio eius anni, quo haec iam profecto ad bellum M'. Acilio, manente adhuc Romae P. Cornelio consule agebantur, boues duos domitos in Carinis per scalas peruenisse in tegulas aedificii proditum memoriae est. eos uiuos comburi cineremque eorum deici in Tiberim haruspices iusserunt. Tarracinae et Amiterni nuntiatum est aliquotiens lapidibus pluuisse, Menturnis aedem Iouis et tabernas circa forum de caelo tactas esse, Uolturni in ostio fluminis duas naues fulmine ictas conflagrasse. eorum prodigiorum causa libros Sibyllinos ex senatus consulto decemuii cum adissent, renuntiauerunt, ieiunium instituendum Cereri esse, et id quinto quoque anno seruandum; et ut nouemdiale sacrum fieret et unum diem supplicatio esset; coronati supplicarent; et consul P. Cornelius, quibus diis quibusque hostiis edidissent decemuii, sacrificaret. placatis diis nunc uotis rite soluendis nunc prodigiis expiandis, in prouinciam proficiscitur consul, atque inde Cn. Domitium proconsulem dimisso exercitu Romam decedere iussit; ipse in agrum Boiorum legiones induxit.

[38] Sub idem fere tempus Ligures lege sacrata coacto exercitu nocte improviso castra Q. Minucii proconsulis adgressi sunt. Minucius usque ad lucem intra uallum militem instructum tenuit intentus, ne qua transcenderet hostis munimenta. prima luce duabus simul portis eruptionem fecit. nec primo impetu, quod sperauerat, Ligures pulsi sunt; duas amplius horas dubium certamen sustinuerunt; postremo, cum alia atque alia agmina erumperent, et integri fessis succederent ad pugnam, tandem Ligures, inter cetera etiam uigiliis confecti, terga dederunt. caesa supra quattuor milia hostium; ex Romanis sociisque minus trecenti perierunt. duobus fere post mensibus P. Cornelius consul cum Boiorum exercitu signis collatis egregie pugnavit. duodeciginta milia hostium occisa Antias Ualerius scribit, capta tria milia et quadringentos, signa militaria centum uiginti quattuor, equos mille ducentos triginta, carpenta ducenta quadraginta septem; ex uictoribus mille quadringentos octoginta quattuor cecidisse. ubi ut in numero scriptori parum fidei sit, quia in augendo eo non alius intemperantior est, magnam tamen uictoriam fuisse apparet, quod et castra capta sunt et Boi post eam pugnam extemplo dediderunt sese, et quod supplicatio eius uictoriae causa decreta ab senatu uictimaeque maiores caesae.

[39] Per eosdem dies M. Fuluius Nobilior ex ulteriore Hispania ouans urbem est ingressus. argenti transtulit duodecim milia pondo, bigati argenti centum triginta, auri centum uiginti septem pondo. P. Cornelius consul obsidibus a Boiorum gente acceptis agri parte fere dimidia eos multauit, quo, si uellet, populus Romanus colonias mittere posset. inde Romam ut ad triumphum haud dubium decedens exercitum dimisit, et adesse Romae ad diem triumphi iussit; ipse postero die, quam uenit, senatu in aedem Bellonae uocato cum de rebus ab se gestis disseruisset, postulauit, ut sibi triumphanti liceret urbem inuehi. P. Sempronius Blaesus tribunus plebis non negandum Scipioni, sed differendum honorem triumphi censebat: bella Ligurum Gallicis semper iuncta fuisse; eas inter se gentes mutua ex propinquo ferre auxilia. si P. Scipio deuictis acie Bois aut ipse cum uictore exercitu in agrum Ligurum transisset, aut partem copiarum Q. Minucio misisset, qui iam tertium ibi annum dubio detineretur bello, debellari cum Liguribus potuisse; nunc ad triumphum frequentandum deductos esse milites, qui egregiam nauare operam rei publicae potuissent, possent etiam, si senatus, quod festinatione triumphi praetermissum esset, id restituere differendo triumpho uellet. iuberent consulem cum legionibus redire in prouinciam, dare operam, ut Ligures subigantur. nisi illi cogantur in ius iudiciumque populi Romani, ne Boios quidem quieturos; aut pacem aut bellum utrobique habenda. deuictis Liguribus, paucos post menses proconsulem P. Cornelium multorum exemplo, qui in magistratu non triumphauerunt, triumphaturum esse.

[40] Ad ea consul neque se Ligures prouinciam sortitum esse ait, neque cum Liguribus bellum gessisse, neque triumphum de iis postulare; Q. Minucium confidere breui subactis iis meritum triumphum postulaturum atque impetraturum esse; se de Gallis Bois postulare triumphum, quos acie uicerit, castris exuerit, quorum gentem biduo post pugnam totam acceperit in deditionem, a quibus obsides abduxerit, pacis futurae pignus. uerum enimvero illud multo maius esse, quod tantum numerum Gallorum occiderit in acie, quot cum milibus certe Boiorum nemo ante se imperator pugnauerit. plus partem dimidiam ex quinquaginta milibus hominum caesam, multa milia capta; senes puerosque Bois superesse. itaque id quemquam mirari posse, cur uictor exercitus, cum hostem in prouincia neminem reliquisset, Romam uenerit ad celebrandum consulis triumphum? quorum militum si et in alia prouincia opera uti senatus uelit, utro tandem modo promptiores ad aliud periculum nouumque laborem ituros credat, si persoluta eis sine detractatione prioris periculi laborisque merces sit, an si spem pro re ferentis dimittant, iam semel in prima spe deceptos? nam quod ad se attineat, sibi gloriae in omnem uitam illo die satis quaesitum esse, quo se uirum optimum iudicatum ad accipiendam matrem Idaeam misisset senatus. hoc titulo, etsi nec consulatus nec triumphus addatur, satis honestam honoratamque P. Scipionis Nasicae imaginem fore. uniuersus senatus non ipse modo ad decernendum triumphum consensit, sed etiam tribunum plebis auctoritate sua compulit ad remittendam intercessionem. P. Cornelius consul triumphauit de Bois. in eo triumpho Gallicis carpentis arma signaque et spolia omnis generis traexit et uasa aenea Gallica et cum captiuis nobilibus equorum quoque captorum gregem traduxit. aureos torques transtulit mille quadringentos septuaginta unum, ad hoc auri pondo ducenta quadraginta septem, argenti infecti factique in Gallicis uasis, non infabre suo more factis, duo milia trecenta quadraginta pondo, bigatorum nummorum ducenta triginta quattuor. militibus, qui currum secuti sunt, centenos uicenos quinos asses diuisit, duplex centurioni, triplex equiti. postero die contione aduocata de rebus ab se gestis et de iniuria tribuni bello alieno se illigantis, ut suae uictoriae fructu se fraudaret, cum disseruisset, milites exauctoratos dimisit.

[41] Dum haec in Italia geruntur, Antiochus Ephesi securus admodum de bello Romano erat tamquam non transituris in Asiam Romanis; quam securitatem ei magna pars amicorum aut per errorem aut adsentando faciebat. Hannibal unus, cuius eo tempore uel maxima apud regem auctoritas erat, magis mirari se aiebat, quod non iam in Asia essent Romani, quam uenturos dubitare; propius esse ex Graecia in Asiam quam ex Italia in Graeciam traicere, et multo maiorem causam Antiochum quam Aetolos esse; neque [enim] mari minus quam terra pollere Romana arma. iam pridem classem circa Maleam esse; audire sese nuper nouas naues nouumque imperatorem rei gerendae causa ex Italia uenisse; itaque desineret Antiochus pacem sibi ipse spe uana facere. in Asia et de ipsa Asia breui terra marique dimicandum ei cum Romanis esse, et aut imperium adimendum orbem terrarum adfectantibus, aut ipsi regnum amittendum. unus uera et prouidere et fideliter praedicere uisus. itaque ipse rex nauibus, quae paratae instructaeque erant, Chersonesum petit, ut ea loca, si forte terra uenirent Romani, praesidiis firmaret; ceteram classem Polyxenidam parare et deducere iussit; speculatorias naues ad omnia exploranda circa insulas dimisit.

[42] C. Liuius praefectus Romanae classis, cum quinquaginta nauibus tectis profectus ab Roma Neapolim, quo ab sociis eius orae conuenire iusserat apertas naues, quae ex foedere debebantur, Siciliam inde petit fretoque Messanam praeteruectus, cum sex Punicas naues ad auxilium missas accepisset et ab Reginis Locrisque et eiusdem iuris sociis debitas exegisset naues, lustrata classe ad Lacinium, altum petit. Corcyram, quam primam Graeciae ciuitatum adiit, cum uenisset, percunctatus de statu belli — necdum enim omnia in Graecia perpacata erant — et ubi classis Romana esset, postquam audiuit circa Thermopylarum saltum in statione consulem ac regem esse, classem Piraei stare, maturandum ratus omnium rerum causa, pergit protinus nauigare Peloponnesum. Samen Zacynthumque, quia partis Aetolorum maluerant esse, protinus depopulatus Maleam petit, et prospera nauigatione usus paucis diebus Piraeum ad ueterem classem peruenit. ad Scyllaeum Eumenes rex cum tribus nauibus occurrit, cum Aeginae diu incertus consilii fuisset, utrum ad tuendum rediret regnum — audiebat enim Antiochum Ephesi nauales terrestresque parare copias — , an nusquam abscederet ab Romanis, ex quorum fortuna sua penderet. a Piraeo A. Atilius traditis successori quinque et uiginti nauibus tectis Romam est profectus. Liuius una et octoginta constratis nauibus, multis praeterea minoribus, quae aut apertae rostratae aut sine rostris speculatoriae erant, Delum traiecit.

[43] Eo fere tempore consul Acilius Naupactum oppugnabat. Liuium Deli per aliquot dies — et est uentosissima regio inter Cycladas fretis alias maioribus, alias minoribus diuisas — aduersi uenti tenuerunt. Polyxenidas certior per dispositas speculatorias naues factus Deli stare Romanam classem, nuntios ad regem misit. qui omissis, quae in Hellesponto agebat, cum rostratis nauibus, quantum accelerare poterat, Ephesum redit et consilium extemplo habuit, faciendumne periculum naualis certaminis foret. Polyxenidas negabat cessandum et utique prius confligendum quam classis Eumenes et Rhodiae naues coniungerentur Romanis; ita numero non ferme impares futuros se, ceteris omnibus superiores, et celeritate nauium et uarietate auxiliorum. nam Romanas naues cum ipsas inscite factas immobiles esse, tum etiam, ut quae in terram hostium ueniant, oneratas commeatu uenire; suas autem, ut pacata omnia circa se relinquentis, nihil praeter militem atque arma habituras. multum etiam adiuturam notitiam maris terrarumque et uentorum, quae omnia ignaros turbatura hostis essent. mouit omnis auctor consilii, qui et re consilium exsecuturus erat. biduum in apparatu morati tertio die centum nauibus, quarum septuaginta tectae, ceterae apertae, minoris omnes formae erant, profecti Phocaeam petierunt. inde, cum audisset appropinquare iam Romanam classem, rex, quia non interfuturus nauali certamini erat, Magnesiam, quae ad Sipylum est, concessit ad terrestres copias comparandas; classis ad Cissuntem portum Erythraeorum, tamquam ibi aptius expectatura hostem, contendit. Romani, ubi primum aquilones — ii namque per aliquot dies tenuerant — ceciderunt, ab Delo Phanas, portum Chiorum in Aegaeum mare uersum, petunt; inde ad urbem circumegere naues, commeatuque sumpto Phocaeam traiciunt. Eumenes Elaeam ad suam classem profectus, paucis post inde diebus cum quattuor et uiginti nauibus tectis, apertis pluribus paulo Phocaeam ad Romanos parantis instruensque se ad nauale certamen rediit. inde centum quinque tectis nauibus, apertis ferme quinquaginta profecti, primo aquilonibus transuersis cum urgerentur in terram, cogeabantur tenui agmine prope in ordinem singulae naues ire; deinde, ut lenita paulum uis uenti est, ad Corycum portum, qui super Cissuntem est, conati sunt traicere.

[44] Polyxenidas, ut appropinquare hostis adlatum est, occasione pugnandi laetus sinistrum ipse cornu in altum extendit, dextrum cornu praefectos nauium ad terram explicare iubet, et aequa fronte ad pugnam procedebat. quod ubi uidit Romanus, uela contrahit malosque inclinat et simul armamenta componens opperitur insequentis nauis. iam ferme triginta in fronte erant, quibus ut aequaret laeuum cornu, dolonibus erectis altum petere intendit, iussis qui sequebantur aduersus dextrum cornu prope terram proras derigere. Eumenes agmen cogeabat; ceterum, ut demendis armamentis tumultuari primum coeptum est, et ipse, quanta maxime celeritate potest, concitat naues. iam omnibus in conspectu erant. duae Punicae naues antecedeabant Romanam classem, quibus obuiae tres fuerunt regiae naues; et, ut in numero impari, duae regiae unam circumsistunt, et primum ab utroque latere remos detergunt, deinde transcendunt armati et deiectis caesisque propugnatoribus nauem

capiunt; una, quae pari Marte concurrerat, postquam captam alteram nauem uidit, priusquam ab tribus simul circumueniretur, retro ad classem refugit. Liuius indignatione accensus praetoria naue in hostes tendit. aduersus quam eadem spe duae, quae Punicam unam nauem circumuenerant, cum inferrentur, demittere remos in aquam ab utroque latere remiges stabiliendae nauis causa iussit, et in aduenientis hostium naues ferreas manus inicere et, ubi pugnam pedestri similem fecissent, meminisse Romanae uirtutis nec pro uiris ducere regia mancipia. haud paulo facilius quam ante duae unam, tunc una duas naues expugnauit cepitque. et iam classes quoque undique concurrerant, et passim permixtis nauibus pugnabatur. Eumenes, qui [extremus] commisso certamine aduenerat, ut animaduertit laeuum cornu hostium ab Liuio turbatum, dextrum ipse, ubi aequa pugna erat, inuadit.

[45] Neque ita multo post primum ab laeuo cornu fuga coepit. Polyxenidas enim ut uirtute militum haud dubie se superari uidit, sublatis dolonibus effuse fugere intendit; mox idem et qui prope terram cum Eumene contraxerant certamen fecerunt. Romani et Eumenes, quoad sufficere remiges potuerunt et in spe erant extremi agminis uexandi, satis pertinaciter secuti sunt. postquam celeritate nauium, utpote leuium, suas commeatu onustas eludi frustra tendentis uiderunt, tandem abstiterunt tredecim captis nauibus cum milite ac remige, decem demersis. Romanae classis una Punica nauis, in primo certamine ab duabus circumuenta, periit. Polyxenidas non prius quam in portu Ephesi fugae finem fecit. Romani eo die, unde egressa regia classis erat, manserunt; postero die hostem persequi intenderunt. medio fere in cursu obuiae fuere iis quinque et uiginti tectae Rhodiae naues cum Pausistrato praefecto classis. his adiunctis Ephesum hostem persecuti ante ostium portus acie instructa steterunt. postquam confessionem uictis satis expresserunt, Rhodii et Eumenes domos dimissi; Romani Chium petentes, Phoenicuntem primum portum Erythraeae terrae praeteruecti, nocte ancoris iactis, postero die in insulam ad ipsam urbem traiecerunt. ubi paucos dies remige maxime reficiendo morati Phocaeam tramittunt. ibi relictis ad praesidium urbis quattuor quinquereuib; ad Canas classis uenit; et, cum iam hiems appeteret, fossa ualloeque circumdatis naues subductae. exitu anni comitia Romae habita, quibus creati sunt

LIBER XXXVII

[1] L. Cornelio Scipione C. Laelio consulibus nulla prius secundum religiones acta in senatu res est quam de Aetolis. et legati eorum institerunt, quia breuem indutiarum diem habebant, et ab T. Quintio, qui tum Romam ex Graecia redierat, adiuti sunt. Aetoli, ut quibus plus in misericordia senatus quam in causa spei esset, suppliciter egerunt, ueteribus benefactis noua pensantes maleficia. ceterum et praesentes interrogationibus undique senatorum, confessionem magis noxae quam responsa exprimentium, fatigati sunt, et excedere curia iussi magnum certamen praebuerunt. plus ira quam misericordia in causa eorum ualebat, quia non ut hostibus modo, sed tamquam indomitae et insociabili genti suscensebant. per aliquot dies cum certatum esset, postremo neque dari neque negari pacem placuit; duae condiciones iis latae sunt: uel senatui liberum arbitrium de se permetterent, uel mille talentum darent eosdemque amicos atque inimicos haberent. exprimere cupientibus, quarum rerum in se arbitrium senatui permetterent, nihil certi responsum est. ita infecta pace dimissi urbe eodem die, Italia intra quindecim dies excedere iussi.

Tum de consulum prouinciis coeptum agi est. ambo Graeciam cupiebant. multum Laelius in senatu poterat. is, cum senatus aut sortiri aut comparare inter se prouincias consules iussisset, elegantius facturos dixit, si iudicio patrum quam si sorti eam rem permisissent. Scipio responso ad hoc dato cogitaturum, quid sibi faciendum esset, cum fratre uno locutus iussusque ab eo permittere audacter senatui, renuntiat collegae facturum se, quod is censeret. cum res aut noua aut uetustate exemplorum memoriae iam exoletae relata expectatione certaminis senatum erexisset, P. Scipio Africanus dixit, si L. Scipioni fratri suo prouinciam Graeciam decreuissent, se <ei> legatum iturum. haec uox magno adsensu audita sustulit certamen; experiri libebat, utrum plus regi Antiocho in Hannibale uicto an in uictore Africano consuli legionibusque Romanis auxilii foret; ac prope omnes Scipioni Graeciam, Laelio Italiam decreuerunt.

Brutus Tuscus, M. Tuccius Apuliam et Bruttios, C. Atinius Siciliam. consuli deinde, cui Graecia prouincia decreta erat, ad eum exercitum, quem a M'. Acilio — duae autem legiones erant — accepturus esset, in supplementum addita peditum ciuium Romanorum tria milia, equites centum, et socium Latini nominis quinque milia, equites ducenti; et adiectum, ut, cum in prouinciam uenisset, si e re publica uideretur esse, exercitum in Asiam traiceret. alteri consuli totus nouus exercitus decretus, duae legiones Romanae et socium Latini nominis quindecim milia peditum, equites sexcenti. exercitum ex Liguribus Q. Minucius — iam enim confectam prouinciam scripserat et Ligurum omne nomen in deditionem uenisse — traducere in Boios et P. Cornelio proconsuli tradere iussus ex agro, quo uictos bello multauerat, Boios deducendi. duae urbanae legiones, quae priore anno conscriptae erant, M. Tuccio praetori datae et socium ac Latini nominis peditum quindecim milia et equites sexcenti ad Apuliam Bruttiosque obtinendos. A. Cornelio superioris anni praetori, qui Bruttios cum exercitu obtinuerat, imperatum, si ita consuli uideretur, ut legiones in Aetoliam traiectas M'. Acilio traderet, si is manere ibi uellet; si Acilius redire Romam mallet, ut A. Cornelius cum eo exercitu in Aetolia remaneret. C. Atinium Labeonem prouinciam Siciliam exercitumque a M. Aemilio accipere placuit et in supplementum scribere ex ipsa prouincia, si uellet, peditum duo milia et centum equites. P. Iunius Brutus in Tuscus exercitum nouum, legionem unam Romanam et decem milia socium ac Latini nominis scribere et quadringentos equites; L. Aemilius, cui maritima prouincia erat, uiginti naues longas et socios naualis a M. Iunio praetore superioris anni accipere iussus et scribere ipse mille naualis socios, duo milia peditum; cum iis nauibus militibusque in Asiam proficisci et classem a C. Liuius accipere. duas Hispanias Sardiniamque obtinentibus prorogatum in annum imperium est et idem exercitus decreti. Siciliae Sardiniaeque binae aequae <ac> proximo anno decumae frumenti imperatae; Siculum omne frumentum in Aetoliam ad exercitum portari iussum, ex Sardinia pars Romam pars in Aetoliam, eodem quo Siculum.

[3] Priusquam consules in prouincias proficiscerentur, prodigia per pontifices procurari placuit. Romae Iunonis Lucinae templum de caelo tactum erat ita, ut fastigium ualuaeque deformarentur; Puteolis pluribus locis murus et porta fulmine icta et duo homines exanimati; Nursiae sereno satis constabat nimbium ortum; ibi quoque duos liberos homines exanimatos; terra apud se pluuisse Tusculani nuntiabant, et Reatini mulam in agro suo peperisse. ea procurata, Latinaeque instauratae, quod Laurentibus carnis, quae dari debet, data non fuerat. supplicatio quoque earum religionum causa fuit quibus diis decemuiri ex libris ut fieret ediderunt. decem ingenui, decem uirgines, patrimi omnes matrimique, ad id sacrificium adhibiti, et decemuiri nocte lactentibus rem diuinam fecerunt. P. Cornelius Scipio Africanus, priusquam proficisceretur, fornicem in Capitolio aduersus uiam, qua in Capitolium escenditur, cum signis septem auratis et equis duobus et marmorea duo labra ante fornicem posuit.

Per eosdem dies principes Aetolorum tres et quadraginta, inter quos Damocritus et frater eius erant, ab duabus cohortibus missis a M'. Acilio Romam deducti et in Lautumias coniecti sunt. cohortes inde ad exercitum redire L. Cornelius consul iussit. — legati ab Ptolomaeo et Cleopatra regibus Aegypti gratulantes, quod M'. Acilius consul Antiochum regem Graecia expulisset, uenerunt adhortantesque, ut in Asiam exercitum traicerent: omnia perculsa metu non in Asia modo sed etiam in Syria esse; reges Aegypti ad ea, quae censuisset senatus, paratos fore. gratiae regibus actae; legatis munera dari iussa in singulos quaternum milium aeris.

triginta quinqueres, viginti trieres faceret, quia fama erat Antiochum post proelium nauale maiorem classem aliquanto reparare.

Aetoli, postquam legati ab Roma rettulerunt nullam spem pacis esse, quamquam omnis ora maritima eorum, quae in Peloponnesum uersa est, depopulata ab Achaeis erat, periculi magis quam damni memores, ut Romanis intercluderent iter, Coracem occupauerunt montem; neque enim dubitabant ad oppugnationem Naupacti eos principio ueris redituros esse. Acilio, quia id expectari sciebat, satius uisum est inopinatam adgredi rem et Lamiam oppugnare; nam et a Philippo prope ad excidium adductos esse, et tunc eo ipso, quod nihil tale timerent, opprimi incautos posse. profectus ab Elatia primum in hostium terra circa Spercheum amnem posuit castra; inde nocte motis signis prima luce corona moenia est adgressus.

[5] Magnus pauor ac tumultus, ut in re improuisa, fuit. constantius tamen, quam quis facturos crederet, in tam subito periculo, cum uiri propugnarent, feminae tela omnis generis saxaque in muros gererent, iam multifariam scalis apposis urbem eo die defenderunt. Acilius signo receptui dato suos in castra medio ferme die reduxit; et tunc cibo et quiete reffectis corporibus, priusquam praetorium dimitteret, denuntiavit, ut ante lucem armati paratique essent; nisi expugnata urbe se eos in castra non reducturum. eodem tempore, quo pridie, pluribus locis adgressus, cum oppidanos iam uires, iam tela, iam ante omnia animus deficeret, intra paucas horas urbem cepit. ibi partim diuendita partim diuisa praeda, consilium habitum, quid deinde faceret. nemini ad Naupactum iri placuit occupato ad Coracem ab Aetolis saltu. ne tamen segnia aestiua essent et Aetoli non impetratam pacem ab senatu nihilo minus per suam cunctationem haberent, oppugnare Acilius Amphissam statuit. ab Heraclea per Oetam exercitus eo deductus. cum ad moenia castra posuisset, non corona, sicut Lamiam, sed operibus oppugnare urbem est adortus. pluribus simul locis aries admouebatur, et cum quaterentur muri, nihil aduersus tale machinationis genus parare aut comminisci oppidani conabantur; omnis spes in armis et audacia erat; eruptionibus crebris et stationes hostium et eos ipsos, qui circa opera et machinas erant, turbabant.

[6] Multis tamen locis decussus murus erat, cum adlatum est

successorem Apolloniae exposito exercitu per Epirum ac Thessaliam uenire. cum tredecim milibus peditum et quingentis equitibus consul ueniebat. iam in sinum Maliacum uenerat; et praemissis Hypatam, qui tradere urbem iuberent, postquam nihil responsum est nisi ex communi Aetolorum decreto facturos, ne teneret se oppugnatio Hypatae nondum Amphissa recepta, praemisso fratre Africano Amphissam ducit. sub aduentum eorum oppidani relictæ urbe — iam enim magna ex parte moenibus nudata erat — in arcem, quam inexpugnabilem habent, omnes armati atque inermes concessere. consul sex milia fere passuum inde posuit castra. eo legati Athenienses primum ad P. Scipionem praegressum agmen, sicut ante dictum est, deinde ad consulem uenerunt, deprecantes pro Aetolis. clementius responsum ab Africano tulerunt, qui causam relinquendi honeste Aetolici belli quaerens Asiam et regem Antiochum spectabat, iusseratque Athenienses non Romanis solum, ut pacem bello praeferrent, sed etiam Aetolis persuadere. celeriter auctoribus Atheniensibus frequens ab Hypata legatio Aetolorum uenit, et spem pacis eis sermo etiam Africani, quem priorem adierunt, auxit, commemorantis multas gentes populosque in Hispania prius, deinde in Africa in fidem suam uenisse; in omnibus se maiora clementiae benignitatisque quam uirtutis bellicae monumenta reliquisse. perfecta uidebatur res, cum aditus consul idem illud responsum rettulit, quo fugati ab senatu erant. eo tamquam nouo cum icti Aetoli essent — nihil enim nec legatione Atheniensium nec placido Africani responso profectum uidebant — , referre ad suos dixerunt uelle.

[7] Reditum inde Hypatam est, nec consilium expediebatur; nam neque, unde mille talentum daretur, erat, et permissio libero arbitrio ne in corpora sua saeuiretur, metuebant. redire itaque eosdem legatos ad consulem et Africanum iusserunt et petere, ut, si dare uere pacem, non tantum ostendere, frustrantes spem miserorum uellent, aut ex summa pecuniae demerent aut permissionem extra ciuium corpora fieri iuberent. nihil impetratum ut mutaret consul; et ea quoque irrita legatio dimissa est. secuti et Athenienses sunt; et princeps legationis eorum Echedemus fatigatos tot repulsis Aetolos et complorantis inutili lamentatione fortunam gentis ad spem reuocauit auctor indutias sex mensium petendi, ut legatos mittere Romam possent: dilationem nihil ad praesentia mala, quippe quae ultima essent, adiecturam; leuari per multos casus tempore interposito praesentis clades posse. auctore Echedemo idem missi; prius P. Scipione conuento, per eum indutias temporis eius, quod petebant, ab consule impetrauerunt. et soluta obsidione Amphissae M'. Acilius tradito consuli exercitu prouincia decessit, et consul ab Amphissa Thessaliam repetit, ut per Macedoniam Thraeciamque duceret in Asiam.

Tum Africanus fratri: 'iter, quod insistis, L. Scipio, ego quoque approbo; sed totum id uertitur in uoluntate Philippi, qui si imperio nostro fidus est, et iter et commeatus et omnia, quae in longo itinere exercitus alunt iuuantque, nobis suppedabit; si is destituit, nihil per Thraeciam satis tutum habebis; itaque prius regis animum explorari placet. optime explorabitur, si nihil ex praeparato agentem opprimet qui mittetur.' Ti. Sempronius Gracchus, longe tum acerrimus iuuenum, ad id delectus per dispositos equos prope incredibili celeritate ab Amphissa — inde enim est dimissus — die tertio Pellam peruenit. in conuiuio rex erat et in multum uini processerat; ea ipsa remissio animi suspicionem dempsit nouare eum quicquam uelle. et tum quidem comiter acceptus hospes, postero die commeatus exercitui paratos benigne, pontes in fluminibus factos, uias, ubi transitus difficiles erant, munitas uidit. haec referens eadem, qua ierat, celeritate Thaumacis occurrit consuli. inde certiore et maiore spe laetus exercitus ad praeparata omnia in Macedoniam peruenit. uenientis regio apparatu et accepit et prosecutus est rex. multa in eo et dexteritas et humanitas uisa, quae commendabilia apud Africanum erant, uirum sicut ad cetera egregium, ita a comitate, quae sine luxuria esset, non auersum. inde non per Macedoniam modo sed etiam Thraeciam prosequente et praeparante omnia Philippo ad Hellespontum peruentum est.

Polyxenidam, quo minus prospere res gesta erat, eo enixius et eas, quae erant, reficere et alias parare naues iussit. ipse in Phrygia hibernauit undique auxilia accersens. etiam in Gallograeciam miserat; bellicosiores ea tempestate erant, Gallicos adhuc, nondum exoleta stirpe gentis, seruantes animos. filium Seleucum in Aeolide reliquerat cum exercitu ad maritimas continendas urbes, quas illinc a Pergamo Eumenes, hinc a Phocaea Erythrisque Romani sollicitabant. classis Romana, sicut ante dictum est, ad Canas hibernabat; eo media ferme hieme rex Eumenes cum duobus milibus peditum, equitibus quingentis uenit. is cum magnam praedam agi posse dixisset ex agro hostium, qui circa Thyatiram esset, hortando perpulit Liuium, ut quinque milia militum secum mitteret. missi ingentem praedam intra paucos dies auerterunt.

[9] Inter haec Phocaeae seditio orta quibusdam ad Antiochum multitudinis animos auocantibus. grauius hiberna nauium erant, graue tributum, quod togae quingentae imperatae erant cum quingentis tunicis, grauis etiam inopia frumenti, propter quam naues quoque et praesidium Romanum excessit. tum uero liberata metu factio erat, quae plebem in contionibus ad Antiochum trahebat; senatus et optimates in Romana societate perstandum censebant; defectionis auctores plus apud multitudinem ualuerunt. Rhodii, quo magis cessatum priore aestate erat, eo maturius aequinoctio uerno eundem Pausistratum classis praefectum cum sex et triginta nauibus miserunt. iam Liuius a Canis cum triginta nauibus <suis> et septem quadriremibus, quas secum Eumenes rex adduxerat, Hellespontum petebat, ut ad transitum exercitus, quem terra uenturum opinabatur, praepararet, quae opus essent. in portum, quem uocant Achaeorum, classem primum aduertit; inde Ilium descendit, sacrificioque Mineruae facto legationes finitimas ab Elaeunte et Dardano et Rhoeteo, tradentis in fidem ciuitatis suas, benigne audiuit. inde ad Hellesponti fauces nauigat et decem nauibus in statione contra Abydum relictis cetera classe in Europam ad Sestum oppugnandam traiecit. iam subeuntibus armatis muros fanatici Galli primum cum sollemni habitu ante portam occurrunt; iussu se matris deum famulos deae uenire memorant ad precandum Romanum, ut parceret moenibus urbiue. nemo eorum uiolatus est. mox uniuersus senatus cum magistratibus ad dedendam urbem processit. inde Abydum traiecta classis. ubi cum temptatis per colloquia animis nihil pacati responderetur, ad oppugnationem sese expediebant.

[10] Dum haec in Hellesponto geruntur, Polyxenidas regius praefectus — erat autem exul Rhodius — cum audisset profectam ab domo popularium suorum classem, et Pausistratum praefectum superbe quaedam et contemptim in se contionantem dixisse, praecipuo certamine animi aduersus eum sumpto nihil aliud dies noctesque agitabat animo, quam ut uerba magnifica eius rebus confutaret. mittit ad eum hominem et illi notum, qui diceret et se Pausistrato patriaeque suae magno usui, se liceat, fore, et a Pausistrato se restitui in patriam posse. cum, quonam modo ea fieri possent, mirabundus Pausistratus percunctaretur, fidem petenti dedit agenda communiter rei aut tegenda silentio. tum internuntius: regiam classem aut totam aut maiorem <eius> partem Polyxenidam traditurum ei; pretium tanti meriti nullum aliud pacisci quam redditum in patriam. magnitudo rei nec ut crederet nec ut aspernaretur dicta effecit. Panhormum Samiae terrae petit, ibique ad explorandam rem, quae oblata erat, substitit. ultro citroque nuntii cursare, nec fides ante Pausistrato facta est, quam coram nuntio eius Polyxenidas sua manu scripsit se ea, quae pollicitus esset, facturum signoque suo impressas tabellas misit. eo uero pignore uelut auctoratum sibi proditorem ratus est: neque enim eum, qui sub rege uiueret, commissurum fuisse, ut aduersus semet ipsum indicia manu sua testata daret. inde ratio simulatae proditionis composita. omnium se rerum apparatus omisurum Polyxenidas dicere; non remigem, non socios naualis ad classem frequentis habiturum; subducturum per simulationem reficiendi quasdam naues, alias in propinquos portus dimissurum; paucas ante portum Ephesi in salo habiturum, quas, si exire res cogeret, obiecturus certamini foret. quam negligentiam Polyxenidam in classe sua habiturum Pausistratus audiuit, eam ipse extemplo habuit, partem nauium ad commeatus accersendos Halicarnassum, partem Samum ad urbem misit, <ipse ad Panhormum mansit,> ut paratus esset, cum signum adgrediendi a proditore accepisset. Polyxenidas augere simulando errorem; subducit quasdam naues, alias uelut subducturus esset, naualia reficit; remiges ex hibernis non Ephesum accersit, sed Magnesiam occulte cogit.

[11] Forte quidam Antiochi miles, cum Samum rei priuatae causa

uenisset, pro speculatore deprehensus deducitur Panhormum ad praefectum. is percunctanti, quid Ephesi ageretur, incertum metu an erga suos haud sincera fide, omnia aperit: classem instructam paratamque in portu stare; remigium omne Magnesiam [ad Sipylum] missum; perpauca naues subductas esse et naualia detegi; numquam intentius rem naualem administratam esse. haec ne pro ueris audirentur, animus errore et spe uana praeoccupatus fecit. Polyxenidas satis omnibus comparatis, nocte remige a Magnesia accersito, deductisque raptim, quae subductae erant, nauibus, cum diem non tam apparatu absumpsisset, quam quod conspici proficiscentem classem nolebat, post solis occasum profectus septuaginta nauibus tectis uento aduerso ante lucem Pygela portum tenuit. ibi cum interdiu ob eandem causam quiesset, nocte in proxima Samiae terrae traiecit. hinc Nicandro quodam archipirata quinque nauibus tectis Palinurum iusso petere, atque inde armatos, qua proximum per agros iter esset, Panhormum ad tergum hostium ducere, ipse interim classe diuisa, ut ex utraque parte fauces portus teneret, Panhormum petit. Pausistratus primo ut in re necopinata turbatus parumper, deinde uetus miles celeriter collecto animo terra melius arceri quam mari hostes posse ratus, armatos duobus agminibus ad promunturia, quae cornibus obiectis ab alto portum faciunt, ducit, inde facile telis ancipitibus hostem summoturus. id inceptum eius Nicander a terra uisus cum turbasset, repente mutato consilio naues conscendere omnis iubet. tum uero ingens pariter militum nautarumque trepidatio orta, et uelut fuga in naues fieri, cum se mari terraque simul cernerent circumuentos. Pausistratus unam uiam salutis esse ratus, si uim facere per fauces portus atque erumpere in mare apertum posset, postquam conscendisse suos uidit, sequi ceteris iussis princeps ipse concitata naue remis ad ostium portus tendit. superantem iam fauces nauem eius Polyxenidas tribus quinquereuib; circumsistit. nauis rostris icta suppressitur; telis obruuntur propugnatores, inter quos et Pausistratus impigre pugnans interficitur. nauium reliquarum ante portum aliae, aliae in portu deprensae, quaedam a Nicandro, dum moliuntur a terra, captae; quinque tantum Rhodiae naues cum duabus Cois effugerunt terrore flammae micantis uia sibi inter confertas naues facta; contis enim binis a prora prominentibus trullis ferreis multum conceptum ignem prae se portabant. Erythraeae triremes cum haud procul a Samo Rhodiis nauibus, quibus ut essent praesidio ueniebant, obuiae fugientibus fuissent, in Hellespontum ad Romanos cursum auerterunt. sub idem tempus Seleucus proditam Phocaeam porta una per custodes aperta recepit; et Cyme aliaeque eiusdem orae urbes ad eum metu defecerunt.

[12] Dum haec in Aeolide geruntur, Abydus cum per aliquot dies obsidionem tolerasset praesidio regio tutante moenia, iam omnibus fessis Philota quoque praefecto praesidii permittente magistratus eorum cum Liuius de condicionibus tradendae urbis agebant. rem distinebat, quod, utrum armati an inermes emitterentur regii, parum conueniebat. haec agentibus cum interuenisset nuntius Rhodiorum cladis, emissa de manibus res est; metuens enim Liuius, ne successu tantae rei inflatus Polyxenidas classem, quae ad Canas erat, opprimeret, Abydi obsidione custodiaque Hellesponti extemplo relictas naues, quae subductae Canis erant, deduxit; et Eumenes Elaeam uenit. Liuius omni classe, cui adiunxerat duas triremes Mitylenaeas, Phocaeam petit. quam cum teneri ualido regio praesidio audisset, nec procul Seleuci castra esse, depopulatus maritimam oram, et praeda maxime hominum raptim in naues imposita tantum moratus, dum Eumenes cum classe adsequeretur, Samum petere intendit. Rhodiis primo audita clades simul pauorem simul luctum ingentem fecit; nam praeter nauium militumque iacturam, quod floris, quod roboris in iuuentute fuerat, amiserant, multis nobilibus secutis inter cetera auctoritatem Pausistrati, quae inter suos merito maxima erat; deinde, quod fraude capti, quod a ciue potissimum suo forent, in iram luctus uertit. decem extemplo naues, et diebus post paucis decem alias praefecto omnium Eudamo miserunt, quem aliis uirtutibus bellicis haudquaquam Pausistrato parem, cautiolem, quo minus animi erat, ducem futurum credebant. Romani et Eumenes rex in Erythraeam primum classem applicuerunt. ibi noctem unam morati postero die Corycum [Pelorum] promunturium tenuerunt. inde cum in proxima Samiae uellent traicere, non expectato solis ortu, ex quo statum caeli notare gubernatores possent, in incertam tempestatem miserunt. medio in cursu, aquilone in septentrionem uerso, exasperato fluctibus mari iactari coeperunt.

coniungerent, ab Epheso profectus primo ad Myonnesum stetit; inde ad Macrin, quam uocant, insulam traiecit, ut praeteruehensis classis si quas aberrantis ex agmine naues posset aut postremum agmen opportune adoriretur. postquam sparsam tempestate classem uidit, occasionem primo adgrediendi ratus, paulo post increbrescente uento et maiores iam uolente fluctus, quia peruenire se ad eos uidebat non posse, ad Aethaliam insulam traiecit, ut inde postero die Samum ex alto petentis nauis adgrederetur. Romani, pars exigua, primis tenebris portum desertum Samiae tenuerunt, classis cetera nocte tota in alto iactata in eundem portum decurrit. ibi ex agrestibus cognito hostium naues ad Aethaliam stare, consilium habitum, utrum extemplo decernerent, an Rhodiam expectarent classem. dilata re — ita enim placuit — Corycum, unde uenerant, traiecerunt. Polyxenidas quoque, cum frustra stetisset, Ephesum rediit. tum Romanae naues uacuo ab hostibus mari Samum traiecerunt. eodem et Rhodia classis post dies paucos uenit. quam ut expectatam esse appareret, profecti extemplo sunt Ephesum, ut aut decernerent nauali certamine, aut, si detractaret hostis pugnam, quod plurimum intererat ad animos ciuitatum, timoris confessionem exprimerent. contra fauces portus instructa in frontem nauium acie stetere. postquam nemo aduersus ibat, classe diuisa pars in salo ad ostium portus in ancoris stetit, pars in terram milites exposuit. in eos [iam] ingentem praedam late depopulato agro agentis Andronicus Macedo, qui in praesidio Ephesi erat, iam moenibus appropinquantis eruptionem fecit, exutosque magna parte praedae ad mare ac naues redegit. postero die insidiis medio ferme uiae positis ad eliciendum extra moenia Macedonem Romani ad urbem agmine iere; inde, cum ea ipsa suspicio, ne quis exiret, deterruisset, redierunt ad naues; et terra marique fugientibus certamen hostibus Samum, unde uenerat, classis repetit. inde duas sociorum ex Italia, duas Rhodias triremes cum praefecto Epicrate Rhodio ad fretum Cephallaniae tuendum praetor misit. infestum id latrocinio Lacedaemonius Hybristas cum iuuentute Cephallanum faciebat, clausumque iam mare commeatibus Italicis erat.

[14] Piraei L. Aemilio Regillo succedenti ad nauale imperium Epicrates occurrit; qui audita clade Rhodiorum, cum ipse duas tantum quinqueres haberet, Epicratem cum quattuor nauibus in Asiam secum reduxit; prosecutae etiam apertae Atheniensium naues sunt. Aegaeo mari traiecit <Chium>. eodem Timasirates Rhodius cum duabus quadriremibus ab Samo nocte intempesta uenit, deductusque ad Aemilium praesidii causa se missum ait, quod eam oram maris infestam onerariis regiae naues excursionibus crebris ab Hellesponto atque Abydo facerent. traienti Aemilio a Chio Samum duae Rhodiae quadriremes, missae obuiam ab Liuiο, et rex Eumenes cum duabus quinquereuib; occurrit. Samum postquam uentum est, accepta ab Liuiο classe et sacrificio, ut adsolet, rite facto Aemilius consilium aduocauit. ibi C. Liuius — is enim est primus rogatus sententiam — neminem fidelius posse dare consilium dixit quam eum, qui id alteri suaderet, quod ipse, si in eodem loco esset, facturus fuerit: se in animo habuisse tota classe Ephesum petere et onerarias ducere multa saburra grauatas, atque eas in faucibus portus suppressere; et eo minoris molimenti ea claustra esse, quod in fluminis modum longum et angustum et uadosum ostium portus sit. ita adempturum se maris usum hostibus fuisse inutilemque classem facturum.

[15] Nulli ea placere sententia. Eumenes rex quaesiuit, quid tandem? ubi demersis nauibus frenassent claustra maris, utrum libera sua classe abscessuri inde forent ad opem ferendam sociis terroremque hostibus praebendum, an nihilo minus tota classe portum obsessuri? siue enim abscedant, cui dubium esse, quin hostes extracturi demersas moles sint et minore molimento aperturi portum, quam obstruatur? sin autem manendum ibi nihilo minus sit, quid attinere claudi portum? quin contra illos, tutissimo portu, opulentissima urbe fruentis, omnia Asia praebente quieta aestiua acturos; Romanos aperto in mari fluctibus tempestatibusque obiectos, omnium inopes, in adsidua statione futuros, ipsos magis adligatos impeditosque, ne quid eorum, quae agenda sint, possint agere, quam ut hostis clausos habeant. Eudamus praefectus Rhodiae classis magis eam sibi displicere sententiam ostendit, quam ipse, quid censeret faciendum, dixit. Epicrates Rhodius ommissa in praesentia Epheso mittendam nauium partem in Lyciam censuit, et Patara, caput gentis, in societatem adiungenda. in duas magnas res id usui fore, et Rhodios pacatis contra insulam suam terris totis uiribus incumbere in unius belli, quod aduersus Antiochum sit, curam posse, et eam classem, quae in Cilicia compararetur, intercludi, ne Polyxenidae coniungatur. haec maxime mouit sententia; placuit tamen Regillum classe tota euehi ad portum Ephesi ad inferendum hostibus terrorem.

[16] C. Liuius cum duabus quinquereimis Romanis et quattuor quadriremibus Rhodiis et duabus apertis Zmyrnaeis in Lyciam est missus, Rhodum prius iussus adire et omnia cum iis communicare consilia. ciuitates, quas praeteruectus est, Miletus Myndus Halicarnassus Cnidus Cous, imperata enixe fecerunt. Rhodum ut uentum est, simul et, ad quam rem missus esset, iis exposuit et consuluit eos. approbantibus cunctis et ad eam, quam habebat, classem, adsumptis tribus quadriremibus, nauigat Patara. primo secundus uentus ad ipsam urbem ferebat eos, sperabantque subito terrore aliquid moturos; postquam circumagente se uento fluctibus dubiis uolui coeptum est mare, peruicerunt quidem remis, ut tenerent terram; sed neque circa urbem tuta statio erat, nec ante ostium portus in salo stare poterant aspero mari et nocte imminente. praeteruecti moenia portum Phoenicunta, minus duum milium spatio inde distantem, petiere, nauibus a maritima ui tutum; sed altae insuper imminebant rupes, quas celeriter oppidani adsumptis regiis militibus, quos in praesidio habebant, ceperunt. aduersus quos Liuius, quamquam erant iniqua ac difficilia ad exitus loca, Issaeos auxiliares et Zmyrnaeorum expeditos iuuenes misit. hi, dum missilibus primo et aduersus paucos leuib. excursionibus lacescebatur magis quam conserebatur pugna, sustinuerunt certamen; postquam plures ex urbe adfluebant, et iam omnis multitudo effundebatur, timor incessit Liuium, ne et auxiliares circumuenirentur et nauibus etiam ab terra periculum esset. ita non milites solum sed etiam naualis socios, remigum turbam, quibus quisque poterat telis, armatos in proelium eduxit. tum quoque anceps pugna fuit, neque milites solum aliquot, sed L. Apustius tumultuario proelio cecidit; postremo tamen fusi fugatique sunt Lycii atque in urbem compulsi, et Romani cum haud incruenta uictoria ad naues redierunt. inde in Telmessicum profecti sinum, qui latere uno Cariam altero Lyciam contingit, omisso <consilio> Patara amplius temptandi Rhodii domum dimissi sunt, Liuius praeteruectus Asiam in Graeciam transmisit, ut conuentis Scipionibus, qui tum circa Thessaliam erant, in Italiam traiceret.

[17] Aemilius postquam omissas in Lycia res et Liuium profectum in Italiam cognouit, cum ipse ab Epheso tempestate repulsus irritum

incepto Samum reuertisset, turpe ratus temptata frustra Patara esse, proficisci eo tota classe et summa ui adgredi urbem statuit. Miletum et ceteram oram sociorum praeteruecti in Bargylitico sinu escensionem ad Iasum fecerunt. urbem regium tenebat praesidium; agrum circa Romani hostiliter depopulati sunt. missis deinde, qui per colloquia principum et magistratum temptarent animos, postquam nihil in potestate sua responderunt esse, ad urbem oppugnandam ducit. erant Iasensium exules cum Romanis; ii frequentes Rhodios orare institerunt, ne urbem et uicinam sibi et cognatam innoxiam perire sinerent; sibi exilii nullam aliam causam esse quam fidem erga Romanos; eadem ui regionum, qua ipsi pulsi sint, teneri eos, qui in urbe maneant; omnium Iasensium unam mentem esse, ut seruitutem regiam effugerent. Rhodii moti precibus Eumene etiam rege adsumpto simul suas necessitudines commemorando, simul obsessae regio praesidio urbis casum miserando peruicerunt, ut oppugnatione abstineretur. profecti inde pacatis ceteris cum oram Asiae legerent, Loryma — portus aduersus Rhodum est — peruenerunt. ibi in principiis sermo primo inter tribunos militum secretus oritur, deinde ad aures ipsius Aemilii peruenit, abduci classem ab Epheso, ab suo bello, ut ab tergo liber relictus hostis in tot propinquas sociorum urbes omnia impune conari posset. mouere ea Aemilium; uocatosque Rhodios cum percontatus esset, [utrum]num Pataris uniuersa classis in portu stare posset, cum respondissent non posse, causam nactus omittendae rei Samum naues reduxit.

[18] Per idem tempus Seleucus Antiochi filius, cum per omne hibernorum tempus exercitum in Aeolide continuisset partim sociis ferendo opem, partim, quos in societatem perlicere non poterat, depopulandis, transire in fines regni Eumenis, dum is procul ab domo cum Romanis et Rhodiis Lyciae maritima oppugnaret, statuit. ad Elaeam primo infestis signis accessit; deinde omissa oppugnatione urbis agros hostiliter depopulatus ad caput arcemque regni Pergamum ducit oppugnandam. Attalus primo stationibus ante urbem positis et excursionibus equitum leuisque armaturae magis lacescebat quam sustinebat hostem; postremo cum per leuia certamina expertus nulla parte uirium se parem esse intra moenia se recepisset, obsideri urbs coepta est. eodem ferme tempore et Antiochus ab Apamea profectus Sardibus primum, deinde haud procul Seleuci castris ad caput Caici amnis statua habuit cum magno exercitu mixto uariis ex gentibus. plurimum terroris in Gallorum mercede conductis quattuor milibus erat. hos paucis * admixtis ad peruastandum passim Pergamenum agrum [milites] misit. quae postquam Samum nuntiata sunt, primo Eumenes auocatus domestico bello cum classe Elaeam petit; inde, cum praesto fuissent equites peditumque expediti, praesidio eorum tutus, priusquam hostes sentirent aut mouerentur, Pergamum contendit. ibi rursus leuia per excursions proelia fieri coepta Eumene summae rei discrimen haud dubie detractante. paucos post dies Romana Rhodiaque classis, ut regi opem ferrent, Elaeam ab Samo uenerunt. quos ubi exposuisse copias Elaeae et tot classes in unum conuenisse portum Antiocho adlatum est, et sub idem tempus audiuit consulem cum exercitu iam in Macedonia esse pararique, quae ad transitum Hellesponti opus essent, tempus uenisse ratus, priusquam terra marique simul urgeretur, agendi de pace [esse], tumulum quendam aduersus Elaeam castris cepit; ibi peditum omnibus copiis relictis cum equitatu — erant autem sex milia equitum — in campos sub ipsa Elaeae moenia descendit misso caduceatore ad Aemilium, uelle se de pace agere.

[19] Aemilius Eumene a Pergamo accito adhibitis et Rhodiis consilium habuit. Rhodii haud aspernari pacem; Eumenes nec honestum dicere esse eo tempore de pace agi, nec exitum rei imponi posse: 'qui enim' inquit 'aut honeste, inclusi moenibus et obsessi, uelut leges pacis accipiemus? aut cui rata ista pax erit, quam sine consule, non ex auctoritate senatus, non iussu populi Romani pepigerimus? quaero enim pace per te facta rediturusne extemplo in Italiam sis, classem exercitumque deducturus, an expectaturus, quid de ea re consuli placeat, quid senatus censeat aut populus iubeat? restat ergo, ut maneat in Asia, et rursus in hiberna copiae reductae omisso bello exhauriant commeatibus praebendis socios, deinde, si ita uisum iis sit, penes quos potestas fuerit, instauremus nouum de integro bellum, quod possumus, si ex hoc impetu rerum nihil prolatando remittitur, ante hiemem diis uolentibus perfecisse.' haec sententia uicit, responsumque Antiocho est ante consulis aduentum de pace agi non posse. Antiochus pace nequiquam temptata, euastatis Elaeensium primum, deinde Pergamenorum agris, relicto ibi Seleuco filio, Adramytteum hostiliter itinere facto petit agrum opulentum, quem uocant Thebes campum, carmine Homeri nobilitatum; neque alio ullo loco Asiae maior regiis militibus parta est praeda. eodem Adramytteum, ut urbi praesidio essent, nauibus circumuecti Aemilius et Eumenes uenerunt.

[20] Per eosdem forte dies Elaeam ex Achaia mille pedites cum centum equitibus, Diophane omnibus iis copiis praeposito, accesserunt, quos egressos nauibus obuiam missi ab Attalo nocte Pergamum deduxerunt. ueterani omnes et periti belli erant, et ipse dux Philopoemenis, summi tum omnium Graecorum imperatoris, discipulus. qui biduum simul ad quietem hominum equorumque et ad uisendas hostium stationes, quibus locis temporibusque accederent reciperentque sese, sumpserunt. ad radices fere collis, in quo posita urbs est, regii succedebant; ita libera ab tergo populatio erat. nullo ab urbe, ne in stationes quidem <qui> procul iacularetur, excurrente, postquam semel, compulsi metu, se moenibus incluserunt, contemptus eorum et inde negligentia apud regios oritur. non stratos, non infrenatos magna pars habebant equos; paucis ad arma et ordines relictis dilapsi ceteri sparserant se toto passim campo, pars in iuuenales lusus lasciuiamque uersi, pars uescentes sub umbra, quidam somno etiam strati. haec Diophanes ex alta urbe Pergamo contemplatus arma suos capere et ad portam praesto esse iubet; ipse Attalum adit et in animo sibi esse dixit hostium stationem temptare. aegre id permittente Attalo, quippe qui centum equitibus aduersus sescentos, mille peditibus cum quattuor milibus pugnaturum cerneret, porta egressus haud procul statione hostium, occasionem opperiens, consedit. et qui Pergami erant amentiam magis quam audaciam credere esse, et hostes paulisper in eos uersi, ut nihil moueri uiderunt, nec ipsi quicquam ex solita negligentia, insuper etiam eludentes paucitatem, mutarunt. Diophanes quietos aliquamdiu suos, uelut ad spectaculum modo eductos, continuit; postquam dilapsos ab ordinibus hostes uidit, peditibus, quantum accelerare possent, sequi iussis ipse princeps inter equites cum turma sua, quam potuit effusissimis habenis, clamore ab omni simul peditate atque equite sublato stationem hostium improuiso inuadit. non homines solum sed equi etiam territi, cum uincula abrupissent, trepidationem et tumultum inter suos fecerunt. pauci stabant impauidi equi; eos ipsos non sternere, non infrenare aut escendere facile poterant multo maiolem quam pro numero equitum terrorem Achaeis inferentibus. pedites uero ordinati et praeparati sparsos per negligentiam et semisomnos prope adorti sunt. caedes passim fugaue per campos facta est. Diophanes secutus effusos, quoad tutum fuit, magno decore genti Achaeorum parto — spectauerant enim e moenibus Pergami non uiri modo sed feminae etiam — in praesidium urbis redit.

[21] Postero die regiae magis compositae et ordinatae stationes quingentis passibus longius ab urbe posuerunt castra, et Achaei eodem ferme tempore atque in eundem locum processerunt. per multas horas intenti utrimque uelut iam futurum impetum expectauere; postquam haud procul occasu solis redeundi in castra tempus erat, regii signis collatis abire agmine ad iter magis quam ad pugnam composito coepere. quieuit Diophanes, dum in conspectu erant; deinde eodem, quo pridie, impetu in postremum agmen incurrit, tantumque rursus pauoris ac tumultus incussit, ut, cum terga caederentur, nemo pugnandi causa restiterit; trepidantesque et uix ordinem agminis seruantes in castra compulsi sunt. haec Achaeorum audacia Seleucum ex agro Pergameno mouere castra coegit.

Antiochus postquam Romanos ad tuendum Adramytteum uenisse audiuit, ea quidem urbe abstinuit; depopulatus agros Peraeam inde, coloniam Mitylenaeorum, expugnauit. Cotton et Corylenus et Aphrodisias et Prinne primo impetu captae sunt. inde per Thyatiram Sardis rediit. Seleucus in ora maritima permanens aliis terrori erat, aliis praesidio. classis Romana cum Eumene Rhodiisque Mitylenen primo, inde retro, unde profecta erat, Elaeam redit. inde Phocaeam petentes ad insulam, quam Bacchium uocant — imminet urbi Phocaeensium — , appulerunt et, quibus ante abstinerant templis signisque — egregie autem exornata insula erat — , cum hostiliter diripuissent, ad ipsam urbem transmiserunt. eam diuisis inter se partibus cum oppugnarent et uideretur sine operibus, armis scalisque capi posse, missum ab Antiocho praesidium trium milium armatorum cum intrasset urbem, extemplo oppugnatione ommissa classis ad insulam se recepit nihil aliud quam depopulato circa urbem hostium agro.

[22] Inde placuit Eumenen domum dimitti et praeparare consuli atque exercitui, quae ad transitum Hellesponti opus essent, Romanam Rhodiamque classem redire Samum atque ibi in statione esse, ne

Polyxenidas ab Epheso moueret. rex Elaeam, Romani ac Rhodii Samum redierunt. ibi M. Aemilius frater praetoris decessit. Rhodii celebratis exsequiis aduersus classem, quam fama erat ex Syria uenire, tredecim suis nauibus et una Coa quinqueremi, altera Cnidia Rhodum, ut ibi in statione essent, profecti sunt. biduo ante, quam Eudamus cum classe ab Samo ueniret, tredecim ab Rhodo naues cum Pamphilida praefecto aduersus eandem Syriacam classem missae adsumptis quattuor nauibus, quae Cariae praesidio erant, oppugnantibus regiis Daedala et quaedam alia Peraeae castella obsidione exemerunt. Eudamum confestim exire placuit. additae huic quoque sunt ad eam classem, quam habebat, sex apertae naues. profectus cum, quantum accelerare poterat, maturasset, ad portum, quem Megisten uocant, praegressos consequitur. inde uno agmine Phaselidem cum uenissent, optimum uisum est ibi hostem opperiri.

[23] In confinio Lyciae et Pamphylicae Phaselis est; prominet penitus in altum conspiciturque prima terrarum Rhodum a Cilicia petentibus et procul nauium praebet prospectum. eo maxime, ut in obuio classi hostium essent, electus locus est; ceterum, quod non prouiderunt, et loco graui et tempore anni — medium enim aestatis erat —, ad hoc insolito odore ingruere morbi uulgo, maxime in remiges, coeperunt. cuius pestilentiae metu profecti cum praeterueherentur Pamphylium sinum, ad Eurymedontem amnem appulsa classe audiunt ab Aspendiis ad Sidam hostis esse. tardius nauigauerant regii aduerso tempore etesiarum, quod uelut statum fauoniis uentis est. Rhodiorum duae et triginta quadriremes et quattuor triremes fuere; regia classis septem et triginta maioris formae nauium erat; in quibus tres hepteres, quattuor hexeres habebat. praeter has decem triremes erant. et hi adesse hostis ex specula quadam cognouerunt. utraque classis postero die luce prima, tamquam eo die pugnatura, e portu mouit; et postquam superauere Rhodii promunturium, quod ab Sida prominet in altum, extemplo et conspecti ab hostibus sunt et ipsi eos uiderunt. ab regiis sinistro cornu, quod ab alto obiectum erat, Hannibal, dextro Apollonius, purpuratorum unus, praeerat; et iam in frontem directas habebant naues. Rhodii longo agmine ueniebant; prima praetoria nauis Eudami erat; cogeabat agmen Chariclitus; Pamphilidas mediae classi praeerat. Eudamus postquam hostium aciem instructam et paratam ad concurrendum uidit, et ipse in altum euehitur, et deinceps quae sequebantur seruantes ordinem in frontem derigere iubet. ea res primo tumultum praebuit; nam nec sic in altum euectus erat, ut ordo omnium nauium ad terram explicari posset, et festinans ipse praepropere cum quinque solis nauibus Hannibali occurrit; ceteri quia in frontem derigere iussi erant, non sequebantur. extremo agmini loci nihil ad terram relictum erat; trepidantibusque iis inter se iam in dextro cornu aduersus Hannibalem pugnabatur.

[24] Sed momento temporis et nauium uirtus et usus maritimae rei terrorem omnem Rhodiis dempsit. nam et in altum celeriter euectae naues locum post se quaeque uenienti ad terram dedere, et si qua concurrerat rostro cum hostium naue, aut proram lacerabat, aut remos detergebat, aut libero inter ordines discursu praeteruecta in puppim impetum dabat. maxime exterruit heptemis regia a multo minore Rhodia naue uno ictu demersa; itaque iam haud dubie dextrum cornu hostium in fugam inclinabat. Eudamum in alto multitudine nauium maxime Hannibal, ceteris omnibus longe praestantem, urgebat, et circumuenisset, ni signo sublato ex praetoria naue, quo dispersam classem in unum colligi mos erat, omnes quae in dextro cornu uicerant naues ad opem ferendam suis concurrissent. tum et Hannibal quaeque circa eum naues erant capessunt fugam; nec insequi Rhodii ex magna parte aegris et ob id celerius fessis remigibus potuerunt. cum in alto, ubi substiterant, cibo reficerent uires, contemplatus Eudamus hostis claudas mutilatasque naues apertis nauibus remulco trahentis, uiginti paulo amplius integras abscedentis, e turri praetoriae nauis silentio facto ‘exsurgite’ inquit ‘et egregium spectaculum capessite oculis.’ consurrexere omnes, contemplatique trepidationem fugamque hostium [ac] prope una uoce omnes, ut sequerentur, exclamauerunt. ipsius Eudami multis ictibus uulnerata nauis erat; Pamphilidam et Chariclitum insequi, quoad putarent tutum, iussit. aliquamdiu secuti sunt; postquam terrae appropinquabat Hannibal, ueriti, ne includerentur uento in hostium ora, ad Eudamum reuerti heptem captam, quae primo concursu icta erat, aegre Phaselidem pertraxerunt. inde Rhodum non tam uictoria laeti, quam alius alium accusantes, quod, cum potuisset, non omnis submersa aut capta classis hostium foret, redierunt. Hannibal, ictus uno proelio aduerso, ne tum quidem praeteruehi Lyciam audebat, cum coniungi ueteri regiae classi quam primum cuperet; et ne id ei facere liberum esset, Rhodii Chariclitum cum uiginti nauibus rostratis ad Patara et Megisten portum miserunt. Eudamum cum septem nauibus maximis ex ea classe, cui praefuerat, Samum redire ad Romanos iusserunt, ut, quantum consilio, quantum auctoritate ualeret, compelleret Romanos ad Patara expugnanda.

[25] Magnam Romanis laetitiam prius uictoriae nuntius, deinde aduentus attulit Rhodiorum; et apparebat, si Rhodiis ea cura dempta fuisset, uacuos eos tuta eius regionis maria praestatueros. sed profectio Antiochi ab Sardibus <metusque inde>, ne opprimerentur maritimae urbes, abscedere custodia Ioniae atque Aeolidis prohibuerunt; Pamphilidam cum quattuor nauibus tectis ad eam classem, quae circa Patara erat, miserunt. Antiochus non ciuitatum modo, quae circa se erant, contrahebat praesidia, sed ad Prusiam Bithyniae regem legatos miserat litterasque, quibus transitum in Asiam Romanorum increpabat: uenire eos ad omnia regna tollenda, ut nullum usquam [orbis] terrarum nisi Romanum imperium esset; Philippum, Nabim expugnatos; se tertium peti; ut quisque proximus ab oppresso sit, per omnis uelut continens incendium peruasurum; ab se gradum in Bithyniam fore, quando Eumenes in uoluntariam seruitutem concessisset. his motum Prusiam litterae Scipionis consulis, sed magis fratris eius Africani, ab suspicione tali auerterunt, qui praeter consuetudinem perpetuam populi Romani augendi omni honore regum sociorum maiestatem, domesticis ipse exemplis Prusiam ad promerendam amicitiam suam compulit: regulos se acceptos in fidem in Hispania reges reliquisse; Masinissam non in patrio modo locasse regno, sed in Syphacis, a quo ante expulsus fuisset, regnum imposuisse; et esse eum non Africae modo regum longe opulentissimum, sed toto in orbe terrarum cuius regum uel maiestate uel uiribus parem. Philippum et Nabim, hostis et bello superatos ab T. Quinctio, tamen in regno relictos. Philippo quidem anno priore etiam stipendium remissum et filium obsidem redditum; et quasdam ciuitates extra Macedoniam patientibus Romanis imperatoribus recepissee eum. in eadem dignitate et Nabim futurum fuisse, nisi eum suus primum furor, deinde fraus Aetolorum absumpsisset. maxime confirmatus est animus regis, postquam ad eum C. Liuius, qui praetor ante classi praefuerat, legatus ab Roma uenit et edocuit, quanto et spes uictoriae certior Romanis quam Antiocho et amicitia sanctorum firmiorque apud Romanos futura esset.

[26] Antiochus postquam a spe societatis Prusiae decidit, Ephesum ab Sardibus est profectus ad classem, quae per aliquot menses instructa ac parata fuerat, uisendam, magis quia terrestribus copiis exercitum Romanum et duos Scipiones imperatores uidebat sustineri non posse, quam quod res naualis ipsa per se aut temptata sibi umquam feliciter aut tunc magnae et certae fiduciae esset. erat tamen momentum in praesentia spei, quod et magnam partem Rhodiae classis circa Patara esse et Eumenen regem cum omnibus nauibus suis consuli obuiam in Hellespontum profectum audierat; aliquid etiam inflabat animos classis Rhodia ad Samum per occasionem fraude praeparatam absumpta. his fretus, Polyxenida cum classe ad temptandam omni modo certaminis fortunam misso, ipse copias ad Notium ducit. id oppidum Colophonium, mari imminens, abest a uetere Colophone duo ferme milia passuum. et ipsam urbem suae potestatis esse uolebat, adeo propinquam Epheso, ut nihil terra mariue ageret, quod non subiectum oculis Colophoniorum ac per eos notum extemplo Romanis esset, et hos audita obsidione non dubitabat ad opem sociae urbi ferendam classem ab Samo moturos; eam occasionem Polyxenidae ad rem gerendam fore. igitur operibus oppugnare urbem adgressus, ad mare partibus duabus pariter munitionibus deductis, utrimque uineas et aggerem muro iniunxit et testudinibus arietes admouit. quibus territi malis Colophonii oratores Samum ad L. Aemilium, fidem praetoris populique Romani implorantes, miserunt. Aemilium et Sami segnis diu mora offendebat, nihil minus opinantem quam Polyxenidam, bis nequiquam ab se prouocatum, potestatem pugnae facturum esse, et turpe existimabat Eumenis classem adiuuare consulem ad traiciendas in Asiam legiones, se Colophonis obsessae auxilio, incertam finem habituro, alligari. Eudamus Rhodius, qui et tenuerat eum Sami cupientem proficisci in Hellespontum, cunctique instare et [dicere]: quanto satius esse uel socios obsidione eximere uel uictam iam semel classem iterum uincere et totam maris possessionem <hosti> eripere, quam desertis sociis, tradita Antiocho Asia terra marique in Hellespontum, ubi satis esset Eumenis classis, ab sua parte belli discedere.

[27] Profecti ab Samo ad petendos commeatus consumptis iam omnibus Chium parabant traicere; id erat horreum Romanis, eoque omnes ex Italia missae onerariae derigebant cursum. circumuecti ab urbe ad auersa insulae — obiecta aquiloni ad Chium et Erythras sunt — cum pararent traicere, litteris certior fit praetor frumenti uim magnam Chium ex Italia uenisse, uinum portantes naues tempestatibus retentas esse; simul adlatum est Teios regiae classi commeatus benigne praeuisse, quinque milia uasorum uini esse pollicitos. Teum ex medio cursu classem repente auertit, aut uolentibus iis usus commeatu parato hostibus, aut ipsos pro hostibus habiturus. cum derexissent ad terram proras, quindecim ferme eis naues circa Myonnesum apparuerunt, quas primo ex classe regia praetor esse ratus institit sequi; apparuit deinde piraticos celoces et lembos esse. Chiorum maritimam oram depopulati cum omnis generis praeda reuertentes postquam uidere ex alto classem, in fugam uerterunt. et celeritate superabant leuioribus et ad id fabrefactis nauigiis, et propiores terrae erant; itaque priusquam appropinquaret classis Myonnesum perfugerunt, unde se e portu ratus abstracturum naues, ignarus loci sequebatur praetor. Myonnesus promunturium inter Teum Samumque est. ipse collis est in modum metae in acutum cacumen a fundo satis lato fastigatus; a continenti artae semitae aditum habet, a mari exesae fluctibus rupes claudunt, ita ut quibusdam locis superpendentia saxa plus in altum, quam quae in statione sunt naues, promineant. circa ea appropinquare non ausae naues, ne sub ictu superstantium rupibus piratarum essent, diem triuere. tandem sub noctem uano incepto cum abstitissent, Teum postero die accessere et in portu, qui ab tergo urbis est — Geraesticum ipsi appellant — , nauibus constitutis praetor ad depopulandum circa urbem agrum emisit milites.

[28] Teii, cum in oculis populatio esset, oratores cum infulis et uelamentis ad Romanum miserunt. quibus purgantibus ciuitatem omnis facti dictique hostilis aduersus Romanos, et iuuisse eos commeatu classem hostium arguit, et quantum uini Polyxenidae promisissent; quae si eadem Romanae classi darent, reuocaturum se a populatione militem; si minus, pro hostibus eos habiturus. hoc tam triste responsum cum rettulissent legati, uocatur in contionem a magistratibus populus, ut, quid agerent, consultarent. eo forte die

Polyxenidas cum regia classe a Colophone profectus postquam mouisse a Samo Romanos audiuit et ad Myonnesum piratas persecutos Teiorum agrum depopulari, naues in Geraestico portu stare, ipse aduersus Myonnesum in insula — Macrin nautici uocant — ancoras portu occulto iecit. inde ex propinquo explorans, quid hostes agerent, primo in magna spe fuit, quem ad modum Rhodiam classem ad Samum circumsessis ad exitum faucibus portus expugnasset, sic et Romanam expugnaturum. nec est dissimilis natura loci: promunturiis coeuntibus inter se ita clauditur portus, ut uix duae simul inde naues possint exire. [inde] nocte occupare fauces Polyxenidas in animo habebat, et denis nauibus ad promunturia stantibus, quae ab utroque cornu in latera exeuntium nauium pugnarent, ex cetera classe, sicut ad Panhormum fecerat, armatis in littora expositis terra marique simul hostis opprimere. quod non uanum ei consilium fuisset, ni, cum Teii facturos se imperata promisissent, ad accipiendos commeatus aptius uisum esset Romanis in eum portum, qui ante urbem est, classem transire. dicitur et Eudamus Rhodius uitium alterius portus ostendisse, cum forte duae naues in arto ostio implicitos remos fregissent; et inter alia id quoque mouit praetorem, ut traduceret classem, quod ab terra periculum erat, haud procul inde Antiocho statua habente.

[29] Traducta classe ad urbem ignaris omnibus egressi milites nautaeque sunt ad commeatus et uinum maxime diuidendum in naues, cum medio forte diei agrestis quidam ad praetorem adductus nuntiat alterum iam diem classem stare ad insulam Macrin, et paulo ante uisas quasdam moueri tamquam ad profectionem naues. re subita percussus praetor tubicines canere iubet, ut, si qui per agros palati essent, redirent; tribunos in urbem mittit ad cogendos milites nautasque in naues. haud secus quam in repentino incendio aut capta urbe trepidatur, aliis in urbem currentibus ad suos reuocandos, aliis ex urbe naues cursu repetentibus, incertisque clamoribus, quibus ipsis tubae obstreperent, turbatis imperiis tandem concursum ad naues est. uix suas quisque noscere aut adire prae tumultu poterat; trepidatumque cum periculo et in mari et in terra foret, ni partibus diuisis Aemilius cum praetoria naue primum e portu in altum euectus, excipiens insequentis, suo quamque ordine in frontem instruxisset, Eudamus Rhodiaque classis substitissent ad terram, ut et sine trepidatione conscenderent et, ut quaeque parata esset, exiret naus. ita et explicuere ordinem primae in conspectu praetoris, et coactum agmen ab Rhodiis est, instructaque acies, uelut cernerent regiones, in altum processit. inter Myonnesum et Corycum promunturium erant, cum hostem conspexere. et regia classis, binis in ordinem nauibus longo agmine ueniens, et ipsa aciem aduersam explicuit laeua tantum euecta cornu, ut amplecti et circuire dextrum cornu Romanorum posset. quod ubi Eudamus, qui cogeat agmen, uidit, non posse aequare ordinem Romanos et tantum non iam circui ab dextro cornu, concitat naues — et erant Rhodiae longe omnium celerrimae tota classe —, aequatoque cornu praetoriae nauis, in qua Polyxenidas erat, suam obiecit.

[30] Iam totis classibus simul ab omni parte pugna conserta erat. ab Romanis octoginta naues pugnabant, ex quibus Rhodiae duae et uiginti erant; hostium classis undenonaginta nauium fuit; maximae formae naues tres hexeres habebat, duas hepteres. robore nauium et uirtute militum Romani longe praestabant, Rhodiae naues agilitate et arte gubernatorum et scientia remigum; maximo tamen terrori hostibus fuere, quae ignes prae se portabant, et quod unum iis ad Panhormum circumuentis saluti fuerat, id tum maximum momentum ad uictoriam fuit. nam metu ignis aduersi regiae naues, ne prorae concurrerent, cum declinassent, neque ipsae ferire rostro hostem poterant, et obliquas se ipsae ad ictus praebebant, et si qua concurrerat, obruebatur infuso igni, magisque ad incendium quam ad proelium trepidabant. plurimum tamen, quae solet, militum uirtus in bello ualuit. mediam namque aciem hostium Romani cum rupissent, circumuecti ab tergo pugnantibus aduersus Rhodios regiis sese obiecere; momentoque temporis et media acies Antiochi et laeua cornu circumuentae naues mergebantur. dextera pars integra sociorum magis clade quam suo periculo terrebantur; ceterum, postquam alias circumuentas, praetoriam nauem Polyxenidae relictis sociis uela dantem uidere, sublatis raptim dolonibus — et erat secundus petentibus Ephesum uentus — capessunt fugam quadraginta duabus nauibus in ea pugna amissis, quarum decem tres captae in potestatem hostium uenerunt, ceterae incensae aut demersae. Romanorum duae naues fractae sunt, uulneratae aliquot; Rhodia una capta memorabili casu. nam cum rostro percussisset

Sidoniam nauem, ancora, ictu ipso excussa e naue sua, unco dente, uelut ferrea manu iniecta, adligauit alterius proram; inde tumultu iniecto cum diuellere se ab hoste cupientes inhiherent Rhodii, tractum ancorale et implicitum remis latus alterum deterisit; debilitatam ea ipsa, quae icta cohaeserat nauis cepit. hoc maxime modo ad Myonnesum nauali proelio pugnatum est.

Regillus Aemilius post uictoriam naualem profectus Ephesum, directis ante portum nauibus, cum confessionem ultimam concessi maris hosti expressisset, Chium, quo ante nauale proelium cursum ab Samo intenderat, nauigat. ibi naues in proelio quassatas cum refecisset, L. Aemilium Scaurum cum triginta nauibus Hellespontum ad exercitum traiciendum misit, Rhodios parte praedae et spoliis naualibus decoratos domum redire iubet. Rhodii impigre praeuertere ad traiciendas copias consulis [iere]; atque eo quoque functi officio, tum demum Rhodum rediere. classis Romana ab Chio Phocaeam traiecit. in sinu maris intimo posita haec urbs est, oblonga forma; duum milium et quingentorum passuum spatium murus amplectitur, coit deinde ex utraque parte in artiores uelut cuneum; Lamptera ipsi appellant. mille et ducentos passus ibi latitudo patet; inde lingua in altum mille passuum excurrens medium fere sinum uelut nota distinguit; ubi cohaeret faucibus angustis, duos in utramque regionem uersos portus tutissimos habet. qui in meridiem uergit, Naustathmon ab re appellant, quia ingentem uim nauium capit; alter prope ipsum Lamptera est.

[32] Hos portus tutissimos cum occupasset Romana classis, priusquam aut scalis aut operibus moenia adgrederetur, mittendos censuit praetor, qui principum magistratuumque animos temptarent. postquam obstinatos uidit, duobus simul locis oppugnare est adortus. altera pars infrequens aedificiis erat; templa deum aliquantum tenebant loci; ea prius ariete admoto quaterne muros turresque coepit; dein cum eo multitudo occurreret ad defendendum, altera quoque parte admotus aries; et iam utrimque sternebantur muri. ad quorum casum cum impetum Romani milites per ipsam stragem ruinarum facerent, alii scalis etiam ascensum in muros temptarent, adeo obstinate resistere oppidani, ut facile appareret plus in armis et uirtute quam in moenibus auxilii esse. coactus ergo periculo militum praetor receptui cani iussit, ne obiceret incautos furentibus desperatione ac rabie. dirempto proelio, ne tum quidem ad quietem uersi, sed undique omnes ad munienda et obmolienda, quae ruinis strata erant, concurrerunt. huic operi intentis superuenit Q. Antonius a praetore missus, qui castigata pertinacia eorum maiorem curam Romanis quam illis ostenderet esse, ne in perniciem urbis pugnaretur; si absistere furore uellent, potestatem iis dari eadem condicione, qua prius C. Liuii in fidem uenissent, se tradendi. haec cum audissent, quinque dierum spatio ad deliberandum sumpto, temptata interim spe auxilii ab Antiocho, postquam legati missi ad regem nihil in eo praesidii esse retulerant, tum portas aperuerunt, pacti, ne quid hostile paterentur. cum signa in urbem inferrentur et pronuntiasset praetor parci se deditis uelle, clamor undique est sublatus, indignum facinus esse, Phocaeensis, numquam fidos socios, semper infestos hostis, impune eludere. ab hac uoce uelut signo a praetore dato ad diripiendam urbem passim discurrunt. Aemilius primo resistere et reuocare dicendo captas, non deditas diripi urbes, et in iis tamen imperatoris, non militum arbitrium esse. postquam ira et auaritia imperio potentiora erant, praeconibus per urbem missis liberos omnes in forum ad se conuenire iubet, ne uiolarentur; et in omnibus, quae ipsius potestatis fuerunt, fides constitit praetoris: urbem agrosque et suas leges iis restituit; et, quia hiems iam appetebat, Phocaeae portus ad hibernandum classi delegit.

[33] Per idem fere tempus consuli, transgresso Aeniorum Maronitarumque finis, nuntiatur uictam regiam classem ad Myonnesum relictamque a praesidio Lysimachiam esse. id multo quam de nauali uictoria laetius fuit, utique postquam eo uenerunt, refertaque urbs omnium rerum commeatibus uelut in aduentum exercitus praeparatis eos excepit, ubi inopiam ultimam laboremque in obsidenda urbe proposuerant sibi. paucos dies statua habuere, impedimenta aegrique ut consequerentur, qui passim per omnia Thraciae castella, fessi morbis ac longitudine uiae, relictis erant. receptis omnibus ingressi rursus iter per Chersonesum Hellespontum perueniunt. ubi omnibus cura regis Eumenis ad traiciendum praeparatis uelut in pacata littora nullo prohibente, aliis alio delatis nauibus, sine tumultu traiecere. ea uero res Romanis auxit animos, concessum sibi transitum cernentibus in Asiam, quam rem magni certaminis futuram crediderant. statua deinde ad Hellespontum aliquamdiu habuerunt, quia dies forte, quibus ancilia mouentur, religiosi ad iter inciderant. idem dies P. Scipionem propiore etiam religione, quia salius erat, diiunxerant ab exercitu; causaque et is ipse morae erat, dum consequeretur.

[34] Per eos forte dies legatus ab Antiocho in castra uenerat Byzantius Heraclides, de pace adferens mandata; quam impetrabilem fore magnam ei spem attulit mora et cunctatio Romanorum, quos, simul Asiam attigissent, effuso agmine ad castra regia ituros crediderat. statuit tamen non prius consulem adire quam P. Scipionem, et ita mandatum ab rege erat. in eo maximam spem habebat, praeterquam quod et magnitudo animi et satietas gloriae placabilem eum maxime faciebat, notumque erat gentibus, qui uictor ille in Hispania, qui deinde in Africa fuisset, etiam quod filius eius captus in potestate regis erat. is ubi et quando et quo casu captus sit, sicut pleraque alia, parum inter auctores constat. alii principio belli, a Chalcide Oreum petentem, circumuentum ab regiis nauibus tradunt; alii, postquam transitum in Asiam est, cum turma Fregellana missum exploratum ad regia castra, effuso obuiam equitatu cum reciperet sese, in eo tumultu delapsus ex equo cum duobus equitibus oppressum, ita ad regem deductum esse. illud satis constat, si pax cum populo Romano maneret hospitiumque priuatim regi cum Scipionibus esset, neque liberalius neque benignius haberi colique adolescentem, quam cultus est, potuisse. ob haec cum aduentum P. Scipionis legatus expectasset, ubi is uenit, consulem adit petitque, ut mandata audiret.

[35] Aduocato frequenti consilio legati uerba sunt audita. is, multis ante legationibus ultro citroque nequiquam de pace missis, eam ipsam fiduciam impetrandi sibi esse dixit, quod priores legati nihil impetrassent: Zmyrnam enim et Lampsacum et Alexandriam Troadem et Lysimachiam in Europa iactatas in illis disceptationibus esse; quarum Lysimachia iam cessisse regem, ne quid habere eum in Europa dicerent; eas quae in Asia sint ciuitates tradere paratum esse, et si quas alias Romani, quod suarum partium fuerint, uindicare ab imperio regio uelint; impensae quoque in bellum factae partem dimidiam regem praestaturum populo Romano. hae condiciones erant pacis; reliqua oratio fuit, ut memores rerum humanarum et suae fortunae moderarentur et alienam ne urgerent. finirent Europa imperium, id quoque immensum esse; et parari singula acquirendo facilius potuisse quam uniuersa teneri posse; quod si Asiae quoque partem aliquam abstrahere uelint, dummodo non dubiis regionibus finiant, uinci suam temperantiam Romana cupiditate pacis et concordiae causa regem passurum. ea, quae legato magna ad pacem impetrandam uidebantur, parua Romanis uisa: nam et impensam, quae in bellum facta esset, omnem praestare regem aequum censebant, cuius culpa bellum excitatum esset, et non Ionia modo atque Aeolide deduci debere regia praesidia, sed sicut Graecia omnis liberata esset, ita, quae in Asia sint, omnes liberari urbes; id aliter fieri non posse, quam ut cis Taurum montem possessione Asiae Antiochus cedat.

[36] Legatus postquam nihil aequi in consilio impetrare se censebat, priuatim — sic enim imperatum erat — P. Scipionis temptare animum est conatus. omnium primum filium ei sine pretio redditurum regem dixit; deinde ignarus et animi Scipionis et moris Romani, auri pondus ingens <est> pollicitus, et nomine tantum regio excepto societatem omnis regni, si per eum pacem impetrasset. ad ea Scipio: ‘quod Romanos omnis, quod me, ad quem missus es, ignoras, minus miror, cum te fortunam eius, a quo uenis, ignorare cernam. Lysimachia tenenda erat, ne Chersonesum intraremus, aut ad Hellespontum obsistendum, ne in Asiam traiceremus, si pacem tamquam ab sollicitis de belli euentu petituri eratis; concesso uero in Asiam transitu et non solum frenis, sed etiam iugo accepto quae disceptatio ex aequo, cum imperium patiendum sit, relicta est? ego ex munificentia regia maximum donum filium habebō; aliis, deos precor, ne umquam fortuna egeat mea; animus certe non egebit. pro tanto in me munere gratum me in se esse sentiet, si priuatam gratiam pro priuato beneficio desiderabit; publice nec habebō quicquam ab illo nec dabo. quod in praesentia dare possim, fidele consilium est. abi, nuntia meis uerbis, bello absistat, pacis condicionem nullam recuset.’ nihil ea mouerunt regem, tutam fore belli aleam ratum, quando perinde ac uicto iam sibi leges dicerentur. omissa igitur in praesentia mentione pacis totam curam in belli apparatus intendit.

[37] Consul omnibus praeparatis ad proposita exsequenda cum ex statuiis mouisset, Dardanum primum, deinde Rhoeteum utraque ciuitate obuiam effusa uenit. inde Ilium processit, castrisque in campo, qui est subiectus moenibus, positus in urbem arcemque cum escendisset, sacrificauit Mineruae praesidi arcis et Iliensibus in omni rerum uerborumque honore ab se oriundos Romanos praeferentibus et Romanis laetis origine sua. inde profecti sextis castris ad caput Caici amnis peruenerunt. eo et Eumenes rex, primo conatus ab Hellesponto reducere classem in hiberna Elaeam, aduersis deinde uentis cum aliquot diebus superare Lecton promunturium non potuisset, in terram egressus, ne deesset principiis rerum, qua proximum fuit, in castra Romana cum parua manu contendit. ex castris Pergamum remissus ad commeatus expediendos, tradito frumento quibus iusserat consul, in eadem statua rediit. inde plurium dierum praeparatis cibariis consilium erat ire ad hostem, priusquam hiems opprimeret.

Regia castra circa Thyatiram erant. ubi cum audisset Antiochus P. Scipionem aegrum Elaeam delatum, legatos, qui filium ad eum reducerent, misit. non animo solum patrio gratum munus, sed corpori quoque salubre gaudium fuit; satiatusque tandem complexu filii ‘renuntiate’ inquit ‘gratias regi me agere, referre aliam gratiam nunc non posse, quam ut suadeam, ne ante in aciem descendat, quam in castra me redisse audierit.’ quamquam sexaginta milia peditum, plus duodecim milia equitum animos interdum ad spem certaminis faciebant, motus tamen Antiochus tanti auctoritate uiri, in quo ad incertos belli euentus omnis fortunae posuerat subsidia, recepit se et transgressus Phrygium amnem circa Magnesiam, quae ad Sipylum est, posuit castra; et ne, si extrahere tempus uellet, munimenta Romani temptarent, fossam sex cubita altam, duodecim latam cum duxisset, extra duplex uallum fossae circumdedit, interiore labro murum cum turribus crebris obiecit, unde facile arceri transitu fossae hostis posset.

[38] Consul circa Thyatiram esse regem ratus, continuis itineribus quinto die ad Hyrcanum campum descendit. inde cum profectum audisset, secutus uestigia citra Phrygium amnem, quattuor milia ab hoste posuit castra. eo mille ferme equites — maxima pars Gallograeci erant, et Dahae quidam aliarumque gentium sagittarii equites intermixti — tumultuose amni traiecto in stationes impetum fecerunt. primo turbauerunt incompositos; dein, cum longius certamen fieret <et> Romanorum ex propinquis castris facili subsidio cresceret numerus, regii fessi iam et pluris non sustinentes recipere se conati circa ripam amnis, priusquam flumen ingrederentur, ab instantibus tergo aliquot interfecti sunt. biduum deinde silentium fuit neutris transgredientibus amnem; tertio post die Romani simul omnes transgressi sunt et duo milia fere et quingentos passus ab hoste posuerunt castra. metantibus et muniendo occupatis tria milia delecta equitum peditumque regionum magno terrore ac tumultu aduenere; aliquanto pauciores in statione erant; hi tamen per se, nullo  munimento castrorum milite auocato, et primo aequum proelium sustinuerunt, et crescente certamine pepulerunt hostis centum ex iis occisis, centum ferme captis. per quadriduum insequens instructae utrimque acies pro uallo stetere; quinto die Romani processere in medium campi; Antiochus nihil promouit signa, ita ut extremi minus mille pedes a uallo abessent.

[39] Consul postquam detractari certamen uidit, postero die in consilium aduocauit, quid sibi faciendum esset, si Antiochus pugnandi copiam non faceret? instare hiemem; aut sub pellibus habendos milites fore, aut, si concedere in hiberna uellet, differendum esse in aestatem bellum. nullum umquam hostem Romani aeque contempserunt. conclamatum undique est, duceret extemplo et uteretur ardore militum, qui, tamquam non pugnandum cum tot milibus hostium, sed par numerus pecorum trucidandus esset, per fossas, per uallum castra inuadere parati erant, si in proelium hostis non exiret. Cn. Domitius ad explorandum iter, et qua parte adiri hostium uallum posset, missus, postquam omnia certa rettulit, postero die propius admoueri castra placuit; tertio signa in medium campi prolata et instrui acies coepta est. nec Antiochus ultra tergiuersandum ratus, ne et suorum animos minueret detractando certamen et hostium spem augeret, et ipse copias eduxit, tantum progressus a castris, ut dimicaturum appareret.

Romana acies unius prope formae fuit et hominum et armorum genere. duae legiones Romanae, duae socium ac Latini nominis erant; quina milia et quadringenos singulae habebant. Romani mediam aciem, cornua Latini tenuerunt; hastatorum prima signa, dein principum erant, triarii postremos claudebant. extra hanc uelut iustam aciem a parte dextra consul Achaeorum caetratis immixtos auxiliares Eumenis, tria milia ferme peditum, aequata fronte instruxit; ultra eos equitum minus tria milia opposuit, ex quibus Eumenis octingenti, reliquus omnis Romanus equitatus erat; extremos Trallis et Cretensis — quingentorum utrique numerum explebant — statuit. laeuum cornu non egere uidebatur obiectis talibus auxiliis, quia flumen ab ea parte ripaeque deruptae claudebant; quattuor tamen inde turmae equitum oppositae. haec summa copiarum erat Romanis, et duo milia mixtorum Macedonum Thracumque, qui uoluntate secuti erant; hi praesidio castris relictis sunt. XVIelephantos post triarios in subsidio locauerunt; nam praeterquam quod multitudinem regionum elephantorum — erant autem quattuor et quinquaginta — sustinere non uidebantur posse, ne pari quidem numero Indicis Africi resistunt, siue quia magnitudine — longe enim illi praestant — siue robore animorum uincuntur.

adiunxit. addita his ala mille ferme equitum; agema eam uocabant; Medi erant, lecti uiri, et eiusdem regionis mixti multarum gentium equites. continens his grex sedecim elephantorum est oppositus in subsidiis. ab eadem parte, paulum producto cornu, regia cohors erat; argyraspides a genere armorum appellabantur; Dahae deinde, equites sagittarii, mille et ducenti; tum leuis armatura, trium milium, pari ferme numero, pars Cretenses, pars Tralles; duo milia et quingenti Mysi sagittarii his adiuncti erant. extremum cornu claudebant quattuor milia, mixti Cyrtii funditores et Elymaei sagittarii. ab laeuo cornu phalangitis adiuncti erant Gallograeci pedites mille et quingenti et similiter his armati duo milia Cappadocum — ab Ariarathe missi erant regi — ; inde auxiliares mixti omnium generum, duo milia septingenti, et tria milia cataphractorum equitum et mille alii equites, regia ala leuioribus tegumentis suis equorumque, alio haud dissimili habitu; Syri plerique erant Phrygibus et Lydis immixti. ante hunc equitatum falcatae quadrigae et cameli, quos appellant dromadas. his insidebant Arabes sagittarii, gladios tenuis habentes longos quaterna cubita, ut ex tanta altitudine contingere hostem possent. inde alia multitudo, par ei, quae in dextro cornu erat: primi Tarentini, deinde Gallograecorum equitum duo milia et quingenti, inde Neocretes mille et eodem armatu Cares et Cilices mille et quingenti et totidem Tralles et quattuor milia caetratorum: Pisidae erant et Pamphylii et Lycii; tum Cyrtiorum et Elymaeorum paria in dextro cornu locatis auxilia, et sedecim elephantum modico interuallo distantes.

[41] Rex ipse in dextro cornu erat; Seleucum filium et Antipatrum fratris filium in laeuo praeposuit; media acies tribus permissa, Minnioni et Zeuxidi et Philippo, magistro elephantorum. nebula matutina, crescente die leuata in nubes, caliginem dedit; umor inde ab austro uelut * perfudit omnia; quae nihil admodum Romanis, eadem perincommoda regiis erant; nam et obscuritas lucis in acie modica Romanis non adimebat in omnis partes conspectum et umor toto fere graui armatu nihil gladios aut pila hebetabat; regii tam lata acie ne ex medio quidem cornua sua conspicere poterant, nedum extremi inter se conspicerentur, et umor arcus fundasque et iaculorum amenta emollierat. falcatae quoque quadrigae, quibus se perturbaturum hostium aciem Antiochus crediderat, in suos terrorem uerterunt. armatae autem in hunc maxime modum erant: cuspides circa temonem ab iugo decem cubita exstantis uelut cornua habebant, quibus, quidquid obuium daretur, transfigerent, et in extremis iugis binae circa eminebant falces, altera aequata iugo, altera inferior in terram deuexa, illa ut, quidquid ab latere obiceretur, abscederet, haec ut prolapsos subeuntisque contingeret; item ab axibus rotarum utrimque binae eodem modo diuersae deligabantur falces. sic armatas quadrigas, quia, si in extremo aut in medio locatae forent, per suos agendaerant, in prima acie, ut ante dictum est, locauerat rex. quod ubi Eumenes uidit, haud ignarus, quam anceps esset pugnae et auxilii genus, si quis pauorem magis equis iniceret, quam iusta adoriretur pugna, Cretenses sagittarios funditoresque et iaculatores <cum aliquot turmis> equitum non confertos, sed quam maxime possent dispersos excurrere iubet et ex omnibus simul partibus tela ingerere. haec uelut procella partim uulneribus missilium undique coniectorum partim clamoribus dissonis ita consternauit equos, ut repente uelut effrenati passim incerto cursu ferrentur; quorum impetus et leuis armatura et expediti funditores et uelox Cretensis momento declinabant; et eques insequendo tumultum ac pauorem equis camelisque, et ipsis simul consternatis, augebat clamore et ab alia circumstantium turba multiplici adiecto. ita medio inter duas acies campo exiguntur quadrigae; amotoque inani ludibrio, tum demum ad iustum proelium signo utrimque dato concursus est.

[42] Ceterum uana illa res uerae mox cladis causa fuit. auxilia enim subsidiaria, quae proxima locata erant, pauore et consternatione quadrigarum territa et ipsa in fugam uersa nudarunt omnia usque ad cataphractus equites. ad quos cum dissipatis subsidiis peruenisset equitatus Romanus, ne primum quidem impetum sustinuerunt; pars eorum fusi sunt, alii propter grauitatem tegumentorum armorumque oppressi [sunt]. totum deinde laeuum cornu inclinauit, et turbatis auxiliariis, qui inter equitem et quos appellant phalangitas erant, usque ad mediam aciem terror peruenit. ibi simul perturbati ordines et impeditus intercursum suorum usus praelongarum hastarum — sarisas Macedones uocant — , intulere signa Romanae legiones et pila in perturbatos coniecere. ne interpositi quidem elephantum militem Romanum deterrebant, adsuetum iam ab Africis bellis et uitare impetum beluae et ex transuerso aut pilis incessere aut, si propius

subire posset, gladio neruos incidere. iam media acies fere omnis a fronte prostrata erat, et subsidia circumita ab tergo caedebantur, cum in parte alia fugam suorum et prope iam ad ipsa castra clamorem pauentium acceperet. namque Antiochus a dextro cornu, cum ibi fiducia fluminis nulla subsidia cerneret praeter quattuor turmas equitum, et eas, dum applicant se suis, ripam nudantis, impetum in eam partem cum auxiliis et cataphracto equitatu fecit; nec a fronte tantum instabat, sed circumito a flumine cornu iam ab latere urgebat, donec fugati equites primum, dein proximi peditum effuso cursu ad castra compulsi sunt.

[43] Praeerat castris M. Aemilius tribunus militum, M. Lepidi filius, qui post paucos annos pontifex maximus factus est. is qua fugam cernebat suorum, cum praesidio omni occurrit et stare primo, deinde redire in pugnam iubebat pauorem et turpem fugam increpans; minae exinde erant, in perniciem suam caecos ruere, ni dicto parerent; postremo dat suis signum, ut primos fugientium caedant, turbam insequentium ferro et uulneribus in hostem redigant. hic maior timor minorem uicit; ancipiti coacti metu primo constiterunt; deinde et ipsi redire in pugnam, et Aemilius cum suo praesidio — erant autem duo milia uirorum fortium — effuse sequenti regi acriter obstitit, et Attalus, Eumenis frater, ab dextro cornu, quo laeuum hostium primo impetu fugatum fuerat, <ut> ab sinistro fugam suorum et tumultum circa castra uidit, in tempore cum ducentis equitibus aduenit. Antiochus postquam et eos, quorum terga modo uiderat, repetentis pugnam et aliam et a castris et ex acie adfluentem turbam conspexit, in fugam uertit equum. ita utroque cornu uictores Romani per acruos corporum, quos in media maxime acie cumulauerant, ubi et robur fortissimorum uirorum et arma grauitate fugam impedierant, pergunt ad castra diripienda. equites primi omnium Eumenis, deinde et alius equitatus toto passim campo sequuntur hostem et postremos, ut quosque adepti sunt, caedunt. ceterum fugientibus maior pestis, intermixtis quadrigis elephantisque et camelis, erat sua ipsorum turba, cum solutis ordinibus uelut caeci super alios alii ruerent et incursu beluarum obtererentur. in castris quoque ingens et maior prope quam in acie caedes est edita; nam et primorum fuga in castra maxime inclinauit, et huius fiducia multitudinis, qui in praesidio erant, pertinacius pro uallo pugnarunt.

retenti in portis ualloque, quae se impetu ipso capturos crediderant, Romani, postquam tandem perruperunt, ab ira grauiorem ediderunt caedem.

[44] Ad quinquaginta milia peditum caesa eo die dicuntur, equitum tria milia; mille et quadringenti capti et quindecim cum rectoribus elephanti. Romanorum aliquot uulnerati sunt; ceciderunt non plus trecenti pedites, quattuor et uiginti equites et de Eumenis exercitu quinque et uiginti.

Et illo quidem die uictores direptis hostium castris cum magna praeda in sua reuerterunt; postero die spoliabant caesorum corpora et captiuos contrahebant. legati ab Thyatira et Magnesia ab Sipylo ad dedendas urbes uenerunt. Antiochus cum paucis fugiens, in ipso itinere pluribus congregantibus se, modica manu armatorum media ferme nocte Sardis concessit. inde, cum audisset Seleucum filium et quosdam amicorum Apameam progressos, et ipse quarta uigilia cum coniuge ac filia petit Apameam. Xenoni tradita custodia urbis, Timone Lydiae praeposito; quibus spretis consensu oppidanorum et militum, qui in arce erant, legati ad consulem missi sunt.

[45] Sub idem fere tempus et ab Trallibus et a Magnesia, quae super Maeandrum est, et ab Epheso ad dedendas urbes uenerunt. reliquerat Ephesum Polyxenidas audita pugna, et classi usque ad Patara Lyciae peruectus, metu stationis Rhodiarum nauium, quae ad Megisten erant, in terram egressus cum paucis itinere pedestri Syriam petit. Asiae ciuitates in fidem consulis dicionemque populi Romani sese tradebant. Sardibus iam consul erat; eo et P. Scipio ab Elaea, cum primum pati laborem uiae potuit, uenit.

Sub idem fere tempus caduceator ab Antiocho per P. Scipionem a consule petit impetrauitque, ut oratores mittere liceret regi. paucos post dies Zeuxis, qui praefectus Lydiae fuerat, et Antipater, fratris filius, uenerunt. prius Eumene conuento, quem propter uetera certamina auersum maxime a pace credebant esse, et placatiore eo et sua et regis spe inuento, tum P. Scipionem et per eum consulem adierunt; praebitoque iis petentibus frequenti consilio ad mandata edenda, ‘non tam, quid ipsi dicamus, habemus uenimus’ inquit Zeuxis, ‘quam ut a uobis quaeramus, Romani, quo piaculo expiare errorem regis, pacem ueniamque impetrare a uictoribus possimus. maximo semper animo uictis regibus populisque ignouistis; quanto id maiore et placatiore animo decet uos facere in hac uictoria, quae uos dominos orbis terrarum fecit? positis iam aduersus omnes mortales certaminibus haud secus quam deos consulere et parcere uos generi humano oportet.’ iam antequam legati uenirent, decretum erat, quid responderetur. respondere Africanum placuit. is in hunc modum locutus fertur: ‘Romani ex iis, quae in deum immortalium potestate erant, ea habemus, quae dii dederunt; animos, qui nostrae mentis sunt, eosdem in omni fortuna gessimus gerimusque, neque eos secundae res extulerunt nec aduersae minuerunt. eius rei, ut alios omittam, Hannibalem uestrum uobis testem darem, nisi uos ipsos dare possem. postquam traiecimus Hellespontum, priusquam castra regia, priusquam aciem uideremus, cum communis Mars et incertus belli euentus esset, de pace uobis agentibus quas pares paribus ferebamus condiciones, easdem nunc uictores uictis ferimus: Europa abstinete; Asia omni, quae cis Taurum montem est, decedite. pro impensis deinde in bellum factis quindecim milia talentum Euboicorum dabitis, quingenta praesentia, duo milia et quingenta, cum senatus populusque Romanus pacem comprobauerint; <milia> deinde talentum per duodecim annos. Eumeni quoque reddi quadringenta talenta et quod frumenti reliquum ex eo, quod patri debitum est, placet. haec cum pepigerimus, facturos uos ut pro certo habeamus, erit quidem aliquod pignus, si obsides uiginti nostro arbitratu dabitis; sed numquam satis liquebit nobis ibi pacem esse populo Romano, ubi Hannibal erit; eum ante omnia deposcimus. Thoantem quoque Aetolum concitorem Aetolici belli, qui et illorum fiducia uos et uestra illos in nos armauit, dedetis et cum eo Mnasilochum Acarnana et Chalcidensis Philonem et Eubulidam. in deteriore sua fortuna pacem faciet rex, quia serius facit, quam facere potuit. si nunc moratus fuerit, sciat regum maiestatem difficiliter ab summo fastigio ad medium detrahi quam a mediis ad ima praecipitari.’ cum iis mandatis ab rege missi erant legati, ut omnem pacis condicionem acciperent; itaque Romam mitti legatos placuit. consul in hiberna exercitum Magnesiam ad Maeandrum et Trallis Ephesumque diuisit. Ephesum ad consulem paucos post dies obsides ab rege adducti sunt, et legati, qui Romam irent, uenerunt. Eumenes quoque eodem tempore profectus est Romam, quo legati regis. secutae eos sunt legationes omnium Asiae populorum.

[46] Dum haec in Asia geruntur, duo fere sub idem tempus cum triumphi spe proconsules de prouinciis Romam redierunt, Q. Minucius ex Liguribus, M'. Acilius ex Aetolia. auditis utriusque rebus gestis Minucio negatus triumphus, Acilio magno consensu decretus; isque triumphans de rege Antiocho et Aetolis urbem est inuectus. praelata in eo triumpho sunt signa militaria ducenta triginta, et argenti infecti tria milia pondo, signati tetrachmum Atticum centum decem tria milia, cistophori ducenta undequinquaginta, uasa argentea caelata multa magnique ponderis; tulit et suppellectilem regiam argenteam ac uestem magnificam, coronas aureas, dona sociarum ciuitatum, quadraginta quinque, spolia omnis generis. captiuos nobiles, Aetolos et regios duces, sex et triginta duxit. Damocritus, Aetolorum dux, paucos ante dies, cum e carcere noctu effugisset, in ripa Tiberis consecutis custodibus, priusquam comprehenderetur, gladio se transfixit. milites tantum, qui sequerentur currum, defuerunt; alioqui magnificus et spectaculo et fama rerum triumphus fuit.

Huius triumphi minuit laetitiam nuntius ex Hispania tristis, aduersa pugna in Bastetanis ductu L. Aemilii proconsulis apud oppidum Lyconem cum Lusitanis sex milia de Romano exercitu cecidisse, ceteros pauentis intra uallum compulso aegre castra defendisse et in modum fugientium magnis itineribus in agrum pacatum reductos. haec ex Hispania nuntiata. ex Gallia legatos Placentinorum et Cremonensium L. Aurunculeius praetor in senatum introduxit. iis querentibus inopiam colonorum, aliis belli casibus, aliis morbo absumptis, quosdam taedio accolarum Gallorum reliquisse colonias, decreuit senatus, uti C. Laelius consul, si ei uideretur, sex milia familiarum conscriberet, quae in eas colonias diuiderentur, et ut L. Aurunculeius praetor triumuiros crearet ad eos colonos deducendos. creati M. Atilius Serranus L. Ualerius P. F. Flaccus L. Ualerius C. F. Tappo.

[47] Haud ita multo post, cum iam consularium comitiorum appeteret tempus, C. Laelius consul ex Gallia Romam rediit. is non solum ex facto absente se senatus consulto in supplementum Cremonae et Placentiae colonos scripsit, sed, ut nouae coloniae duae in agrum, qui Boiorum fuisset, deducerentur, et rettulit et auctore eo patres censuerunt.

eodem tempore litterae L. Aemilii praetoris adlatae de nauali pugna ad Myonnesum facta, et L. Scipionem consulem in Asiam exercitum traiecisse. uictoriae naualis ergo in diem unum supplicatio decreta est, in alterum diem, quod exercitus Romanus tum primum in Asia posuisset castra, ut ea res prospera et laeta eueniret. uicenis maioribus hostiis in singulas supplicationes sacrificare consul est iussus. inde consularia comitia magna contentione habita. M. Aemilius Lepidus petebat aduersa omnium fama, quod prouinciam Siciliam petendi causa non consulto senatu, ut sibi id facere liceret, reliquisset. petebant cum eo M. Fuluius Nobilior Cn. Manlius <Uulso> M. Ualerius Messalla. Fuluius consul unus creatur, cum ceteri centurias non explessent, isque postero die Cn. Manlium Lepido deiecto — nam Messalla iacuit — collegam dixit. praetores exinde facti duo Q. Fabii, Labeo et Pictor — Pictor flamen Quirinalis eo anno inauguratus fuerat — , M. Sempronius Tuditanus Sp. Postumius Albinus L. Plautius Hypsaesus L. Baebius Dives.

[48] M. Fuluius Nobiliore et Cn. Manlio Uulsone consulibus Ualerius Antias auctor est rumorem celebrem Romae fuisse et paene pro certo habitum, recipiendi Scipionis adulescentis causa consulem L. Scipionem et cum eo P. Africanum in colloquium euocatos regis et ipsos comprehensos esse, et ducibus captis confestim ad castra Romana exercitum ductum, eaque expugnata et deletas omnis copias Romanorum esse. ob haec Aetolos sustulisse animos et abnuisse imperata facere, principesque eorum in Macedoniam et in Dardanos et in Thraciam ad conducenda mercede auxilia profectos. haec qui nuntiarent Romam, A. Terentium Uarronem et M. Claudium Lepidum ab A. Cornelio propraetore ex Aetolia missos esse. subtextit deinde fabulae huic legatos Aetolos in senatu inter cetera hoc quoque interrogatos esse, unde audissent imperatores Romanos in Asia captos ab Antiocho rege et exercitum deletum esse; Aetolos respondisse ab suis legatis se, qui cum consule fuerint, certiores factos. rumoris huius quia neminem alium auctorem habeo, neque adfirmata res mea opinione sit nec pro uana praetermissa.

[49] Aetoli legati in senatum introducti, cum et causa eos sua et fortuna hortaretur, ut confitendo seu culpaee seu errori ueniam supplices peterent, orsi a beneficiis in populum Romanum et prope exprobrantes uirtutem suam in Philippo bello et offenderunt aures insolentia sermonis et eo, uetera et oblitterata repetendo, rem adduxerunt, ut haud paulo plurium maleficiorum gentis quam beneficiorum memoria subiret animos patrum, et quibus misericordia opus erat, iram et odium irritarent. interrogati ab uno senatore, permetterentne arbitrium de se populo Romano, deinde ab altero, habiturine eosdem quos populus Romanus socios et hostis essent, nihil ad ea respondentes egredi templo iussi sunt. conclamatum deinde prope ab uniuerso senatu est totos adhuc Antiochi Aetolos esse et ex unica ea spe pendere animos eorum; itaque bellum cum haud dubiis hostibus gerendum perdomandosque feroces animos esse. illa etiam res accendit, quod eo ipso tempore, quo pacem ab Romanis petebant, Dolopiae atque Athamaniae bellum inferebant. senatus consultum in M'. Acilii sententiam, qui Antiochum Aetolosque deuicerat, factum est, ut Aetoli eo die iuberentur proficisci ab urbe et intra quintum decimum diem Italia excedere. A. Terentius Uarro ad custodiendum iter eorum missus, denuntiatumque, si qua deinde legatio ex Aetolis, nisi permissu imperatoris, qui eam prouinciam obtineret, et cum legato Romano uenisset Romam, pro hostibus omnis futuros. ita dimissi Aetoli.

[50] De prouinciis deinde consules rettulerunt; sortiri eos Aetoliam et Asiam placuit; qui Asiam sortitus esset, exercitus ei, quem L. Scipio haberet, est decretus et in eum supplementum quattuor milia peditum Romanorum, ducenti equites, et sociorum ac Latini nominis octo milia peditum, quadringenti equites; his copiis ut bellum cum Antiocho gereret. alteri consuli exercitus, qui erat in Aetolia, est decretus, et ut in supplementum scriberet permissum ciuium sociorumque eundem numerum, quem collega. naues quoque idem consul, quae priore anno paratae erant, ornare iussus ac ducere secum; nec cum Aetolis solum bellum gerere, sed etiam in Cephallaniam insulam traicere. mandatum eidem, ut, si per commodum rei publicae facere posset, ut ad comitia Romam ueniret; nam, praeterquam quod magistratus annui subrogandi essent, censores quoque placere creari. si qua res eum teneret, senatum certiores faceret se ad comitiorum tempus occurrere non posse. Aetolia M. Fuluius, Asia Cn. Manlius sorte euenit. praetores deinde sortiti sunt, Sp. Postumius Albinus urbanam et inter peregrinos, M. Sempronius Tuditanus Siciliam, Q. Fabius Pictor, flamen Quirinalis, Sardiniam, Q. Fabius Labeo classem, L. Plautius Hypsaeus Hispaniam citeriorem, L. Baebius Diues Hispaniam ulteriorem. Siciliae legio una et classis, quae in ea prouincia erat, decreta, et ut duas decumas frumenti nouus praetor imperaret Siculis; earum alteram in Asiam, alteram in Aetoliam mitteret. idem ab Sardis exigi atque ad eosdem exercitus id frumentum, ad quos Siculum, deportari iussum. L. Baebio supplementum in Hispaniam datum mille Romani pedites, equites quinquaginta, et sex milia peditum Latini nominis, ducenti equites; Plautio Hypsaeo in Hispaniam citeriorem mille Romani dati sunt pedites, duo milia socium Latini nominis et ducenti equites; cum his supplementis ut singulas legiones duae Hispaniae haberent. prioris anni magistratibus C. Laelio cum suo exercitu prorogatum in annum imperium est; prorogatum et P. Iunio propraetori in Etruria cum eo exercitu, qui in prouincia esset, et M. Tuccio propraetori in Brutiis et Apulia.

[51] Priusquam in prouincias praetores irent, certamen inter P. Licinium pontificem maximum fuit et Q. Fabium Pictorem flaminem Quirinalem, quale patrum memoria inter L. Metellum et Postumium Albinum fuerat. consulem illum cum C. Lutatio collega in Siciliam ad classem proficiscentem ad sacra retinuerat Metellus, pontifex maximus; praetorem hunc, ne in Sardiniam proficisceretur, P. Licinius tenuit. et in senatu et ad populum magnis contentionibus certatum, et imperia inhibita ultro citroque, et pignera capta, et multae dictae, et tribuni appellati, et prouocatum ad populum est. religio ad postremum uicit; ut dicto audiens esset flamen pontifici iussus; et multa iussu populi ei remissa. ira prouinciae ereptae praetorem magistratu abdicare se conantem patres auctoritate sua deterruerunt et, ut ius inter peregrinos diceret, decreuerunt. dilectibus deinde intra paucos dies — neque enim multi milites legendi erant — perfectis consules praetoresque in prouincias proficiscuntur. fama dein de rebus in Asia gestis temere uulgata sine auctore, et post dies paucos nuntii certi litteraeque imperatoris Romam adlatae, quae non tantum gaudium ab recenti metu attulerunt — desierant enim uictum in Aetolia <regem> metuere — quam a uetere fama, quod ineuntibus id bellum grauis hostis et suis uiribus, et quod Hannibalem rectorem militiae haberet, uisus fuerat. nihil tamen aut de consule mittendo in Asiam mutandum aut minuendas eius copias censuerunt metu, ne cum Gallis foret bellandum.

[52] Haud multo post M. Aurelius Cotta legatus L. Scipionis cum Antiochi regis legatis et Eumenes rex Rhodique Romam uenerunt. Cotta in senatu primum, deinde in contione iussu patrum, quae acta in Asia essent, exposuit. supplicatio inde in triduum decreta est, et quadraginta maiores hostiae immolari iussae. tum omnium primum Eumeni senatus datus est. is cum breuiter et egisset gratias patribus, quod obsidione se ac fratrem exemissent regnumque ab iniuriis Antiochi uindicassent, et gratulatus esset, quod terra marique res prospere gessissent, quodque regem Antiochum fusum fugatumque et exutum castris prius Europa, post et Asia, quae cis Taurum montem est, expulissent, sua deinde merita malle eos ex imperatoribus suis legatisque quam se commemorante cognoscere dixit. haec approbantibus cunctis iubentibusque dicere ipsum, ommissa in id uerecundia, quid sibi ab senatu populoque Romano tribui aequum censeret; propensius cumulatusque, si quo possit, prout eius merita sint, senatum facturum, ad ea rex, si ab aliis sibi praemiorum optio deferretur, libenter, data modo facultate consulendi senatum Romanum, consilio amplissimi ordinis usum fuisse, ne quid aut immoderate cupisse aut petisse parum modeste uideri posset; uerum enimuero cum ipsi daturi sint, multo magis munificentiam eorum in se fratresque suos ipsorum arbitrii debere esse. nihil hac oratione eius patres conscripti deterriti sunt, quo minus dicere ipsum iuberent, et, cum aliquamdiu hinc indulgentia hinc modestia inter permittentis in uicem non magis mutua quam inexplicabili facilitate certatum esset, Eumenes ex templo excessit. senatus in eadem perstare sententia, ut absurdum esse diceret ignorare regem, quid sperans aut petens uenerit; quae accommodata regno suo sint, ipsum optime scire; Asiam longe melius quam senatum nosse; reuocandum igitur et cogendum, quae uellet quaeque sentiret, expromere.

[53] Reductus a praetore in templum rex et dicere iussus ‘perseuerassem’ inquit ‘tacere, patres conscripti, nisi Rhodiorum legationem mox uocatuos uos scirem, et illis auditis mihi necessitatem fore dicendi. quae quidem eo difficilior oratio erit, quod ea postulata eorum futura sunt, ut non solum nihil, quod contra me sit, sed ne quod ad ipsos quidem proprie pertineat, petere uideantur. agent enim causam ciuitatum Graecarum, et liberari eas dicent

debere. quo impetrato, cui dubium est, quin et a nobis auersuri sint non eas modo ciuitates, quae liberabuntur, sed etiam ueteres stipendiarias nostras, ipsi autem tanto obligatos beneficio uerbo socios, re uera subiectos imperio et obnoxios habituri sint? et, si dis placet, cum has tantas opes affectabunt, dissimulabunt ulla parte id ad se pertinere; uos modo id decere et conueniens esse ante factis dicent. haec uos ne decipiat oratio, prouidendum uobis erit, neue non solum inaequaliter alios nimium deprimatis ex sociis uestris, alios praeter modum extollatis, sed etiam ne, qui aduersus uos arma tulerint, in meliore statu sint, quam socii et amici uestri. quod ad me attinet, in aliis rebus cessisse intra finem iuris mei cuilibet uideri malim, quam nimis pertinaciter in obtinendo eo tetendisse; in certamine autem amicitiae uestrae, beneuolentiae erga uos, honoris, qui ab uobis habebitur, minime aequo animo uinci possum. hanc ego maximam hereditatem a patre accepi, qui primus omnium Asiam Graeciamque incolentium in amicitiam uenit uestram eamque perpetua et constanti fide ad extremum uitae finem perduxit; nec animum dumtaxat uobis fidelem ac bonum praestitit, sed omnibus interfuit bellis, quae in Graecia gessistis, terrestribus naualibus, omni genere commeatum, ita ut nemo sociorum uestrorum ulla parte aequari posset, uos adiuuit; postremo, cum Boeotos ad societatem uestram hortaretur, in ipsa contione intermortuus haud multo post exspirauit. huius ego uestigia ingressus uoluntati quidem et studio in colendis uobis adicere — etenim inexcuperabilia haec erant — nihil potui; rebus ipsis meritisque et impensis officiorum ut superare possem, fortuna tempora Antiochus et bellum in Asia gestum praebuerunt materiam. rex Asiae et partis Europae Antiochus filiam suam in matrimonium mihi dabat; restituebat extemplo ciuitates, quae defecerant a nobis; spem magnam in posterum amplificandi regni faciebat, si secum bellum aduersus uos gessissem. non gloriabor eo, quod nihil in uos deliquerim; illa potius, quae uetustissima domus nostrae uobiscum amicitia digna sunt, referam. pedestribus naualibusque copiis, ut nemo sociorum uestrorum me aequiparare posset, imperatores uestros adiuui; commeatus terra marique suppeditaui; naualibus proeliis, quae multis locis facta sunt, omnibus adfui; nec labori meo nec periculo usquam peperci. quod miserrimum est in bello, obsidionem passus sum, Pergami inclusus cum discrimine ultimo simul uitae regnique. liberatus deinde obsidione, cum alia parte Antiochus alia Seleucus circa arcem regni mei castra haberent, relictis meis rebus tota classe ad Hellespontum L. Scipioni consuli uestro occurri, ut eum in traiciendo exercitu adiuuarem. posteaquam in Asiam exercitus uester est transgressus, numquam a consule abscessi; nemo miles Romanus magis adsiduus in castris fuit uestris quam ego fratresque mei; nulla expeditio, nullum equestre proelium sine me factum est; in acie ibi steti, eam partem sum tutatus, in qua me consul esse uoluit. non sum hoc dicturus, patres conscripti: quis hoc bello meritis erga uos mecum comparari potest? ego nulli omnium neque populorum neque regum, quos in magno honore habetis, non ausim me comparare. Masinissa hostis uobis ante quam socius fuit, nec incolumi regno cum auxiliis suis, sed extorris, expulsus, amissis omnibus copiis, cum turma equitum in castra confugit uestra; tamen eum, quia in Africa aduersus Syphacem et Carthaginienis fideliter atque impigre uobiscum stetit, non in patrium solum regnum restituitis, sed adiuncta opulentissima parte Syphacis regni praepotentem inter Africae reges fecistis. quo tandem igitur nos praemio atque honore digni apud uos sumus, qui numquam hostes, semper socii fuimus? pater, ego, fratres mei non in Asia tantum, sed etiam procul ab domo in Peloponneso in Boeotia in Aetolia, Philippi Antiochi Aetolico bello, terra marique pro uobis arma tulimus. quid ergo postulas? dicat aliquis. ego, patres conscripti, quoniam dicere utique uolentibus uobis parendum est, si uos ea mente ultra Tauri iuga emostis Antiochum, ut ipsi teneretis eas terras, nullos accolas nec finitimos habere quam uos malo, nec ulla re alia tutius stabiliusque regnum meum futurum spero; sed si uobis decedere inde atque deducere exercitus in animo est, neminem digniorem esse ex sociis uestris, qui bello a uobis parta possideat quam me dicere ausim. at enim magnificum est liberare ciuitates seruas. ita opinor, si nihil hostile aduersus uos fecerunt; sin autem Antiochi partis fuerunt, quanto est uestra prudentia et aequitate dignius sociis bene meritis quam hostibus uos consulere?

[54] Grata oratio regis patribus fuit, et facile apparebat munifice omnia et propenso animo facturos. interposita Smyrnaeorum breuis legatio est, quia non aderat quidam Rhodiorum. collaudatis egregie Smyrnaeis, quod omnia ultima pati quam se regi tradere maluissent, introduciti Rhodii sunt. quorum princeps legationis expositis initiis amicitiae cum populo Romano meritisque Rhodiorum Philippi prius, deinde Antiochi bello ‘nihil’ inquit ‘nobis tota nostra actione, patres conscripti, neque difficilior neque molestius est, quam quod cum Eumene nobis disceptatio est, cum quo uno maxime regum et priuatim singulis et, quod magis nos mouet, publicum ciuitati nostrae hospitium est. ceterum non animi nostri, patres conscripti, nos, sed rerum natura, quae potentissima est, disiungit, ut nos liberi etiam aliorum libertatis causam agamus, reges serua omnia et subiecta imperio suo esse uelint. utcumque tamen res sese habet, magis uerecundia nostra aduersus regem nobis obstat, quam ipsa disceptatio aut nobis impedita est aut uobis perplexam deliberationem praebitura uidetur. nam si aliter socio atque amico regi et bene merito hoc ipso in bello, de cuius praemiis agitur, honos haberi nullus posset, nisi liberas ciuitates in seruitutem traderetis ei, esset deliberatio anceps, ne aut regem amicum inhonoratum dimitteretis, aut decederetis instituto uestro gloriamque Philippi bello partam nunc seruitute tot ciuitatum deformaretis; sed ab hac necessitate aut gratiae in amicum minuendae aut gloriae uestrae egregie uos fortuna uindicat. est enim deum benignitate non gloriosa magis quam diues uictoria uestra, quae uos facile isto uelut aere alieno exsoluat. nam et Lycaonia et Phrygia utraque et Pisidia omnis et Chersonesus, quaeque circumiacent Europae, in uestra sunt potestate, quarum una quaelibet regi adiecta multiplicare regnum Eumenis potest, omnes uero datae maximis eum regibus aequare. licet ergo uobis et praemiis belliditare socios et non decedere instituto uestro et meminisse, quem titulum praetenderitis prius aduersus Philippum, nunc aduersus Antiochum belli, quid feceritis Philippo uicto, quid nunc a uobis, non magis quia fecistis, quam quia id uos facere decet, desideretur atque expectetur. alia enim aliis et honesta et probabilis est causa armorum; illi agrum, hi uicos, hi oppida, hi portus oramque aliquam maris ut possideant; uos nec cupistis haec antequam haberetis, nec nunc, cum orbis terrarum in ditione uestra sit, cupere potestis. pro dignitate et gloria apud omne humanum genus, quod uestrum nomen imperiumque iuxta ac deos immortales iam pridem intuetur, pugnistis. quae parare et quaerere arduum fuit, nescio an tueri difficilior sit. gentis uetustissimae nobilissimaeque uel fama rerum

Massiliensis, quos, si natura insita uelut ingenio terrae uinci posset, iam pridem efferassent tot indomitae circumfusae gentes, in eo honore, in ea merito dignitate audimus apud uos esse, ac si medium umbilicum Graeciae incolerent. non enim sonum modo linguae uestitumque et habitum, sed ante omnia mores et leges et ingenium sincerum integrumque a contagione accolarum seruauerunt. terminus est nunc imperii uestri mons Taurus; quidquid intra eum cardinem est, nihil longinquum uobis debet uideri; quo arma uestra peruenerunt, eodem ius hinc profectum perueniat. barbari, quibus pro legibus semper dominorum imperia fuerunt, quo gaudent, reges habeant; Graeci suam fortunam, uestros animos gerunt. domesticis quondam uiribus etiam imperium amplectebantur; nunc imperium, ubi est, ibi ut sit perpetuum, optant; libertatem uestris tueri armis satis habent, quoniam suis non possunt. at enim quaedam ciuitates cum Antiocho senserunt. et aliae prius cum Philippo, et cum Pyrrho Tarentini; ne alios populos enumerem, Carthago libera cum suis legibus est. huic uestro exemplo quantum debeatis, uidete, patres conscripti; inducetis in animum negare Eumenis cupiditati, quod iustissimae irae uestrae negastis. Rhodii <et in hoc> et in omnibus bellis, quae in illa ora gessistis, quam forti fidelique uos opera adiuuerimus, uestro iudicio relinquimus. nunc in pace consilium id adferimus, quod si comprobaritis, magnificentius uos uictoria usos esse quam uicisse omnes existimaturi sint.’ apta magnitudine Romanae oratio uisa est.

[55] Post Rhodios Antiochi legati uocati sunt. ii uulgato petentium ueniam more errorem fassi regis obtestati sunt patres conscriptos, ut suae potius clementiae quam regis culpae qui satis superque poenarum dedisset, memores consulerent; postremo pacem datam a

L. Scipione imperatore, quibus legibus dedisset, confirmarent auctoritate sua. et senatus eam pacem seruandam censuit, et paucos post dies populus iussit. foedus in Capitolio cum Antipatro principe legationis et eodem fratris filio regis Antiochi est ictum.

Auditae deinde et aliae legationes ex Asia sunt. quibus omnibus datum responsum decem legatos more maiorum senatum missurum ad res Asiae disceptandas componendasque; summam tamen hanc fore, ut cis Taurum montem, quae intra regni Antiochi fines fuissent, Eumeni attribuerentur praeter Lyciam Cariamque usque ad Maeandrum amnem; ea ut ciuitatis Rhodiorum essent; ceterae ciuitates Asiae, quae Attali stipendiariae fuissent, eadem uestigal Eumeni penderent; quae uestigales Antiochi fuissent, eae liberae atque immunes essent. decem legatos hos decreuerunt: Q. Minucium Rufum L. Furium Purpurionem Q. Minucium Thermum Ap. Claudium Neronem Cn. Cornelium Merulam M. Iunium Brutum L. Aurunculeium L. Aemilium Paulum P. Cornelium Lentulum P. Aelium Tuberonem.

[56] His, quae praesentis disceptationis essent, libera mandata; de summa rerum senatus constituit. Lycaoniam omnem et Phrygiam utramque et Mysiam <quam Prusia rex ademerat, restituit> regi et Milyas et Lydiam Ioniamque extra ea oppida, quae libera fuissent, quo die cum rege Antiocho pugnatum est, et nominatim Magnesiam ad Sipylum, et Cariam, quae Hydrela appellatur, agrumque Hydrelitanum ad Phrygiam uergentem, et castella uicosque ad Maeandrum amnem et oppida, nisi quae libera ante bellum fuissent, Telmessum item nominatim et castra Telmessium, praeter agrum, qui Ptolemaei Telmessii fuisset. haec omnia, quae supra sunt scripta, regi Eumeni iussa dari. Rhodiis Lycia data extra eundem Telmessum et castra Telmessium et agrum, qui Ptolemaei Telmessii fuisset; hic et ab Eumene et Rhodiis exceptus. ea quoque iis pars Cariae data, quae propior Rhodum insulam trans Maeandrum amnem est, oppida, uici, castella, agri, qui ad Pisidiam uergunt, nisi quae eorum oppida in libertate fuissent pridie, quam cum Antiocho rege in Asia pugnatum est. pro his cum gratias egissent Rhodii, de Solis urbe, quae in Cilicia est, egerunt: Argis et illos, sicut sese, oriundos esse; ab ea germanitate fraternam sibi cum iis caritatem esse; petere hoc extraordinarium munus, ut eam ciuitatem ex seruitute regia eximerent. uocati sunt legati regis Antiochi, actumque cum iis est nec quicquam impetratum testante foedera Antipatro, aduersus quae ab Rhodiis non Solos, sed Ciliciam peti et iuga Tauri transcendendi. reuocatis in senatum Rhodiis, cum quanto opere tenderet legatus regius, exposuissent, adiecerunt, si utique eam rem ad ciuitatis suae dignitatem pertinere censerent Rhodii, senatum omni modo expugnaturum pertinaciam legatorum. tum uero impensius quam ante Rhodii gratias egerunt, cessurosque sese potius arrogantiae Antipatri, quam causam turbandae pacis praebituros dixerunt. ita nihil de Solis mutatum est.

[57] Per eos dies, quibus haec gesta sunt, legati Massiliensium nuntiarunt L. Baebium praetorem in prouinciam Hispaniam proficiscentem ab Liguribus circumuentum, magna parte comitum caesa uulneratum ipsum cum paucis sine lictoribus Massiliam perfugisse et intra triduum exspirasse. senatus ea re audita decreuit, uti P. Iunius Brutus, qui propraetor in Etruria esset, prouincia exercituque traditis uni, cui uideretur, ex legatis, ipse in ulteriorem Hispaniam proficisceretur, eaque ei prouincia esset. hoc senatus consultum litteraeque a Sp. Postumio praetore in Etruriam missae sunt, profectusque in Hispaniam est P. Iunius propraetor. in qua prouincia prius aliquanto, quam successor ueniret, L. Aemilius Paulus, qui postea regem Persea magna gloria uicit, cum priore anno haud prospere rem gessisset, tumultuario exercitu collecto signis collatis cum Lusitanis pugnavit. fusi fugatique hostes; caesa decem octo milia armatorum; duo milia trecenti capti et castra expugnata. huius uictoriae fama tranquilliores in Hispania res fecit. eodem anno ante diem tertium Kal. Ianuarias Bononiam Latinam coloniam ex senatus consulto L. Ualerius Flaccus M. Atilius Serranus L. Ualerius Tappo triumuiro deduxerunt. tria milia hominum sunt deducta; equitibus septuagena iugera, ceteris colonis quinquagena sunt data. ager captus de Gallis Bois fuerat; Galli Tuscos expulerant.

eodem anno censuram multi et clari uiri petierunt. quae res, tamquam in se parum magni certaminis causam haberet, aliam contentionem multo maiorem excitauit. petebant T. Quinctius Flamininus P. Cornelius Cn. F. Scipio L. Ualerius Flaccus M. Porcius Cato M. Claudius Marcellus M'. Acilius Glabrio, qui Antiochum ad Thermopylas Aetolosque deuicerat. in hunc maxime, quod multa congiaria distribuerat, quibus magnam partem hominum obligarat, fauor populi se inclinabat. id cum aegre paterentur tot nobiles, nouum sibi hominem tantum praeferri, P. Sempronius Gracchus et C. Sempronius Rutilus, <tribuni plebis,> ei diem dixerunt, quod pecuniae regiae praedaeque aliquantum captae in Antiochi castris neque in triumpho tulisset, neque in aerarium rettulisset. uaria testimonia legatorum tribunorumque militum erant. M. Cato ante alios testis conspiciebatur; cuius auctoritatem perpetuo tenore uitae partam toga candida eleuabat. is testis, quae uasa aurea atque argentea castris captis inter aliam praedam regiam uidisset, ea se in triumpho negabat uidisse. postremo in huius maxime inuidiam desistere se petitione Glabrio dixit, quando, quod taciti indignarentur nobiles homines, id aequae nouus competitor intestabili periurio incesset.

[58] Centum milium multa irrogata erat; bis de ea certatum est; tertio, cum de petitione destitisset reus, nec populus de multa suffragium ferre uoluit, et tribuni eo negotio destiterunt censores T. Quinctius Flamininus M. Claudius Marcellus creati.

Per eos dies L. Aemilio Regillo, qui classe praefectum Antiochi regis deuicerat, extra urbem in aede Apollinis cum senatus datus esset, auditis rebus gestis eius, quantis cum classibus hostium dimicasset, quot inde naues demersisset aut cepisset, magno consensu patrum triumphus naualis est decretus. triumphauit Kal. Februarii. in eo triumpho undequinquaginta coronae aureae translatae sunt, pecunia nequaquam [tanta] pro specie regii triumphi, tetrachma Attica triginta quattuor milia ducenta, cistophori centum triginta duo milia trecenti. supplicationes deinde fuerunt ex senatus consulto, quod L. Aemilius in Hispania prospere rem publicam gessisset.

Haud ita multo post L. Scipio ad urbem uenit; qui ne cognomini fratris cederet, Asiaticum se appellari uoluit. et in senatu et in contione de rebus ab se gestis disseruit. erant qui fama id maius bellum quam difficultate rei fuisse interpretarentur: uno memorabili proelio debellatum, gloriamque eius uictoriae praefloratam ad Thermopylas esse. ceterum uere aestimanti Aetolicum magis ad Thermopylas bellum quam regium fuit; quota enim parte uirium suarum ibi dimicauit Antiochus? in Asia totius Asiae steterunt uires ab ultimis Orientis finibus omnium gentium contractis auxiliis.

[59] Merito ergo et diis immortalibus, quantus maximus poterat, habitus est honos, quod ingentem uictoriam facilem etiam fecissent, <et> imperatori triumphus est decretus. triumphauit mense intercalario pridie Kal. Martias. qui triumphus spectaculo oculorum maior quam Africani fratris eius fuit, recordatione rerum et aestimatione periculi certaminisque non magis comparandus, quam si imperatorem imperatori aut Antiochum ducem Hannibali conferres. tulit in triumpho signa militaria ducenta uiginti quattuor, oppidorum simulacra centum triginta quattuor, eburneos dentes mille ducentos triginta unum, aureas coronas ducentas triginta quattuor, argenti pondo centum triginta septem milia quadringenta uiginti, tetrachmum Atticorum ducenta uiginti quattuor milia, cistophori trecenta uiginti unum milia septuaginta, nummos aureos Philippeos centum quadraginta milia, uasorum argenteorum — omnia caelata erant — mille pondo et quadringenta uiginti tria, aureorum mille pondo uiginti tria. et duces regii, praefecti, purpurati duo et triginta ante currum ducti. militibus quini uiceni denarii dati, duplex centurioni, triplex equiti. et stipendium militare et frumentum duplex post triumphum datum; <iam> proelio in Asia facto duplex dederat. triumphauit anno fere post, quam consulatu abiit.

[60] Eodem fere tempore et Cn. Manlius consul in Asiam et Q. Fabius Labeo praetor ad classem uenit. ceterum consuli non deerat cum Gallis belli materia. mare pacatum erat deuicto Antiocho, cogitantique Fabio, cui rei potissimum insisteret, ne otiosam prouinciam habuisse uideri posset, optimum uisum est in Cretam insulam traicere. Cydoniatae bellum aduersus Gortynios Gnosiosque gerebant, et captiuorum Romanorum atque Italici generis magnus numerus in seruitute esse per totam insulam dicebatur. classe ab Epheso profectus cum primum Cretae litus attigit, nuntios circa ciuitates misit, ut armis absisterent captiuosque in suis quaeque urbibus agrisque conquisitos reducerent, et legatos mitterent ad se, cum quibus de rebus ad Cretensis pariter Romanosque pertinentibus ageret. nihil magnopere ea Cretenses mouerunt; captiuos praeter Gortynios nulli reddiderunt. Ualerius Antias quattuor milia captiuorum, quia belli minas timuerint, ex tota insula reddita scripsit; eamque causam Fabio, cum rem nullam aliam gessisset, triumphum naualis impetrandi ab senatu fuisse. a Creta Ephesum Fabius redit; inde tribus nauibus in Thraciae oram missis ab Aeno et Maronia praesidia Antiochi deduci iussit, ut in libertate eae ciuitates essent.

LIBER XXXVIII

[1] Dum in Asia bellum geritur, ne in Aetolia quidem res quietae fuerant, principio a gente Athamanum orto. Athamania ea tempestate pulso Amynandro sub praefectis Philippi regio tenebatur praesidio, qui superbo atque immodico imperio desiderium Amynandri fecerant. Exulanti tum Amynandro in Aetolia litteris suorum, indicantium statum Athamaniae, spes recuperandi regni facta est. Remissique ab eo nuntiant principibus Argitheam — id enim caput Athamaniae erat —, si popularium animos satis perspectos haberet, impetrato ab Aetolis auxilio in Athamaniam se <uenturum. Non diffidere sibi facile con>uenturum cum delectis, quod consilium est gentis, et Nicandro praetore. Quos ubi ad omnia paratos esse uidit, certiores suos inde facit, quo die cum exercitu Athamaniam ingressurus esset. Quattuor primo fuerunt coniurati aduersus Macedonum praesidium. Hi senos sibi adiutores ad rem gerendam adsumpserunt; dein paucitate parum freti, quae celandae rei quam agenda aptior erat, parem priori numerum adiecerunt. Ita duo et quinquaginta facti quadrifariam se diuiserunt; pars una Heracleam, altera Tetraphyliam petit, ubi custodia regiae pecuniae esse solita erat, tertia Theudoriam, quarta Argitheam. Ita inter omnis conuenit, ut primo quieti, uelut ad priuatam rem agenda uenissent, in foro obuersarentur; die certa multitudinem omnem conuocarent ad praesidia Macedonum arcibus expellenda. Vbi ea dies aduenit, et Amynander cum mille Aetolis in finibus erat, ex composito quattuor simul locis praesidia Macedonum expulsa, litteraeque in alias urbes passim dimissae, ut uindicarent sese ab impotenti dominatione Philippi et restituerent in patrium ac legitimum regnum. Vndique Macedones expelluntur. Theium oppidum litteris a Xenone praefecto praesidii interceptis et arce ab regiis occupata paucos dies obsidentibus restitit; deinde id quoque traditum Amynandro est, et omnis Athamania in potestate erat praeter Athenaeum castellum, finibus Macedoniae subiectum.

[2] Philippus audita defectione Athamaniae cum sex milibus armatorum profectus ingenti celeritate Gomphos peruenit. Ibi relicta maiore parte exercitus — neque enim ad tanta itinera sufficerent — cum duobus milibus Athenaeum, quod unum a praesidio suo retentum fuerat, peruenit. Inde proximis temptatis cum facile animaduertisset cetera hostilia esse, Gomphos regressus omnibus copiis simul in Athamaniam redit. Xenonem inde cum mille peditibus praemissum Aethopiam occupare iubet, opportune Argithea imminentem; quem ubi teneri ab suis locum uidit, ipse circa templum Iouis Acraei posuit castra. Ibi unum diem foeda tempestate retentus, postero die ducere ad Argitheam intendit. Euntibus extemplo apparuere Athamanes in tumulos imminentis uiae discurrentes. Ad quorum conspectum constitere prima signa, totoque agmine paupor et trepidatio erat, et pro se quisque, quidnam futurum esset, cogitare, si in ualles subiectas rupibus agmen foret demissum. Haec tumultuatio regem cupientem, si se sequerentur, raptim euadere angustias, reuocare primos et eadem, qua uenerat, uia referre coegit signa. Athamanes primo ex interuallo quieti sequebantur; postquam Aetoli se coniunxerunt, hos, ut ab tergo agmini instarent, reliquerunt, ipsi ab lateribus se circumfuderunt, quidam per notas calles breuiore uia praegressi transitus insedere; tantumque tumultus Macedonibus est iniectum, ut fugae magis effusae quam itineris ordinati modo multis armis uirisque relictis flumen traiecerint. Hic finis sequendi fuit. Inde tuto Macedones Gomphos et a Gomphis in Macedoniam redierunt. Athamanes Aetolique Aethopiam ad Xenonem ac mille Macedonas opprimendos undique concurrerunt. Macedones parum loco freti ab Aethopia in altiore deruptioreque undique tumultum concessere; quo pluribus ex locis aditu inuento expulere eos Athamanes, dispersosque et per inuia atque ignotas rupes iter fugae non expedientis partim ceperunt partim interfecerunt. Multi pauore in derupta praecipitati; perpauca cum Xenone ad regem euaserunt. Postea per indutias sepeliendi caesos potestas facta est.

[3] Amynder recuperato regno legatos et Romam ad senatum et ad Scipiones in Asiam, Ephesi post magnum cum Antiocho proelium morantes, misit. Pacem petebat excusabatque sese, quod per Aetolos recuperasset paternum regnum; Philippum incusabat. Aetoli ex Athamania in Amphilochos profecti sunt et maioris partis uoluntate in ius dicionemque totam redegerunt gentem. Amphilochia recepta — nam fuerat quondam Aetolorum — eadem spe in Aperantiam transcenderunt; ea quoque magna ex parte sine certamine in deditionem uenit. Dolopes numquam Aetolorum fuerant, Philippi erant. Hi primo ad arma concurrerunt; ceterum postquam Amphilochos cum Aetolis esse fugamque ex Athamania Philippi et caedem praesidii eius acceperet, et ipsi a Philippo ad Aetolos deficiunt. Quibus circumiectis gentibus iam undique se a Macedonibus tutos credentibus esse Aetolis fama adfertur Antiochum in Asia uictum ab Romanis; nec ita multo post legati ab Roma rediere sine spe pacis Fuluiumque consulem nuntiantes cum exercitu iam traiecisse. His territi, prius ab Rhodo et Athenis legationibus excitis, ut per auctoritatem earum ciuitatum suae preces nuper repudiatæ faciliorem aditum ad senatum haberent, principes gentis ad temptandam spem ultimam Romam miserunt, nihil, ne bellum haberent, priusquam paene in conspectu hostis erat, praemeditati. Iam M. Fuluius Apolloniam exercitu traiecto cum Epirotarum principibus consultabat, unde bellum inciperet. Epirotis Ambraciam placebat adgredi, quæ tum contribuerat se Aetolis: siue ad tuendam eam uenirent Aetoli, apertos circa campos ad dimicandum esse; siue detractarent certamen, oppugnationem fore haud difficilem; nam et copiam in propinquo materiae ad aggeres excitandos et cetera opera esse, et Arethontem, nauigabilem amnem, opportunum ad comportanda, quæ usui sint, præter ipsa moenia fluere, et aestatem aptam rei gerendæ adesse. His persuaserunt, ut per Epirum duceret.

[4] Consuli ad Ambraciam aduenienti magni operis oppugnationis uisa est. Ambracia tumulo aspero subiecta est; Perranthem incolæ uocant. Vrbs, qua murus uergit in campos et flumen, occidentem, arx, quæ imposita tumulo est, orientem spectat. Amnis Aretho ex Athamania fluens cadit in sinum maris ab nomine propinquæ urbis Ambracium appellatum. Præterquam quod hinc amnis munit, hinc tumuli, muro quoque firmo saepta erat, patente in circuitu paulo amplius quattuor milia passuum. Fuluius bina a campo castra, modico inter se distantia interuallo, unum castellum loco edito contra arcem obiecit; ea omnia uallo atque fossa ita iungere parat, ne exitus inclusis ab urbe neue aditus foris ad auxilia intromittenda esset. Ad famam oppugnationis Ambraciæ Stratum iam edicto Nicandri prætoris conuenerant Aetoli. Inde primo copiis omnibus ad prohibendam obsidionem uenire in animo fuerat; dein, postquam urbem iam magna ex parte operibus saeptam uiderunt, Epirotarum trans flumen loco plano castra posita esse, diuidere copias placuit. Cum mille expeditis Eupolemus Ambraciam profectus per nondum commissa inter se munimenta urbem intrauit. Nicandro cum cetera manu primo Epirotarum castra nocte adgredi consilium fuerat haud facili ab Romanis auxilio, quia flumen intererat; dein, periculosum inceptum ratus, ne qua sentirent Romani et regressus inde in tuto non esset, deterritus ab hoc consilio ad depopulandam Acarnaniam iter conuertit.

[5] Consul iam munimentis, quibus saepienda urbs erat, iam operibus, quae admouere muris parabat, perfectis quinque simul locis moenia est adgressus. Tria paribus interuallis, faciliore aditu a campo, aduersus Pyrrheum, quod uocant, admouit, unum e regione Aesculapii, unum aduersus arcem. Arietibus muros quatiebat; asserebus falcatis detergebat pinnas. Oppidanos primo et ad speciem et ad ictus moenium cum terribili sonitu editos pauor ac trepidatio cepit; deinde, ut praeter spem stare muros uiderunt, collectis rursus animis in arietes tollentibus libramenta plumbi aut saxorum stipitesue robustos incutiebant; falces ancoris ferreis iniectis in interiorem partem muri trahentes asserem praeFRINGEBANT; ad hoc eruptionibus et nocturnis in custodias operum et diurnis in stationes ultro terrorem inferebant. In hoc statu res ad Ambraciam cum essent, iam Aetoli a populatione Acarnaniae Stratum redierant. Inde Nicander praetor spem nactus soluendae incepto forti obsidionis, Nicodamum quendam cum Aetolis quingentis Ambraciam intromittit. Noctem certam tempusque etiam noctis constituit, quo et illi ab urbe opera hostium, quae aduersus Pyrrheum erant, adgrederentur, et ipse ad castra Romana terrorem faceret, posse ratus ancipiti tumultu et nocte augente pauorem memorabilem rem geri. Et Nicodamus intempesta nocte, cum alias custodias fefellisset, per alias impetu constanti perripisset, superato brachio in urbem penetrat, animique aliquantum ad omnia audenda et spei obsessis adiecit et, simul constituta nox uenit, ex composito repente opera est adgressus. Id inceptum conatu quam effectu grauius fuit, quia nulla ab exteriori parte uis admota est, seu metu deterrito praetore Aetolorum, seu quia potius uisum est Amphilochis nuper receptis ferre opem, quos Perseus, Philippi filius, missus ad Dolopiam Amphilochosque recipiendos, summa ui oppugnabat.

[6] Tribus locis, sicut ante dictum est, ad Pyrrheum opera Romana erant, quae omnia simul, sed nec apparatu nec ui simili, Aetoli adgressi sunt: alii cum ardentibus facibus, alii stuppam picemque et malleolos ferentes, tota collucente flammis acie, aduenere. Multos primo impetu custodes oppresserunt; dein, postquam clamor tumultusque in castra est perlatus datumque a consule signum, arma capiunt et omnibus portis ad opem ferendam effunduntur. [uno in loco] ferro ignique gesta res; ab duobus irrita incepto, cum temptassent magis quam inissent certamen, Aetoli abscesserunt; atrox pugna in unum inclinauerat locum. Ibi diuersis partibus duo duces Eupolemus et Nicodamus pugnantis hortabantur et prope certa fouebant spe iam Nicandrum ex composito adfore et terga hostium inuasurum. Haec res aliquamdiu animos pugnantium sustinuit; ceterum, postquam nullum ex composito signum a suis accipiebant et crescere numerum hostium cernebant, destituti segnius instare; postremo re omissa iam uix tuto receptu fugientes in urbem compelluntur, parte operum incensa et pluribus aliquanto, quam <ab> ipsis ceciderant, interfectis. Quodsi ex composito acta res fuisset, haud dubium erat expugnari una utique parte opera cum magna caede hostium potuisse. Ambracienses quique intus erant Aetoli non ab eius solum noctis incepto recessere, sed in reliquum quoque tempus uelut proditi ab suis segniores ad pericula erant. Iam nemo eruptionibus, ut ante, in stationes hostium, sed dispositi per muros et turres ex tuto pugnant.

[7] Perseus ubi adesse Aetolos audiuit, omissa obsidione urbis, quam oppugnabat, depopulatus tantum agros Amphilochia excessit atque in Macedoniam redit. Et Aetolos inde auocauit populatio maritumae orae. Pleuratus, Illyriorum rex, cum sexaginta lembis Corinthium sinum inuectus adiunctis Achaeorum quae Patris erant nauibus maritima Aetoliae uastabat. Aduersus quos mille Aetoli missi, quacumque se classis circumegerat per litorum amfractus, breuioribus semitis occurrebant. Et Romani ad Ambraciam pluribus locis quatiendo arietibus muros aliquantum urbis nudauerant, nec tamen penetrare in urbem poterant; nam et pari celeritate nouus pro diruto murus obiciebatur, et armati ruinis superstantes instar munimenti erant. Itaque cum aperta ui parum procederet consuli res, cuniculum occultum uineis ante contacto loco agere instituit; et aliquamdiu, cum dies noctesque in opere essent, non solum sub terra fodientes sed egerentes etiam humum fefellere hostem. Cumulus repente terrae eminens index operis oppidanis fuit, pavidique, ne iam subrutis muris facta in urbem uia esset, fossam intra murum e regione eius operis, quod uineis contactum erat, ducere instituunt. Cuius ubi ad tantam altitudinem, quantae esse solum infimum cuniculi poterat, peruenerunt, silentio facto pluribus locis aure admota sonitum fodientium captabant. Quem ubi acceperunt, aperiunt rectam in cuniculum uiam nec fuit magni operis; momento enim ad inane suspensio fulturis ab hostibus muro peruenerunt. Ibi commissis operibus, cum e fossa in cuniculum pateret iter, primo ipsis ferramentis, quibus in opere usi erant, deinde celeriter armati etiam subeuntes occultam sub terra ediderunt pugnam; segnior deinde ea facta est intersaeipientibus cuniculum, ubi uellent, nunc ciliciis praetentis nunc foribus raptim obiectis. Noua etiam haud magni operis aduersus eos, qui in cuniculo erant, excogitata res. Dolium a fundo pertusum, qua fistula modica inseri posset, et ferream fistulam operculumque dolii ferreum, et ipsum pluribus locis perforatum, fecerunt. Hoc tenui pluma completum dolium ore in cuniculum uerso posuerunt. Per operculi foramina praelongae hastae, quas sarisas uocant, ad summouendos hostes eminebant. Scintillam leuem ignis inditam plumae folle fabрили ad caput fistulae imposito flando accenderunt. Inde non solum magna uis fumi sed acrior etiam foedo quodam odore ex adusta pluma cum totum cuniculum complexset, uix durare quisquam intus poterat.

[8] Cum in hoc statu ad Ambraciam res esset, legati ab Aetolis Phaeneas et Damoteles cum liberis mandatis decreto gentis ad consulem uenerunt. Nam praetor eorum, cum alia parte Ambraciam oppugnari cerneret, alia infestam oram nauibus hostium esse, alia Amphilochos Dolopiam<que> a Macedonibus uastari, nec Aetolos ad tria simul diuersa bella occursantis sufficere, conuocato concilio Aetoliae principes, quid agendum esset, consuluit. Omnium eo sententiae decurrerunt, ut pax, si posset, aequis, si minus, tolerandis condicionibus peteretur; Antiochi fiducia bellum susceptum; Antiocho terra marique superato et prope extra orbem terrae ultra iuga Tauri exacto quam spem esse sustinendi belli?

Phaeneas et Damoteles quod e re Aetolorum, ut in tali casu, fideque sua esse censerent, agerent; quod enim sibi consilium aut cuius rei electionem a fortuna relictam? Cum his mandatis legati missi orare consulem, ut parceret urbi, miseretur gentis quondam sociae, nolle dicere iniuriis, miseriis certe coactae insanire; non plus mali meritos Aetolos Antiochi bello, quam boni ante, cum aduersus Philippum bellatum sit, fecisse; nec tum large gratiam relatam sibi, nec nunc immodice poenam iniungi debere. Ad ea consul respondit magis saepe quam uere umquam Aetolos pacem petere. Imitarentur Antiochum in petenda pace, quem in bellum traxissent; non paucis urbibus eum, de quarum libertate certatum sit, sed omni Asia cis Taurum montem, opimo regno, excessisse. Aetolos nisi inermes de pace agentes non auditurum se; arma illis prius equosque omnis tradendos esse, deinde mille talentum argenti populo Romano dandum, cuius summae dimidium praesens numeretur, si pacem habere uellent. Ad ea adiectum etiam in foedus esse, ut eosdem quos populus Romanus amicos atque hostis habeant.

[9] Aduersus quae legati, et quia graua erant, et quia suorum animos indomitos ac mutabiles nouerant, nullo reddito responso domum regressi sunt, ut etiam atque etiam, quid agendum esset, re integra praetorem et principes consulerent. Clamore et iurgio excepti, quam diu rem traherent, qualemcumque pacem referre iussi, cum redirent Ambraciam, Acarnanum insidiis prope uiam positis, cum quibus bellum erat, circumuenti Thyreum custodiendi deducuntur. Haec mora iniecta est paci, cum iam Atheniensium Rhodiorumque legati, qui ad deprecandum pro iis uenerant, apud consulem essent. Amynder quoque Athamanum rex fide accepta uenerat in castra Romana, magis pro Ambracia urbe, ubi maiorem partem temporis exulauerat, quam pro Aetolis sollicitus. Per hos certior factus consul de casu legatorum adduci eos a Thyreo iussit; quorum post aduentum agi coeptum est de pace. Amynder, quod sui maxime operis erat, impigre agebat, ut Ambracienses compelleret ad deditionem. <ad> id cum per colloquia principum succedens murum parum proficeret, postremo consulis permissu ingressus urbem partim consilio partim precibus euicit, ut permitterent se Romanis. Et Aetolos C. Valerius, Laeuini filius, qui cum ea gente primum amicitiam pepigerat, consulis frater matre eadem genitus, egregie adiuuit. Ambracienses prius pacti, ut Aetolorum auxiliares sine fraude emitterent, aperuerunt portas. Dein <Aetolis condiciones pacis dictae:> quingenta Euboica ut darent talenta, ex quibus ducenta praesentia, trecenta per annos sex pensionibus aequis; captiuos perfugasque redderent Romanis; urbem ne quam formulae sui iuris facerent, quae post id tempus, quo T. Quinctius traiecisset in Graeciam, aut ui capta ab Romanis esset aut uoluntate in amicitiam uenisset; Cephallania insula ut extra ius foederis esset. Haec quamquam spe ipsorum aliquanto leuiora erant, petentibus Aetolis, ut ad concilium referrent, permissum est. Parua disceptatio de urbibus tenuit, quae cum sui iuris aliquando fuissent, auelli uelut a corpore suo aegre patiebantur; ad unum omnes tamen accipi pacem iusserunt. Ambracienses coronam auream consuli centum et quinquaginta pondo dederunt. Signa aenea marmoreaque et tabulae pictae, quibus ornatio Ambracia, quia regia ibi Pyrrhi fuerat, quam ceterae regionis eius urbes erant, sublata omnia auectaque; nihil praeterea tactum uiolatumue.

[10] Profectus ab Ambracia consul in mediterranea Aetoliae ad Argos Amphilochium — uiginti duo milia ab Ambracia abest — castra posuit. Eo tandem legati Aetoli mirante consule, quod morarentur, uenerunt. Inde, postquam approbasse pacem concilium Aetolorum accepit, iussis proficisci Romam ad senatum permissoque, ut et Rhodii et Athenienses deprecatores irent, dato, qui simul cum iis proficisceretur, C. Valerio fratre ipse in Cephallaniam traiecit. Praeoccupatas auris animosque principum Romae criminibus Philippi inuenerunt, qui per legatos, per litteras Dolopas Amphilochosque et Athamaniam erepta sibi querens, praesidiaque sua, postremo filium etiam Persea ex Amphilochis pulsum, auerterat senatum ab audiendis precibus eorum. Rhodii tamen et Athenienses cum silentio auditi sunt. Atheniensis legatus Leon Hicesiae filius eloquentia etiam dicitur mouisse; qui uulgata similitudine, mari tranquillo, quod uentis concitaretur, aequiperando multitudinem Aetolorum, usus, cum in fide Romanae societatis mansissent, insita gentis tranquillitate quiesse eos aiebat; postquam flare ab Asia Thoas et Dicaearchus, ab Europa Menestas et Damocritus coepissent, tum illam tempestatem coortam, quae ad Antiochum eos sicuti in scopulum intulisset.

[11] Diu iactati Aetoli tandem, ut condiciones pacis conuenirent, effecerunt. Fuerunt autem hae: 'imperium maiestatemque populi Romani gens Aetolorum conseruato sine dolo malo; ne quem exercitum, qui aduersus socios amicosque eorum ducetur, per fines suos transire sinito, neue ulla ope iuuato; hostis eosdem habeto quos populus Romanus, armaque in eos ferto, bellumque pariter gerito; perfugas fugitiuos captiuos reddito Romanis sociisque, praeterquam si qui capti, cum domos redissent, iterum capti sunt, aut si qui eo tempore ex iis capti sunt, qui tum hostes erant Romanis, cum intra praesidia Romana Aetoli essent; aliorum qui comparebunt intra dies centum Corcyraeorum magistratibus sine dolo malo tradantur; qui non comparebunt, quando quisque eorum primum inuentus erit, reddatur; obsides quadraginta arbitratu consulis Romanis dato ne minores duodecim annorum neu maiores quadraginta, obses ne esto praetor, praefectus equitum, scribe publicus, neu quis, qui ante obses fuit apud Romanos; Cephallania extra pacis leges esto.' De pecuniae summa, quam penderent, pensionibusque eius nihil ex eo, quod cum consule conuenerat, mutatum; pro argento si aurum dare mallent, darent, conuenit, dum pro argenteis decem aureus unus ualeret. 'Quae urbes, qui agri, qui homines Aetolorum iuris aliquando fuerunt, qui eorum T. Quinctio Cn. Domitio consulibus postue eos consules aut armis subacti aut uoluntate in dicionem populi Romani uenerunt, ne quem eorum Aetoli recepissee uelint; Oeniadae cum urbe agrisque Acarnanum sunt.' His legibus foedus ictum cum Aetolis est.

[12] Eadem non aestate solum, sed etiam iisdem prope diebus, quibus haec a M. Fulvio consule in Aetolia gesta sunt, consul alter Cn. Manlius in Gallograecia bellum gessit, quod nunc ordiri pergam. Vere primo Ephesum consul uenit, acceptisque copiis ab L. Scipione et exercitu lustrato contionem apud milites habuit, qua collaudata uirtute eorum, quod cum Antiocho uno proelio debellassent, adhortatus eos <ad> nouum cum Gallis suscipiendum bellum, qui et auxiliis iuuissent Antiochum, et adeo indomita haberent ingenia, ut nequiquam Antiochus emotus ultra iuga Tauri montis esset, nisi frangerentur opes Gallorum, de se quoque pauca, nec falsa nec immodica, adiecit. Laeti milites cum frequenti adsensu consulem audiuerunt, partem uirium Antiochi fuisse Gallos credentes; rege superato nullum momentum in solis per se Gallorum copiis fore. Eumenen haud in tempore abesse — Romae tum erat — credere consul, gnarum locorum hominumque, et cuius interesset frangi Gallorum opes. Attalum igitur fratrem eius accersit a Pergamo, hortatusque ad capessendum secum bellum pollicentem suam suorumque operam domum ad comparandum dimittit. Paucos post dies profecto ab Epheso consuli ad Magnesiam occurrit Attalus cum mille peditibus equitibusque quingentis, Athenaeo fratre iusso cum ceteris copiis subsequi, commendata iis custodia Pergami, quos fratri regnoque fidos credebat. Consul collaudato iuvene cum omnibus copiis ad Maeandrum progressus castra posuit, quia uado superari amnis non poterat et contrahendae naues erant ad exercitum traiciendum. Transgressi Maeandrum ad Hieran Comen peruenerunt.

[13] Fanum ibi augustum Apollinis et oraculum; sortes uersibus haud inconditis dare uates dicuntur. Hinc alteris castris ad Harpasum flumen uentum est, quo legati ab Alabandis uenerunt, ut castellum, quod ab ipsis nuper descisset, aut auctoritate aut armis cogeret iura antiqua pati. Eodem et Athenaeus, Eumenis et Attali frater, cum Cretense Leuso et Corrago Macedone uenit; mille pedites mixtarum gentium et trecentos equites secum adduxerunt. Consul tribuno militum misso cum modica manu castellum ui cepit, captum Alabandensibus reddit. Ipse nihil uia degressus ad Antiochiam super Maeandrum amnem posuit castra. Huius amnis fontes Celaenis oriuntur. Celaenae urbs caput quondam Phrygiae fuit; migratum inde haud procul ueteribus Celaenis, nouaeque urbi Apameae nomen inditum ab Apama sorore Seleuci regis. Et Marsyas amnis, haud procul a Maeandri fontibus oriens, in Maeandrum cadit, famaue ita tenet, Celaenis Marsyan cum Apolline tiliarum cantu certasse. Maeander ex arce summa Celaenarum ortus, media urbe decurrens, per Caras primum, deinde Ionas in sinum maris editur, qui inter Prienen et Miletum est. Ad Antiochiam in castra consulis Seleucus, Antiochi filius, ex foedere icto cum Scipione ad frumentum exercitui dandum uenit. Parua disceptatio de Attali auxiliaribus orta est, quod Romano tantum militi pactum Antiochum ut daretur frumentum Seleucus dicebat. Discussa ea quoque est constantia consulis, qui misso tribuno edixit, ne Romani milites acciperent, priusquam Attali auxilia accepissent. Inde ad Gordiutichos quod uocant processum est.

Ex eo loco ad Tabas tertiis castris peruentum. In finibus Pisidarum posita urbs est, in ea parte, quae uergit ad Pamphylium mare. Integris uiribus regionis eius feroces ad bellandum habebat uiros. Tum quoque equites in agmen Romanum eruptione facta haud modice primo impetu turbauere; deinde ut apparuit nec numero se nec uirtute pares esse, in urbem compulsi ueniam erroris petebant, dedere urbem parati. Quinque et uiginti talenta argenti et decem milia medimnum tritici imperata; ita in deditionem accepti.

[14] Tertio inde die ad Casum amnem peruen tum; inde profecti Erizam urbem primo impetu ceperunt. Ad Thabusion castellum imminens flumini Indo uentum est, cui fecerat nomen Indus ab elephanto deiectus. Haud procul a Cibyra aberant, nec legatio ulla a Moagete, tyranno ciuitatis eius, homine ad omnia infido atque importuno, ueniebat. Ad temptandum eius animum C. Heluium cum quattuor milibus peditum et quingentis equitibus consul praemittit. Huic agmini iam finis ingredienti legati occurrerunt nuntiantes paratum esse tyrannum imperata facere; orabant, ut pacatus finis iniret cohiberetque a populatione agri militem, et in corona aurea quindecim talenta adferebant. Heluius integros a populatione agros seruaturum pollicitus ire ad consulem legatos iussit. Quibus eadem referentibus consul ‘neque Romani’ inquit ‘bonae uoluntatis ullum signum erga nos tyranni habemus, et ipsum talem esse inter omnes constat, ut de poena eius magis quam de amicitia nobis cogitandum sit.’ Perturbati hac uoce legati nihil aliud petere, quam ut coronam acciperet ueniendique ad eum tyranno potestatem et copiam loquendi ac purgandi se faceret. Permissu consulis postero die in castra tyrannus uenit, uestitus comitatusque uix ad priuati modice locupletis habitum, et oratio fuit summissa et infracta, extenuantis opes suas urbiumque suae dicionis egestatem querentis. Erant autem sub eo praeter Cibyrā Sylleum et ad Limnen quae appellatur. Ex his, ut se suosque spoliaret, quinque et uiginti talenta se confecturum, prope ut diffidens, pollicebatur. ‘Enimuero’ inquit consul ‘ferri iam ludificatio ista non potest. Parum est non erubuisse absentem, cum per legatos frustrareris nos; praesens quoque in eadem perstas impudentia. Quinque et uiginti talenta tyrannidem tuam exhaurient? Quingenta ergo talenta nisi triduo numeras, populationem in agris, obsidionem in urbe expecta.’ Hac denuntiatione conterritus perstare tamen in pertinaci simulatione inopiae. Et paulatim illiberali adiectione nunc per cauillationem, nunc precibus et simulatis lacrimis ad centum talenta est perductus. Adiecta decem milia medimnum frumenti. Haec omnia intra sex dies exacta.

[15] A Cibyra per agros Sindensium exercitus ductus, transgressusque Caularem amnem posuit castra. Postero die [et] praeter Caralitin paludem agmen ductum; ad Madamprum manserunt. Inde progredientibus ab Lago, proxima urbe, metu incolae fugerunt; uacuum hominibus et refertum rerum omnium copia oppidum diripuerunt. Inde ad Lysis fluminis fontes, postero die ad Cobulatum amnem progressi. Termessenses eo tempore Isiondensium arcem urbe capta oppugnabant. Inclusi, cum alia spes auxilii nulla esset, legatos ad consulem orantes opem miserunt: cum coniugibus ac liberis in arce inclusos se mortem in dies, aut ferro aut fame patiendam, expectare. Volenti consuli causa in Pamphyliam deuertendi oblata est. Adueniens obsidione Isiondensis exemit; Termesso pacem dedit quinquaginta talentis argenti acceptis; item Aspendiis ceterisque Pamphyliae populis. Ex Pamphylia rediens ad fluuium Taurum primo die, postero ad Xylinen quam uocant Comen posuit castra. Profectus inde continentibus itineribus ad Cormasa urbem peruenit. Darsa proxima urbs erat; eam metu incolarum desertam, plenam omnium rerum copia inuenit. Progredienti praeter paludes legati ab Lysinoe dedentes ciuitatem uenerunt. Inde in agrum Sagalassenum, uberem fertilemque omni genere frugum, uentum est. Colunt Pisidae, longe optimi bello regionis eius. Cum ea res animos fecit, tum agri fecunditas et multitudo hominum et situs inter paucas munitae urbis. Consul, quia nulla legatio ad finem praesto fuerat, praedatum in agros misit. Tum demum fracta pertinacia est, ut ferri agique res suas uiderunt; legatis missis pacti quinquaginta talentis et uiginti milibus medimnum tritici, uiginti hordei, pacem impetrauerunt. Progressus inde ad Rhotrinos fontes ad uicum, quem Acoridos Comen uocant, posuit castra. Eo Seleucus ab Apamea postero die uenit. Aegros inde et inutilia impedimenta cum Apameam dimisisset, ducibus itinerum ab Seleuco acceptis profectus eo die in Metropolitanum campum, postero die Dynias Phrygiae processit. Inde Synnada uenit, metu omnibus circa oppidis desertis. Quorum praeda iam graue agmen trahens uix quinque milium die toto itinere perfecto ad Beudos, quod uetus appellant, peruenit. Ad Anabura inde, et altero die ad Alandri fontes, tertio ad Abbassium posuit castra. Ibi plures dies statua habuit, quia peruentum erat ad Tolostobogiorum fines.

[16] Galli, magna hominum uis, seu inopia agri seu praedae spe, nullam gentem, per quas ituri essent, parem armis rati, Brenno duce in Dardanos peruenerunt. Ibi seditio orta est; ad uiginti milia hominum cum Litorio ac Lutario regulis secessionem facta a Brenno in Thraeciam iter auertunt. Vbi cum resistentibus pugnando, pacem petentibus stipendium imponendo Byzantium cum peruenissent, aliquamdiu oram Propontidis, uectigalis habendo regionis eius urbes, obtinuerunt. Cupido inde eos in Asiam transeundi, audientis ex propinquo, quanta ubertas eius terrae esset, cepit; et Lysimachia fraude capta Chersonesoque omni armis possessa ad Hellespontum descenderunt. Ibi uero exiguo diuisam freto cernentibus Asiam multo magis animi ad transeundum accensi; nuntiosque ad Antipatrum praefectum eius orae de transitu mittebant. Quae res cum lentius spe ipsorum traheretur, alia rursus noua inter regulos seditio orta est. Litorius retro, unde uenerat, cum maiore parte hominum repetit Byzantium; Lutarius Macedonibus per speciem legationis ab Antipatro ad speculandum missis duas tectas naues et tris lembos adimit. Iis alios atque alios dies noctesque trauehendo intra paucos dies omnis copias traiecit. Haud ita multo post Litorius adiuuante Nicomede Bithyniae rege a Byzantio transmisit. Coeunt deinde in unum rursus Galli et auxilia Nicomedi dant aduersus Ziboetam, tenentem partem Bithyniae, gerenti bellum. Atque eorum maxime opera deuictus Ziboeta est, Bithyniaque omnis in dicionem Nicomedis concessit. Profecti ex Bithynia in Asiam processerunt. Non plus ex uiginti milibus hominum quam decem armata erant. Tamen tantum terroris omnibus quae cis Taurum incolunt gentibus iniecerunt, ut quas adissent quasque non adissent, pariter ultimae propinquis, imperio parerent. Postremo cum tres essent gentes, Tolostobogii Trocmi Tectosages, in tris partis, qua cuique populorum suorum uectigalis Asia esset, diuiserunt. Trocmis Hellesponti ora data; Tolostobogii Aeolida atque Ioniam, Tectosages mediterranea Asiae sortiti sunt. Et stipendium tota cis Taurum Asia exigebant, sedem autem ipsi sibi circa Halyn flumen cepere. Tantisque terror eorum nominis erat, multitudine etiam magna subole aucta, ut Syriae quoque ad postremum reges stipendium dare non abnuerent. Primus Asiam incolentium abnuit Attalus, pater regis Eumenis; audacique incepto praeter opinionem omnium adfuit fortuna, et signis collatis superior fuit. Non tamen ita infregit animos eorum, ut absisterent imperio; eadem opes usque ad bellum Antiochi cum Romanis manserunt. Tum quoque, pulso Antiocho, magnam spem habuerunt, quia procul mari incoherent, Romanum exercitum ad se non peruenturum.

[17] Cum hoc hoste, tam terribili omnibus regionis eius, quia bellum gerendum erat, pro contione milites in hunc maxime modum adlocutus est consul: ‘non me praeterit, milites, omnium quae Asiam colunt gentium Gallos fama belli praestare. Inter mitissimum genus hominum ferox natio peruagata bello prope orbem terrarum sedem cepit. Procera corpora, promissae et rutilatae comae, uasta scuta, praelongi gladii; ad hoc cantus ineuntium proelium et ululatus et tripudia, et quatientium scuta in patrium quendam modum horrendus armorum crepitus, omnia de industria composita ad terrorem. Sed haec, quibus insolita atque insueta sunt, Graeci et Phryges et Cares timeant; Romanis Gallici tumultus adsueti, etiam uanitates notae sunt. Semel primo congressu ad Aliam eos olim fugerunt maiores nostri; ex eo tempore per ducentos iam annos pecorum in modum consternatos caedunt fugantque, et plures prope de Gallis triumphum quam de toto orbe terrarum acti sunt. Iam usu hoc cognitum est: si primum impetum, quem feruido ingenio et caeca ira effundunt, sustinueris, fluunt sudore et lassitudine membra, labant arma; mollia corpora, molles, ubi ira consedit, animos sol pulvis sitis, ut ferrum non admoueas, prosternunt. Non legionibus legiones eorum solum experti sumus, sed uir unus cum uiro congregiundo T. Manlius, M. Valerius, quantum Gallicam rabiem uinceret Romana uirtus, docuerunt. Iam M. Manlius unus agmine scandentis in Capitolium detrusit Gallos. Et illis maioribus nostris cum haud dubiis Gallis, in sua terra genitis, res erat; hi iam degeneres sunt, mixti, et Gallograeci uere, quod appellantur; sicut in frugibus pecudibusque non tantum semina ad seruandam indolem ualent, quantum terrae proprietates caelique, sub quo aluntur, mutat. Macedones, qui Alexandriam in Aegypto, qui Seleuciam ac Babyloniam, quique alias sparsas per orbem terrarum colonias habent, in Syros Parthos Aegyptios degenerarunt; Massilia, inter Gallos sita, traxit aliquantum ab accolis animorum; Tarentinis quid ex Spartana dura illa et horrida disciplina mansit? <Est> generosius, in sua quidquid sede gignitur; insitum alienae terrae in id, quo alitur, natura uertente se, degenerat. Phrygas igitur Gallicis oneratos armis, sicut in acie Antiochi cecidistis, uictos uictores, caedetis. Magis uereor, ne parum inde gloriae, quam ne nimium belli sit. Attalus eos rex saepe fudit fugauitque. Nolite existimare beluas tantum recens captas feritatem illam siluestrem primo seruare, dein, cum diu manibus humanis aluntur, mitescere, in hominum feritate mulcenda non eandem naturam esse. Eosdemne hos creditis esse, qui patres eorum auique fuerunt? Extorres inopia agrorum profecti domo per asperrimam Illyrici oram, Paeoniam inde et Thraeciam pugnando cum ferocissimis gentibus emensi, has terras ceperunt. Duratos eos tot malis exasperatosque accepit terra, quae copia omnium rerum saginaret. Vberimo agro, mitissimo caelo, clementibus accolarum ingeniis omnis illa, cum qua uenerant, mansuefacta est feritas. Vobis mehercule, Martiis uiris, cauenda ac fugienda quam primum amoenitas est Asiae: tantum hae peregrinae uoluptates ad extinguendum uigorem animorum possunt; tantum contagio disciplinae morisque accolarum ualet. Hoc tamen feliciter euenit, quod sicut uim aduersus uos nequaquam, ita famam apud Graecos parem illi antiquae obtinent, cum qua uenerunt, bellicque gloriam uictores eandem inter socios habebitis, quam si seruantis anticum specimen animorum Gallos uicissetis.'

[18] Contione dimissa missisque ad Eposognatum legatis, qui unus ex regulis et in Eumenis manserat amicitia et negauerat Antiocho aduersus Romanos auxilia, castra mouit. Primo die ad Alandrum flumen, postero ad uicum quem uocant Tyscon uentum. Eo legati Oroandensium cum uenissent amicitiam petentes, ducenta talenta his sunt imperata, precantibusque, ut domum renuntiarent, potestas facta. Ducere inde exercitum consul ad Pliten intendit; deinde ad Alyattos castra posita. Eo missi ad Eposognatum redierunt, et legati reguli orantes, ne Tectosagis bellum inferret; ipsum in eam gentem iturum Eposognatum persuasurumque, ut imperata faciant. Data uenia regulo, duci inde exercitus per Axylon quam uocant terram coeptus. Ab re nomen habet: non ligni modo quicquam, sed ne spinas quidem aut ullum aliud alimentum fert ignis; fimo bubulo pro lignis utuntur. Ad Cuballum, Gallograeciae castellum, castra habentibus Romanis apparuere cum magno tumultu hostium equites, nec turbarunt tantum Romanas stationes repente inuecti, sed quosdam etiam occiderunt. Qui tumultus cum in castra perlatus esset, effusus repente omnibus portis equitatus Romanus fudit fugauitque Gallos et aliquot fugientis occidit. Inde consul, ut qui iam ad hostis peruentum cerneret, explorato deinde et cum cura coacto agmine procedebat. Et continentibus itineribus cum ad Sangarium flumen uenisset, pontem, quia uado nusquam transitus erat, facere instituit. Sangarius ex Adoreo monte per Phrygiam fluens miscetur ad Bithyniam Tymbri fluuiio; inde maior iam geminatis aquis per Bithyniam fertur et in Propontidem sese effundit, non tamen tam magnitudine memorabilis, quam quod piscium accolis ingentem uim praebet. Transgressis ponte perfecto flumen praeter ripam euntibus Galli Matris Magnae a Pessinunte occurrere cum insignibus suis, uaticinantes fanatico carmine deam Romanis uiam belli et uictoriam dare imperiumque eius regionis. Accipere se omen cum dixisset consul, castra eo ipso loco posuit. Postero die ad Gordium peruenit. Id haud magnum quidem oppidum est, sed plus quam mediterraneum celebre et frequens emporium. Tria maria pari ferme distantia interuallo habet, ad Hellespontum, ad Sinopen, et alterius orae litora, qua Cilices maritimi colunt; multarum magnarumque praeterea gentium finis contigit, quarum commercium in eum maxime locum mutui usus contraxere. Id tum desertum fuga incolarum oppidum, refertum idem copia rerum omnium inuenerunt. Ibi statua habentibus legati ab Eposognato uenerunt nuntiantes profectum eum ad regulos Gallorum nihil aequi impetrasse; ex campestribus uicis agrisque frequentes demigrare et cum coniugibus ac liberis, quae ferre atque agere possint, prae se agentis portantisque Olympum montem petere, ut inde armis locorumque situ sese tueantur.

[19] Certiora postea Oroandensium legati attulerunt, Tolostobogiorum ciuitatem Olympum montem cepisse; diuersos Tectosagos alium montem, Magaba qui dicatur, petisse; Trocmos coniugibus ac liberis apud Tectosagos depositis armatorum agmine Tolostobogiis statuisse auxilium ferre. Erant autem tunc trium populorum reguli Ortiago et Combolomarus et Gaulotus. Iis haec maxime ratio belli sumendi fuerat, quod cum montes editissimos regionis eius tenerent, conuectis omnibus, quae ad usum quamuis longi temporis sufficerent, taedio se fatigaturos hostem censebant: nam neque ausuros per tam ardua atque iniqua loca subire eos, et, si conarentur, uel parua manu prohiberi aut deturbari posse, nec quietos in radicibus montium gelidorum sedentes frigus aut inopiam laturos. Et cum ipsa altitudo locorum eos tutaretur, fossam quoque et alia munimenta uerticibus iis, quos insederant, circumiecere. Minima apparatus missilium telorum cura fuit, quod saxa adfatim praebituram asperitatem ipsam locorum credebant.

[20] Consul quia non comminus pugnam sed procul locis oppugnandis futuram praeceperat animo, ingentem uim pilorum, uelitarium hastarum, sagittarum glandisque et modicorum, qui funda mitti possent, lapidum parauerat, instructusque missilium apparatu ad Olympum montem ducit et a quinque ferme milibus castra locat. Postero die cum quadringentis equitibus et Attalo progressum eum ad naturam montis situmque Gallicorum castrorum uisendum equites hostium, duplex numerus, effusi e castris, in fugam auerterunt; occisi quoque pauci fugientium, uulnerati plures. Tertio die cum omnibus ad loca exploranda profectus, quia nemo hostium extra munimenta processit, tuto circumuectus montem, animaduertit meridiana regione terrenos et placide accliuos ad quendam finem colles esse, a septentrione arduas et rectas prope rupes, atque omnibus ferme aliis inuiis itinera tria esse, unum medio monte, qua terrena erant, duo difficilia ab hiberno solis ortu et ab aestiuo occasu. Haec contemplatus eo die sub ipsis radicibus posuit castra; postero, sacrificio facto, cum primis hostiis litasset, trifariam exercitum diuisum ducere ad hostem pergit. Ipse cum maxima parte copiarum, qua aequissimum aditum praebebat mons, ascendit; L. Manlium fratrem ab hiberno ortu, quoad loca patiantur et tuto possit, subire iubet; si qua periculosa et praerupta occurrant, non pugnare cum iniquitate locorum neque inexsuperabilibus uim adferre, sed obliquo monte ad se declinare et suo agmini coniungi; C. Heluium cum tertia parte circuire sensim per infima montis, deinde ab occasu aestiuo erigere agmen. Et Attali auxilia trifariam aequo numero diuisit, secum esse ipsum iuuenem iussit. Equitatum cum elephantis in proxima tumulis planitie reliquit; edictum praefectis, ut intenti, quid ubique geratur, animaduertant opemque ferre, quo postulet res, possint.

[21] Galli [et] ab duobus lateribus satis fidentes inuia esse, ab ea parte, quae in meridiem uergeret, ut armis clauderent uiam, quattuor milia fere armatorum ad tumulum imminem uiae minus mille passuum a castris occupandum mittunt, eo se rati ueluti castello iter impedituros. Quod ubi Romani uiderunt, expediunt sese ad pugnam. Ante signa modico interuallo uelites eunt et ab Attalo Cretenses sagittarii et funditores et Tralli <et> Thraeces; signa peditum ut per arduum, leni gradu ducuntur, ita prae se habentium scuta, ut missilia tantum uitarent, pede collato non uiderentur pugnaturi. Missilibus ex interuallo loci proelium commissum est, primo par, Gallos loco adiuuante, Romanos uarietate et copia telorum; procedente certamine nihil iam aequi erat. Scuta longa ceterum ad amplitudinem corporum parum lata, et ea ipsa plana, male tegebant Gallos. Nec tela iam alia habebant praeter gladios, quorum, cum manum hostis non consereret, nullus usus erat. Saxis nec modicis, ut quae non praeparassent, sed quod cuique temere trepidanti ad manum uenisset, <et> ut insueti, nec arte nec uiribus adiuuantes ictum, utebantur. Sagittis glande iaculis incauti [et] ab omni parte configebantur nec, quid agerent, ira et pauore occaecatis animis cernebant, et erant depresi genere pugnae, in quod minime apti sunt. Nam quemadmodum comminus, ubi in uicem pati et inferre uulnera licet, accendit ira animos eorum, ita, ubi ex occulto et procul leuibus telis uulnerantur, nec, quo ruant caeco impetu, habent, uelut ferae transfixae in suos temere incurrunt. Detegebat uulnera eorum, quod nudi pugnant, et sunt fusa et candida corpora, ut quae numquam nisi in pugna nudentur; ita et plus sanguinis ex multa carne fundebatur, et foediores patebant plagae, et candor corporum magis sanguine atro maculabatur. Sed non tam patentibus plagis mouentur; interdum insecta cute, ubi latior quam altior plaga est, etiam gloriosius se pugnare putant; iidem, cum aculeus sagittae aut glandis abditae introrsus tenui uulnere in speciem urit, et scrutantis, qua euellant, telum non sequitur, tum in rabiem et pudorem tam parucae perimentis uersi pestis prosternunt corpora humi, sicut tum passim procumbebant; alii ruentes in hostem undique configebantur et, cum comminus uenerant, gladiis a uelutibus trucidabantur. Hic miles tripedalem parmam habet et in dextera hastas, quibus eminus utitur; gladio Hispaniensi est cinctus; quodsi pede collato pugnandum est, translatis in laeuam hastis stringit gladium. Pauci iam supererant Gallorum, qui, postquam ab leui armatura superatos se uiderunt et instare legionum signa, effusa fuga castra repetunt pauoris et tumultus iam plena, ut ubi feminae puerique et alia imbellis turba permixta esset. Romanos uictores deserti fuga hostium acceperunt tumuli.

[22] Sub idem tempus L. Manlius et C. Heluius, cum, quoad uiam colles obliqui dederunt, escendissent, postquam ad inuia uentum est, flexere iter in partem montis, quae una habebat iter, et sequi consulis agmen modico uterque interuallo uelut ex composito coeperunt, quod primo optimum factu fuisset, in id necessitate ipsa compulsi; subsidia enim in talibus iniquitatibus locorum maximo saepe usui fuerunt, ut primis forte deturbatis secundi et tegant pulsos et integri pugnam excipiant. Consul, postquam ad tumulos ab leui armatura captos prima signa legionum peruenerunt, respirare et conuiuiscere paulisper militem iubet; simul strata per tumulos corpora Gallorum ostentat, et, cum leuis armatura proelium tale ediderit, quid ab legionibus, quid ab iustis armis, quid ab animis fortissimorum militum expectari? Castra illis capienda esse, in quae compulsus ab leui armatura hostis trepidet. Praecedere tamen iubet leuem armaturam, quae, cum staret agmen, colligendis per tumulos telis, ut missilia sufficerent, haud segne id ipsum tempus consumpserat. Iam castris appropinquabant; et Galli, ne parum se munimenta sua tegerent, armati pro uallo constiterant. Obruti deinde omni genere telorum, cum, quo plures atque densiores erant, eo minus uani quicquam intercideret teli, intra uallum momento temporis compelluntur stationibus tantum firmis ad ipsos aditus portarum relictis. In multitudinem compulsam in castra uis ingens missilium telorum coniciebatur, et uulnerari multos clamor permixtus mulierum atque puerorum ploratibus significabat. In eos, qui portas stationibus suis clausuerant, legionum antesignani pila coniecerunt. Iis uero non uulnerabantur, sed transuerberatis scutis plerique inter se conserti haerebant; nec diutius impetum Romanorum sustinuerunt.

[23] Patentibus iam portis, priusquam irrumperent uictores, fuga e castris Gallorum in omnis partes facta est. Ruunt caeci per uias, per inuia; nulla praecipitia saxa, nullae rupes obstant; nihil praeter hostem metuunt; itaque plerique, praecipites per uastam altitudinem prolapsi, <contusi> aut debilitati exanimantur. Consul captis castris direptione praedaeque abstinet militem; sequi pro se quemque et instare et percussis pauorem addere iubet. Superuenit et alterum cum L. Manlio agmen; nec eos castra intrare sinit; protinus ad persequendos hostis mittit, et ipse paulo post tradita captiuorum custodia tribunis militum sequitur, debellatum ratus, si in illo pauore quam plurimi caesi forent aut capti. Egresso consule C. Heluius cum tertio agmine aduenit, nec continere suos ab direptione castrorum ualuit, praedaeque eorum, iniquissima sorte, qui pugnae non interfuerant, facta est. Equites diu ignari et pugnae et uictoriae suorum steterunt; deinde et ipsi, quantum equis subire poterant, sparsos fuga Gallos circa radices montis consecrati cecidere aut cepere. Numerus interfectorum haud facile iniri potuit, quia late per omnis amfractus montium fugaque et caedes fuit, et magna pars rupibus inuiis in profundae altitudinis conualles delapsa est, pars in siluis uepribusque occisa. Claudius, qui bis pugnatum in Olympo monte scribit, ad quadraginta milia hominum auctor est caesa, Ualerius Antias, qui magis immodicus in numero augendo esse solet, non plus decem milia. Numerus captiuorum haud dubie milia quadraginta expleuit, quia omnis generis aetatisque turbam secum traxerant demigrantium magis quam in bellum euntium modo. Consul armis hostium [in] uno concrematis cumulo ceteram praedam conferre omnis iussit, et aut uendidit, quod eius in publicum redigendum erat, aut cum cura, ut quam aequissima esset, per milites diuisit. Laudati quoque pro contione omnes sunt, donatique pro merito quisque, ante omnis Attalus summo ceterorum adsensu; nam singularis eius iuuenis cum uirtus et industria in omnibus laboribus periculisque tum modestia etiam fuerat.

[24] Supererat bellum integrum cum Tectosagis. Ad eos profectus consul tertiis castris Ancyram, nobilem in illis locis urbem, peruenit, unde hostes paulo plus decem milia aberant. Vbi cum statua essent, facinus memorabile a captiua factum est. Orgiagontis reguli uxor forma eximia custodiebatur inter plures captiuos; cui custodiae centurio praeerat et libidinis et auaritiae militaris. Is primo animum temptauit; quem cum abhorrentem a uoluntario uideret stupro, corpori, quod seruum fortuna erat, uim fecit. Deinde ad leniendam indignitatem iniuriae spem reditus ad suos mulieri facit, et ne eam quidem, ut amans, gratuitam. Certo auri pondere pactus, ne quem suorum conscium haberet, ipsi permittit, ut, quem uellet, unum ex captiuis nuntium ad suos mitteret. Locum prope flumen constituit, quo duo ne plus necessarii captivae cum auro uenirent nocte insequenti ad eam accipiendam. Forte ipsius mulieris seruus inter captiuos eiusdem custodiae erat. Hunc nuntium primis tenebris extra stationes centurio educit. Nocte insequenti et duo necessarii mulieris ad constitutum locum et centurio cum captiua uenit. Vbi cum aurum ostenderent, quod summam talenti Attici — tanti enim pepigerat — expleret, mulier lingua sua, stringerent ferrum et centurionem pensantem aurum occiderent, imperauit. Iugulati praecisum caput ipsa inuolutum ueste ferens ad uirum Orgiagontem, qui ab Olympo domum refugerat, peruenit; quem priusquam complecteretur, caput centurionis ante pedes eius abiecit, mirantique, cuiusnam id caput hominis aut quod id facinus haudquaquam muliebre esset, et iniuriam corporis et ultionem uiolatae per uim pudicitiae confessa uiro est, aliaque, ut traditur, sanctitate et grauitate uitae huius matronalis facinoris decus ad ultimum conseruauit.

[25] Ancyram in statuam oratores Tectosagum ad consulem uenerunt petentes, ne ante [ab Ancyra] castra moueret, quam collocutus cum suis regibus esset: nullas condiciones pacis iis non bello fore potiores. Tempus in posterum diem constituitur locusque, qui medius maxime inter castra Gallorum et Ancyram est uisus. Quo cum consul ad tempus cum praesidio quingentorum equitum uenisset nec ullo Gallorum ibi uiso regressus in castra esset, oratores idem redeunt, excusantes religione obiecta uenire reges non posse; principes gentis, per quos aequae res transigi posset, uenturos. Consul se quoque Attalum missurum dixit. Ad hoc colloquium utrimque uentum est. Trecentos equites Attalus praesidii causa cum adduxisset, iactatae sunt pacis condiciones; finis rei quia absentibus ducibus imponi non poterat, conuenit, uti consul regesque eo loco postero die congredierentur. Frustratio Gallorum eo spectabat, primum ut tererent tempus, donec res suas, quibus periclitari nolebant, cum coniugibus et liberis trans Halyn flumen traicerent, deinde quod ipsi consuli, parum cauto aduersus colloquii fraudem, insidiabantur. Mille ad eam rem ex omni numero audaciae expertae delegerunt equites; et successisset fraudi, ni pro iure gentium, cuius uiolandi consilium initum erat, stetisset fortuna. Pabulatores lignatoresque Romani in eam partem, in qua colloquium futurum erat, ducti sunt, tutius id futurum tribunis ratis, quia consulis praesidium et ipsum pro statione habituri erant hosti oppositum; suam tamen alteram stationem propius castra sescentorum equitum posuerunt. Consul, adfirmante Attalo uenturos reges et transigi rem posse, profectus e castris, cum eodem quo antea praesidio equitum quinque milia fere processisset nec multum a constituto loco abesset, repente concitatis equis cum impetu hostili uidet Gallos uenientis. Constituit agmen, et expedire tela animosque equitibus iussis primo constanter initium pugnae excepit nec cessit; dein, cum praeagrauaret multitudo, cedere sensim nihil confusis turmarum ordinibus coepit; postremo, cum iam plus in mora periculi quam in ordinibus conseruandis praesidii esset, omnes passim in fugam effusi sunt. Tum uero instare dissipatis Galli et caedere; magnaque pars oppressa foret, ni statio pabulatorum, sescenti equites occurrissent. Ii procul clamore pauido suorum audito cum tela equosque expedissent, integri profligatam pugnam acceperunt. Itaque uersa extemplo fortuna est, uersus a uictis in uictores terror. Et primo impetu fusi Galli sunt, et ex agris concurrebant pabulatores, et undique obuius hostis Gallis erat, ut ne fugam quidem tutam aut facilem haberent, quia recentibus equis Romani fessos sequebantur. Pauci ergo effugerunt; captus est nemo maior multo pars per fidem uiolati colloquii poenas morte luerunt. Romani ardentibus ira animis postero die omnibus copiis ad hostem perueniunt.

[26] Biduum natura montis per se ipsum exploranda, ne quid ignoti esset, absumpsit consul; tertio die, cum auspicio operam dedisset, deinde immolasset, in quattuor partes diuisas copias educit, duas, ut medio monte duceret, duas ab lateribus, ut aduersus cornua Gallorum erigeret. Hostium quod roboris erat, Tectosagi et Trocmi, mediam tenebant aciem, milia hominum quinquaginta; equitatum, quia equorum nullus erat inter inaequales rupes usus, ad pedes deductum, decem milia hominum, ab dextro locauerunt cornu; Ariarathis Cappadoces et Morzi auxiliares in laeuo quattuor ferme milium numerum explebant. Consul, sicut in Olympo monte, prima in acie locata leui armatura, telorum omnis generis ut aequae magna uis ad

manum esset, curauit. Vbi appropinquarent, omnia eadem utrimque, quae fuerant in priore proelio, erant praeter animos et uictoribus ab re secunda auctos et hostibus <fractos>, quia, etsi non ipsi uicti erant, suae gentis hominum cladem pro sua ducebant. Itaque a paribus initiis coepta res eundem exitum habuit. Velut nubes leuium telorum coniecta obruit aciem Gallorum. Nec aut procurrere quisquam ab ordinibus suis, ne nudarent undique corpus ad ictus, audebant, et stantes, quo densiores erant, hoc plura, uelut destinatum petentibus, uulnera accipiebant. Consul iam per se turbatis si legionum signa ostendisset, uersuros extemplo in fugam omnis ratus receptis inter ordines uelitibus et alia turba auxiliorum aciem promouit.

[27] Galli et memoria Tolostobogiorum cladis territi et inhaerentia corporibus gerentes tela fessique et stando et uulneribus ne primum quidem impetum et clamorem Romanorum tulerunt. Fuga ad castra inclinauit; sed pauci intra munimenta sese recepere; pars maior dextra laeuaque praelati, qua quemque impetus tulit, fugerunt. Victores usque ad castra secuti ceciderunt terga; deinde in castris cupiditate praedae haeserunt, nec sequebatur quisquam. In cornibus Galli diutius steterunt, quia serius ad eos peruentum est; ceterum ne primum quidem coniectum telorum tulerunt. Consul quia ingressos in castra ab direptione abstrahere non poterat, eos, qui in cornibus fuerant, protinus ad sequendos hostis misit. Per aliquantum spatium secuti non plus tamen octo milia hominum in fuga — nam pugna nulla fuit — ceciderunt; reliqui flumen Halyn traiecerunt. Romanorum pars magna ea nocte in castris hostium mansit; ceteros in sua castra consul reduxit. Postero die captiuos praedamque recensuit, quae tanta fuit, quantam audissimum rapiendi gens, cum cis montem Taurum omnia armis per multos annos tenuisset, coaceruare potuit. Galli ex dissipata passim fuga in unum locum congregati, magna pars saucii aut inermes, nudati omnibus rebus, oratores de pace ad consulem miserunt. Eos Manlius Ephesum uenire iussit; ipse — iam enim medium autumnus erat — locis gelidis propinquitatem Tauri montis excedere properans uictorem exercitum in hiberna maritimae orae reduxit.

[28] Dum haec in Asia geruntur, in ceteris prouinciis tranquillae res fuerunt. Censores Romae T. Quinctius Flaminius et M. Claudius Marcellus senatum legerunt; princeps in senatu tertium lectus P.

Scipio Africanus; quattuor soli praeteriti sunt, nemo curuli usus honore. Et in equitatu recensendo mitis admodum censura fuit. Substructionem super Aequimelum in Capitolio et uiam silice sternendam a porta Capena ad Martis locauerunt. Campani, ubi censerentur, senatum consuluerunt; decretum, uti Romae censerentur. Aquae ingentes eo anno fuerunt; Tiberis duodeciens campum Martium planaue urbis inundauit. Ab Cn. Manlio consule bello in Asia cum Gallis perfecto, alter consul M. Fuluius perdomitis Aetolis cum traiecisset in Cephallaniam, circa ciuitates insulae misit percontatum, utrum se dedere Romanis an belli fortunam experiri mallent. Metus ad omnes ualuit, ne deditionem recusarent. Obsides inde imperatos pro uiribus inopes populi * * uicenos autem Cranii et Palenses et Samaei dederunt. Insperata pax Cephallaniae adfulserat, cum repente una ciuitas, incertum quam ob causam, Samaei descuerunt. Quia opportuno loco urbs posita esset, timuisse se aiebant, ne demigrare cogerentur ab Romanis. Ceterum ipsine sibi eum finxerint metum et timore uano quietum excitauerint malum, an iactata sermonibus res apud Romanos perlata ad eos sit, nihil comperti est, nisi quod datis iam obsidibus repente portas clausuerunt et ne suorum quidem precibus — miserat enim sub muros consul ad temptandam misericordiam parentum populariumque — desistere ab incepto uoluerunt. Oppugnari deinde, postquam nihil pacati respondebatur, coepta urbs est. Apparatum omnem tormentorum machinarumque trauctum ab Ambraciae oppugnatione habebat, et opera quae facienda erant, inpigre milites perfecerunt. Duobus igitur locis admoti arietes quatiebant muros.

[29] Nec ab Samaeis quicquam, quo aut opera aut hostis arceri posset, praetermissum est. Duabus tamen maxime resistebant rebus, una, interiorem semper iuxta ualidum pro diruto nouum obstruentes murum, altera, eruptionibus subitis nunc in opera hostium, nunc in stationes; et plerumque his proeliis superiores erant. Vna ad coercendos inuenta, haud magna memoratu, res est. Centum funditores ab Aegio et Patris et Dymis acciti. A pueris ii more quodam gentis saxis globosis, quibus ferme harenae immixtis strata litora sunt, funda mare apertum incessentes exercebantur. Itaque longius certiusque et ualidiore ictu quam Baliaris funditor eo telo usi sunt. Et est non simplicis habenae, ut Baliarica aliarumque gentium funda, sed triplex scutale, crebris suturis duratum, ne fluxa habena uolutetur in iactu glans, sed librata cum sederit, uelut neruo missa excutiat. Coronas modici circuli magno ex interuallo loci adsueta traicere non capita solum hostium uulnerabant, sed quem locum destinassent oris. Hae fundae Samaeos cohibuerunt, ne tam crebro neue tam audacter erumperent, adeo ut precarentur ex muris Achaeos, ut parumper abscederent et se cum Romanis stationibus pugnantis quiete spectarent. Quattuor menses obsidionem Same sustinuit. Cum ex paucis cotidie aliqui eorum caderent aut uulnerarentur, et qui supererant fessi et corporibus et animis essent, Romani nocte per arcem, quam Cyneatidem uocant — nam urbs in mare deuexa in occidentem uergit — , muro superato in forum peruenerunt. Samaei postquam captam partem urbis ab hostibus senserunt, cum coniugibus ac liberis in maiorem refugerunt arcem. Inde postero die dediti direpta urbe sub corona omnes uenierunt.

[30] Consul compositis rebus Cephallaniae, praesidio Samae imposito, in Peloponnesum iam diu accersentibus Aegiensibus maxime ac Lacedaemoniis traiecit. Aegium a principio Achaici concilii semper conuentus gentis indicti sunt, seu dignitati urbis id seu loci opportunitati datum est. Hunc morem Philopoemen eo primum anno labefactare conatus legem parabat ferre, ut in omnibus ciuitatibus, quae Achaici concilii essent, in uicem conuentus agerentur. Et sub ad uentum consulis damiurgis ciuitatum, qui summus est magistratus, Aegium euocantibus Philopoemen — praetor tum erat — Argos conuentum edixit. Quo cum appareret omnes ferme conuenturos, consul quoque, quamquam Aegiensium fauebat causae, Argos uenit; ubi cum disceptatio fuisset, et rem inclinatam cerneret, incepto destitit. Lacedaemonii deinde eum in sua certamina auerterunt. Sollicitam eam ciuitatem exules maxime habebant, quorum magna pars in maritimis Laconicae orae castellis, quae omnis adempta erat, habitabant. Id aegre patientes Lacedaemonii, ut aliqua liberum ad mare haberent aditum, si quando Romam alioque quo mitterent legatos, simul ut emporium et receptaculum peregrinis mercibus ad necessarios usus esset, nocte adorti uicum maritimum nomine Lan improuiso occupauerunt. Vicani quique ibi exules habitabant primo inopinata re territi sunt; deinde sub lucem congregati leui certamine expulerunt Lacedaemonios. Terror tamen omnem maritimam oram peruasit, legatosque communiter et castella omnia uicique et exules, quibus ibi domicilia erant, ad Achaeos miserunt.

[31] Philopoemen praetor, iam inde ab initio exulum causae [et] amicus, et auctor semper Achaeis minuendi opes et auctoritatem Lacedaemoniorum, concilium querentibus dedit, decretumque referente eo factum est, cum in fidem Achaeorum tutelamque T. Quinctius et Romani Laconicae orae castella et uicos tradidissent, et, cum abstinere iis ex foedere Lacedaemonii deberent, Las uicus oppugnatus esset, caedesque ibi facta, qui eius rei auctores adfinesque essent, nisi dederentur Achaeis, uiolatum uideri foedus. Ad exposcendos eos legati extemplo Lacedaemonem missi sunt. Id imperium adeo superbum et indignum Lacedaemoniis uisum est, ut, si antiqua ciuitatis fortuna esset, haud dubie arma extemplo capturi fuerint. Maxime autem consternauit eos metus, si semel primis imperiis oboediendo iugum acceperant, ne, id quod iam diu moliretur Philopoemen, exilibus Lacedaemonem traderet. Furentes igitur ira triginta hominibus ex factione, cum qua consiliorum aliqua societas Philopoemeni atque exilibus erat, interfectis decreuerunt renuntiandam societatem Achaeis legatosque extemplo Cephallaniam mittendos, qui consuli M. Fulvio quique Romanis Lacedaemonem dederent orarentque eum, ut ueniret in Peloponnesum ad urbem Lacedaemonem in fidem dicionemque populi Romani accipiendam.

[32] Id ubi legati ad Achaeos rettulerunt, omnium ciuitatum, quae eius concilii erant, consensu bellum Lacedaemoniis indictum est. Ne extemplo gereretur, hiems impediit; incursionibus tamen paruis, latrocinii magis quam belli modo, non terra tantum sed etiam nauibus a mari fines eorum uastati. Hic tumultus consulem Peloponnesum adduxit, iussuque eius Elin concilio indicto Lacedaemonii ad disceptandum acciti. Magna ibi non disceptatio modo sed altercatio fuit, cui consul, cum alia satis ambiciose partem utramque fouendo incerta respondisset, una denuntiatione, ut bello abstinerent, donec Romam ad senatum legatos misissent, finem imposuit. Vtrunque legatio missa Romam est. Exules quoque Lacedaemoniorum suam causam legationemque Achaeis iniunxerunt. Diophanes et Lycortas, Megalopolitani ambo, principes legationis Achaeorum fuerunt, qui, dissidentes in re publica, tum quoque minime inter se conuenientis orationes habuerunt. Diophanes senatui disceputationem omnium rerum permittebat: eos optime controuersias inter Achaeos ac Lacedaemonios finituros esse; Lycortas ex praeceptis Philopoemenis postulabat, ut Achaeis ex foedere ac legibus suis, quae decressent, agere liceret, libertatemque sibi illibatam, cuius ipsi auctores essent, praestarent. Magnae auctoritatis apud Romanos tum gens Achaeorum erat; nouari tamen nihil de Lacedaemoniis placebat. Ceterum responsum ita perplexum fuit, ut et Achaei sibi de Lacedaemone permissum acciperent, et Lacedaemonii non omnia concessa iis interpretarentur. Hac potestate immodice Achaei ac superbe usi sunt. Philopoemeni continuatur magistratus.

[33] Qui ueris initio exercitu indicto castra in finibus Lacedaemoniorum posuit, legatos deinde misit ad deposcendos auctores defectionis, et ciuitatem in pace futuram, si id fecisset, pollicentis, et illos nihil indicta causa passuros. Silentium prae metu ceterorum fuit; quos nominatim depoposcerat, ipsi se ituros professi sunt, fide accepta a legatis uim abfuturam, donec causam dixissent. Ierunt etiam alii illustres uiri, et aduocati priuatis, et quia pertinere causam eorum ad rem publicam censebant. Numquam alias exules Lacedaemoniorum Achaei secum adduxerant in finis, quia nihil aeque alienaturum animos ciuitatis uidebatur; tunc exercitus totius prope antesignani exules erant. Hi uenientibus Lacedaemoniis ad portam castrorum agmine facto occurrerunt; et primo lacessere iurgiis, deinde, altercatione orta, cum accenderentur irae, ferocissimi exulum impetum in Lacedaemonios fecerunt. Cum illi deos et fidem legatorum testarentur, et legati et praetor summouere turbam et protegere Lacedaemonios uinclaque iam quosdam iniciantis arcere. Crescebat tumultu concitato turba; et Achaei ad spectaculum primo concurrebant; deinde uociferantibus exulibus, quae passi forent, et orantibus opem adfirmantibusque simul numquam talem occasionem habituros, si eam praetermisissent; foedus, quod in Capitolio, quod Olympiae, quod in arce Athenis sacratum fuisset, irritum per illos esse; priusquam alio de integro foedere obligarentur, noxios puniendos esse, accensa his uocibus multitudo ad uocem unius, qui, ut ferirent, inclamauit, saxa coniecit. Atque ita decem septem, quibus uincula per tumultum iniecta erant, interfecti sunt. Sexaginta tres postero die comprehensi, a quibus praetor uim arcuerat, non quia saluos uellet, sed quia perire causa indicta nolebat, obiecti multitudini iratae, cum auersis auribus pauca locuti essent, damnati omnes et traditi sunt ad supplicium.

[34] Hoc metu iniecto Lacedaemoniis imperatum primum, uti muros diruerent; deinde, ut omnes externi auxiliares, qui mercede apud tyrannos militassent, terra Laconica excederent; tum uti quae seruitia tyranni liberassent — ea magna multitudo erat — ante diem certam abirent; qui ibi mansissent, eos prendendi abducendi uendendi Achaeis ius esset; Lycurgi leges moresque abrogarent, Achaeorum adsuescerent legibus institutisque: ita unius eos corporis fore et de omnibus rebus facilius consensuros. Nihil oboedientius fecerunt, quam ut muros diruerent, nec aegrius passi sunt quam exules reduci. Decretum Tegeae in concilio communi Achaeorum de restituendis iis factum est; et mentione illata externos auxiliares dimissos ac Lacedaemoniis adscriptos — ita enim uocabant qui ab tyrannis liberati erant — urbe excessisse <et> in agros dilapsos, priusquam dimitteretur exercitus, ire praetorem cum expeditis et comprehendere id genus hominum et uendere iure praedae placuit. Multi comprehensi uenierunt. Porticus ex ea pecunia Megalopoli permissu Achaeorum refecta est, quam Lacedaemonii diruerant. Et ager Belbinates, quem iniuria tyranni Lacedaemoniorum possederant, restitutus eidem ciuitati ex decreto uetere Achaeorum, quod factum erat Philippo Amyntae filio regnante. Per haec uelut eneruata ciuitas Lacedaemoniorum diu Achaeis obnoxia fuit; nulla tamen res tanto erat damno quam disciplina Lycurgi, cui per octingentos annos adsuerant, sublata.

[35] A concilio, ubi ad consulem inter Achaeos Lacedaemoniosque disceptatum est, M. Fuluius, quia iam in exitu annus erat, comitorum causa profectus Romam creauit consules M. Valerium Messalam et C. Liuium Salinatorem, cum M. Aemilium Lepidum inimicum eo quoque anno petentem deiecisset. Praetores inde creati Q. Marcius Philippus M. Claudius Marcellus C. Stertinius C. Atinius P. Claudius Pulcher L. Manlius Acidinus. Comitibus perfectis consulem M. Fuluium in prouinciam et ad exercitum redire placuit, eique et collegae Cn. Manlio imperium in annum prorogatum est. Eo anno in aede Herculis signum dei ipsius ex decemuirorum responso, et seiuges in Capitolio aurati a P. Cornelio positi; consulem dedisse inscriptum est. Et duodecim clipea aurata ab aedilibus curulibus P. Claudio Pulchro et Ser. Sulpicio Galba sunt posita ex pecunia, qua frumentarios ob annonam compressam damnarunt; et aedilis plebi Q. Fuluius Flaccus duo signa aurata uno reo damnato — nam separatim accusauerant — posuit; collega eius A. Caecilius neminem condemnauit. Ludi Romani ter, plebei quinquies toti instaurati. M. Valerius Messala inde et C. Liuius Salinator consulatum idibus Martiis cum inissent, de re publica deque prouinciis et exercitibus senatum consuluerunt. De Aetolia et Asia nihil mutatum est; consulibus alteri Pisae cum Liguribus, alteri Gallia prouincia decreta est. Comparare inter se aut sortiri iussi et nouos exercitus, binas legiones, scribere, et ut sociis Latini nominis quina dena milia peditum imperarent et mille et ducentos equites. Messalae Ligures, Salinatori obtigit Gallia. Praetores inde sortiti sunt: M. Claudio urbana, P. Claudio peregrina iurisdictio euenit; Q. Marcius Siciliam, C. Stertinius Sardiniam, L. Manlius Hispaniam citeriorem, C. Atinius ulteriorem est sortitus.

[36] De exercitibus ita placuit: ex Gallia legiones, quae sub C. Laelio fuerant, ad M. Tuccium propraetorem in Bruttios traduci, et, qui in Sicilia esset, dimitti exercitum, et classem, quae ibi esset, Romam reduceret M. Sempronius propraetor. Hispaniis singulae legiones, quae tum in iis prouinciis erant, decretae, et ut terna milia peditum, ducenos equites ambo praetores in supplementum sociis imperarent secumque transportarent. Priusquam in prouincias noui magistratus proficiscerentur, supplicatio triduum pro collegio decemuirorum imperata fuit in omnibus compitis, quod luce inter horam tertiam ferme et quartam tenebrae abortae fuerant. Et nouemdiale sacrificium indictum est, quod in Auentino lapidibus pluisset. Campani, cum eos ex senatus consulto, quod priore anno factum erat, censores Romae censi coegissent — nam antea incertum fuerat, ubi censerentur —, petierunt, ut sibi ciues Romanas ducere uxores liceret, et, si qui prius duxissent, ut habere eas, et nati ante eam diem uti iusti sibi liberi heredesque essent. Vtraque res impetrata. De Formianis Fundanisque municipibus et Arpinatibus C. Valerius Tappo tribunus plebis promulgauit, ut iis suffragii latio — nam antea sine suffragio habuerant ciuitatem — esset. Huic rogationi quattuor tribuni plebis, quia non ex auctoritate senatus ferretur, cum intercederent, edocti, populi esse, non senatus ius suffragium, quibus uelit, impertire, destiterunt incepto. Rogatio perlata est, ut in Aemilia tribu Formiani et Fundani, in Cornelia Arpinates ferrent; atque in his tribubus tum primum ex Ualerio plebiscito censi sunt. M. Claudius Marcellus censor sorte superato T. Quinctio lustrum condidit. Censa sunt ciuium capita CCLVIII^{CCCXVIII}. Lustrum perfecto consules in prouincias profecti sunt.

[37] Hieme ea, qua haec Romae gesta sunt, ad Cn. Manlium consulem primum, dein pro consule, hibernantem in Asia, legationes undique ex omnibus ciuitatibus gentibusque, quae cis Taurum montem incolunt, conueniebant. Et ut clarior nobiliorque uictoria Romanis de rege Antiocho fuit quam de Gallis, ita laetior sociis erat de Gallis quam de Antiocho. Tolerabilior regia seruitus fuerat quam feritas immanium barbarorum incertusque in dies terror, quo uelut tempestas eos populantis inferret. Itaque, ut quibus libertas Antiocho pulso, pax Gallis domitis data esset, non gratulatum modo uenerant, sed coronas etiam aureas pro suis quaeque facultatibus attulerant. Et ab Antiocho legati et ab ipsis Gallis, ut pacis leges dicerentur, et ab Ariarathe rege Cappadocum uenerunt ad ueniam petendam luendamque pecunia noxam, quod auxiliis Antiochum iuuisset. Huic sescenta talenta argenti sunt imperata; Gallis responsum, cum Eumenes rex uenisset, tum daturum iis leges. Ciuitatium legationes cum benignis responsis, laetiores etiam quam uenerant, dimissae. Antiochi legati pecuniam in Pamphyliam frumentumque ex pacto cum L. Scipione foedere iussi aduehere; eo se cum exercitu uenturum. Principio deinde ueris lustrato exercitu profectus die octauo Apameam uenit. Ibi triduum statuiis habitis, tertiis rursus ab Apamea castris in Pamphyliam, quo pecuniam frumentumque regio conuehere iusserat, peruenit. <duo> milia et quingenta talenta argenti accepta Apameam deportantur; frumentum exercitui diuiditur. Inde ad Pergam ducit, quae una in iis locis regio tenebatur praesidio. Appropinquant praefectus praesidii obuius fuit, triginta dierum tempus petens, ut regem Antiochum de urbe tradenda consuleret. Dato tempore ad eam diem praesidio decessum est. A Perga L. Manlio fratre cum quattuor milibus militum Oroanda ad reliquum pecuniae ex eo, quod pepigerant, exigendum misso, ipse, quia Eumenem regem et decem legatos ab Roma Ephesum uenisse audierat, iussis sequi Antiochi legatis Apameam exercitum reduxit.

[38] Ibi ex decem legatorum sententia foedus in haec uerba fere cum Antiocho conscriptum est: ‘amicitia regi Antiocho cum populo Romano his legibus et condicionibus esto: ne quem exercitum, qui cum populo Romano sociisue bellum gesturus erit, rex per fines regni sui eorumue, qui sub ditione eius erunt, transire sinito, neu commeatu neu qua alia ope iuato; idem Romani sociique Antiocho et iis, qui sub imperio eius erunt, praestent. Belli gerendi ius Antiocho ne esto cum iis, qui insulas colunt, neu in Europam transeundi. Excedito urbibus agris uicis castellis cis Taurum montem usque ad Halyn amnem, et a ualle Tauri usque ad iuga, qua in Lycaoniam uergit. Ne qua <praeter> arma efferto ex iis oppidis agris castellisque, quibus excedat; si qua extulit, quo quaeque oportebit, recte restituito. Ne militem neu quem alium ex regno Eumenis recipito. Controuersias inter¹ se iure ac iudicio disceptando, aut, si utrisque placebit, bello.’ De Hannibale Poeno et Aetolo Thoante et Mnasilocho Acarnane et Chalcidensibus Ebulida et Philone dedendis in hoc quoque foedere adscriptum est, et ut, si quid postea addi demi mutariue placuisset, ut id saluo foedere fieret.

[39] Consul in hoc foedus iurauit; ab rege qui exigenter iusiurandum, profecti Q. Minucius Thermus et L. Manlius, qui tum forte ab Oroandis rediit. Et Q. Fabio Labeoni, qui classi praeerat, scripsit, ut Patara extemplo proficisceretur, quaeque ibi naues regiae essent, concideret cremaretque. Profectus ab Epheso quinquaginta tectas naues aut concidit aut incendit. Telmessum eadem expeditione territis subito aduentu classis oppidanis recipit. Ex Lycia protinus, iussis ab Epheso sequi, qui ibi relictis erant, per insulas in Graeciam traiecit. Athenis paucos moratus dies, dum Piraeum ab Epheso naues uenirent, totam inde classem in Italiam reduxit. Cn. Manlius cum inter cetera, quae accipienda ab Antiocho erant, elephantos quoque accepisset donoque Eumeni omnis dedisset, causas deinde ciuitatum, multis inter nouas res turbatis, cognouit. Et Ariarathes rex parte dimidia pecuniae imperatae beneficio Eumenis, cui desponderat per eos dies filiam, remissa in amicitiam est acceptus. Ciuitatum autem cognitis causis decem legati aliam aliarum fecerunt condicionem. Quae stipendiariae regi Antiocho fuerant et cum populo Romano senserant, iis immunitatem dederunt; quae partium Antiochi fuerant aut stipendiariae Attali regis, eas omnes uestigal pendere Eumeni iusserunt. Nominatim praeterea Colophoniis, qui in Notio habitant, et Cymaeis et Mylasenis immunitatem concesserunt; Clazomeniis super immunitatem et Drymussam insulam dono dederunt, et Milesiis quem sacrum appellant agrum restituerunt, et Iliensibus Rhoeteum et Gergithum addiderunt, non tam ob recentia ulla merita quam originum memoria. Eadem et Dardanum liberandi causa fuit. Chios quoque et Zmyrnaeos et Erythraeos pro singulari fide, quam eo bello praestiterunt, et agro donarunt et in omni praecipuo honore habuerunt. Phocaeensibus et ager, quem ante bellum habuerant, redditus, et ut legibus antiquis uterentur permissum. Rhodiis adfirmata, quae data priore decreto erant; Lycia et Caria datae usque ad Maeandrum amnem praeter Telmessum. Regi Eumeni Chersonesum in Europa et Lysimachiam, castella, uicos, agrum, quibus finibus tenuerat Antiochus, adiecerunt; in Asia Phrygiam utramque — alteram ad Hellespontum, maiorem alteram uocant — et Mysiam, quam Prusia rex ademerat, ei restituerunt, et Lycaoniam et Milyada et Lydiam et nominatim urbes Tralles atque Ephesum et Telmessum. De Pamphylia disceptatum inter Eumenem et Antiochi legatos cum esset, quia pars eius citra pars ultra Taurum est, integra <res> ad senatum reicitur.

[40] His foederibus decretisque datis Manlius cum decem legatis omnique exercitu ad Hellespontum profectus, euocatis eo regulis Gallorum, leges, quibus pacem cum Eumene seruarent, dixit, denuntiavit, ut morem uagandi cum armis finirent agrorumque suorum terminis se continerent. Contractis deinde ex omni ora nauibus et Eumenis etiam classe per Athenaeum fratrem regis ab Elaea adducta copias omnes in Europam traiecit. Inde per Chersonesum modicis itineribus graue praeda omnis generis agmen trahens Lysimachiae statua habuit, ut quam maxime recentibus et integris iumentis Thraeciam, per quam iter uulgo horrebant, ingrederetur. Quo profectus est ab Lysimachia die, ad amnem Melana quem uocant, inde postero die Cypsela peruenit. A Cypselis uia decem milium fere siluestris angusta confragosa excipiebat, propter cuius difficultatem itineris in duas partes diuisus exercitus, et praecedere una iussa, altera magno interuallo cogere agmen, media impedimenta interposuit; plaustra cum pecunia publica erant pretiosaque alia praeda. Ita cum per saltum iret, Thraecum decem haud amplius milia ex quattuor populis, Astii et Caeni et Maduateni et Coreli, ad ipsas angustias uiam circumsederunt. Opinio erat non sine Philippi Macedonum regis fraude id factum; eum scisse non alia quam per Thraeciam redituros Romanos, et quantam pecuniam secum portarent. In primo agmine imperator erat, sollicitus propter iniquitatem locorum. Thraeces nihil se mouerunt, donec armati transirent; postquam primos superasse angustias uiderunt, postremos nondum appropinquantis, impedimenta et sarcinas inuadunt, caesisque custodibus partim ea, quae in plaustis erant, diripere, partim sub oneribus iumenta abstrahere. Vnde postquam clamor primum ad eos, qui iam ingressi saltum sequebantur, deinde etiam ad primum agmen est perlatus, utrimque in medium concurritur, et inordinatum pluribus simul locis proelium conseritur. Thraecas praeda ipsa impeditos oneribus et plerosque, ut ad rapiendum uacuas manus haberent, inermes ad caedem praebet; Romanos iniquitas locorum barbaris per calles notas obscurantibus et latentibus interdum per cauas ualles prodebat. Ipsa etiam onera plaustaque, ut fors tulit, his aut illis incommode obiecta pugnantibus impedimento sunt. Alibi praedo, alibi praedae uindex cadit. Prout locus iniquus aequusue his aut illis, prout animus pugnantium est, prout numerus — alii enim pluribus, quam ipsi erant, alii paucioribus occurrerant — , uaria fortuna pugnae est; multi utrimque cadunt. Iam nox appetebat, cum proelio excedunt Thraeces, non fuga uulnerum aut mortis, sed quia satis praedae habebant.

[41] Romanorum primum agmen extra saltum circa templum Bendidium castra loco aperto posuit; pars altera ad custodiam impedimentorum medio in saltu, duplici circumdato uallo, mansit. Postero die prius explorato saltu, quam mouerent, primis se coniungunt. In eo proelio cum et impedimentorum et calonum pars et milites aliquot, cum passim toto prope saltu pugnaretur, cecidissent, plurimum Q. Minucii Thermi morte damni est acceptum, fortis ac strenui uiri. Eo die ad Hebrum flumen peruentum est. Inde Aeniorum finis praeter Apollinis, Zerynthium quem uocant incolae, templum superant. Aliae angustiae circa Tempyra excipiunt — hoc loco nomen est — , nec minus confragosae quam priores; sed, quia nihil siluestre circa est, ne latebras quidem ad insidiandum praebent. Huc ad eandem spem praedae Thrausi, gens et ipsa Thraecum, conuenere; sed, quia nuda ualles, procul ut conspicerentur angustias obsidentes, efficiebant, minus terroris tumultusque fuit apud Romanos; quippe etsi iniquo loco, proelio tamen iusto, acie aperta, signis collatis dimicandum erat. Conferti subeunt et cum clamore impetu facto primum expulere loco hostis, deinde auertere; fuga inde caedesque suis ipsos impredientibus angustis fieri coepta est. Romani uictores ad uicum Maronitarum — Salen appellant — posuerunt castra.

Postero die patenti itinere Priaticus campus eos excepit, triduumque ibi frumentum accipientes manserunt, partem ex agris Maronitarum, conferentibus ipsis, partem ex nauibus suis, quae cum omnis generis commeatu sequebantur. Ab statuiis diei uia Apolloniam fuit. Hinc per Abderitarum agrum Neapolim peruentum est. Hoc omne per Graecorum colonias pacatum iter fuit; reliquum inde per medios Thraecas dies noctesque, etsi non infestum, tamen suspectum, donec in Macedoniam peruenerunt. Mitiores Thraecas idem exercitus, cum a Scipione eadem uia duceretur, habuerat, nullam ob aliam causam, quam quod praedae minus, quod peteretur, fuerat; quamquam tunc quoque Claudius auctor est ad quindecim milia Thraecum praecedenti ad exploranda loca agmen Muttini Numidae occurrisse. Quadringentos equites fuisse Numidas, paucos elephantos; Muttinis filium per medios hostes cum centum quinquaginta delectis equitibus perrupisse; eundem mox, cum iam Muttines in medio elephantis locatis, in cornua equitibus dispositis manum cum hoste conseruisset, terrorem ab tergo praebuisse, atque inde turbatos equestri uelut procella hostis ad peditum agmen non accessisse. Cn. Manlius per Macedoniam in Thessaliam exercitum traduxit. Inde per Epirum Apolloniam cum peruenisset, nondum adeo hiberno contempto mari, ut traicere auderet, Apolloniae hibernauit.

[42] Exitu prope anni M. Valerius consul ex Liguribus ad magistratus subrogandos Romam uenit nulla memorabili in prouincia gesta re, ut ea probabilis morae causa esset, quod solito serius ad comitia uenisset. Comititia consulibus rogandis fuerunt a. D. XII. Kal. Martias; creati M. Aemilius Lepidus C. Flaminius. Postero die praetores facti Ap. Claudius Pulcher Ser. Sulpicius Galba Q. Terentius Culleo L. Terentius Massaliota Q. Fuluius Flaccus M. Furius Crassipes. Comititiis perfectis, quas prouincias praetoribus esse placeret, retulit ad senatum consul. Decreuerunt duas Romae iuris dicendi causa, duas extra Italiam, Siciliam ac Sardiniam, duas in Italia, Tarentum et Galliam; et extemplo, priusquam inirent magistratum, sortiri iussi. Ser. Sulpicius urbanam, Q. Terentius peregrinam est sortitus, L. Terentius Siciliam, Q. Fuluius Sardiniam, Ap. Claudius Tarentum, M. Furius Galliam. Eo anno L. Minucius Myrtilus et L. Manlius, quod legatos Carthaginienses pulsasse dicebantur, iussu M. Claudii praetoris urbani per fetiales traditi sunt legatis et Carthaginem aucti. In Liguribus magni belli et gliscentis in dies magis fama erat. Itaque consulibus nouis, quo die de prouinciis et de re publica retulerunt, senatus utrisque Ligures prouinciam decreuit. Huic senatus consulto Lepidus consul intercedebat, indignum esse praedicans consules ambos in ualles Ligurum includi, M. Fuluium et Cn. Manlium biennium iam, alterum in Europa, alterum in Asia, uelut pro Philippo atque Antiocho substitutos regnare. Si exercitus in his terris esse placeat, consules iis potius quam priuatos praeesse oportere. Vagare eos cum belli terrore per nationes, quibus bellum indictum non sit, pacem pretio uenditantis. Si eas prouincias exercitibus obtinere opus esset, sicut M'. Acilio L. Scipio consul, L. Scipioni M. Fuluius et Cn. Manlius successissent consules, ita Fuluius Manlioque C. Liuium et M. Valerium consules debuisse succedere. Nunc certe, perfecto Aetolico bello, recepta ab Antiocho Asia, deuictis Gallis, aut consules ad exercitus consulares mitti aut reportari legiones inde reddique tandem rei publicae debere. Senatus his auditis in sententia perseuerauit, ut consulibus ambobus Ligures prouincia esset; Manlium Fuluiumque decedere de prouinciis et exercitus inde deducere ac redire Romam placuit.

[43] Inimicitiae inter M. Fuluium et M. Aemilium consulem erant, et super cetera Aemilius serius biennio se consulem factum M. Fuluii opera ducebat. Itaque ad inuidiam ei faciendam legatos Ambraciensis in senatum subornatos criminibus introduxit, qui sibi, cum in pace essent imperataque prioribus consulibus fecissent et eadem oboedienter praestare M. Fuluius parati essent, bellum illatum questi, agros primum depopulatos, terrorem direptionis et caedis urbi iniectum, ut eo metu claudere cogerentur portas; obsessos deinde et oppugnatos se, et omnia exempla belli edita in se caedibus incendiis ruinis direptione urbis, coniuges liberos in seruitium abstractos, bona adempta, et, quod se ante omnia moueat, templa tota urbe spoliata ornamentis; simulacra deum, deos immo ipsos, conuulsos ex sedibus suis ablatos esse; parietes postesque nudatos, quos adorent, ad quos precentur et supplicent, Ambraciensibus superesse — : haec querentis interrogando criminoze ex composito consul ad plura uelut non sua sponte dicenda eliciebat. Motis patribus alter consul C. Flaminius M. Fuluii causam excepit, qui ueterem uiam et obsoletam ingressos Ambracienses dixit; sic M. Marcellum ab Syracusanis, sic Q. Fuluium a Campanis accusatos. Quin eadem opera T. Quinctium a Philippo rege, M'. Acilium et L. Scipionem ab Antiocho, Cn. Manlium a Gallis, ipsum M. Fuluium ab Aetolis et Cephallaniae populis accusari paterentur? 'Ambraciam oppugnatam et captam et signa inde ornamentaque ablata et cetera facta, quae captis urbibus soleant, negaturum aut me pro M. Fuluiio aut ipsum M. Fuluium censetis, patres conscripti, qui ob has res gestas triumphum a uobis postulaturus sit, Ambraciam captam signaque, quae ablata criminantur, et cetera spolia eius urbis ante currum laturus et fixurus in postibus suis? Nihil est, quod se ab Aetolis separent; eadem Ambraciensium et Aetolorum causa est. Itaque collega meus uel in alia causa inimicitias exerceat, uel, si in hac utique mauult, retineat Ambraciensis suos in aduentum M. Fuluii; ego nec de Ambraciensibus nec de Aetolis decerni quicquam absente M. Fuluiio patiar.'

[44] Cum Aemilius callidam malitiam inimici uelut notam omnibus insimularet et tempus eum morando extracturum diceret, ne consule inimico Romam ueniret, certamine consulum biduum absumptum est; nec praesente Flaminio decerni quicquam uidebatur posse. Captata occasio est, cum aeger forte Flaminius abesset, et referente Aemilio senatus consultum factum est, ut Ambraciensibus suae res omnes redderentur; in libertate essent ac legibus suis uterentur; portoria, quae uellent, terra marique caperent, dum eorum immunes Romani ac socii nominis Latini essent; signa aliaque ornamenta, quae quererentur ex aedibus sacris sublata esse, de iis, cum M. Fuluius Romam reuertisset, placere ad collegium pontificum referri, et quod ii censuissent, fieri. Neque his contentus consul fuit, sed postea per infrequentiam adiecit senatus consultum, Ambraciam ui captam esse non uideri. Supplicatio inde ex decemuiorum decreto pro ualetudine populi per triduum fuit, quia grauis pestilentia urbem atque agros uastabat. Latinae inde fuerunt. Quibus religionibus liberati consules et dilectu perfecto — nouis enim uterque maluit uti militibus — in prouinciam profecti sunt, ueteresque omnes dimiserunt. Post consulum profectionem Cn. Manlius proconsul Romam uenit; cui cum ab Ser. Sulpicio praetore senatus ad aedem Bellonae datus esset, et ipse commemoratis rebus ab se gestis postulasset, ut ob eas diis immortalibus honos haberetur sibique triumphanti urbem inuehi liceret, contradixerunt pars maior decem legatorum, qui cum eo fuerant, et ante alios L. Furius Purpurio et L. Aemilius Paulus.

[45] Legatos sese Cn. Manlio datos pacis cum Antiocho faciendae causa foederisque legum, quae cum L. Scipione inchoatae fuissent, perficiendarum. Cn. Manlium summa ope tetendisse, ut eam pacem turbaret, et Antiochum, si sui potestatem fecisset, insidiis exciperet; sed illum cognita fraude consulis, cum saepe colloquiis petitis captatus esset, non congressum modo sed conspectum etiam eius uitassee. Cupientem transire Taurum aegre omnium legatorum precibus, ne carminibus Sibyllae praedictam superantibus terminos fatalis cladem experiri uellet, retentum admosse tamen exercitum et prope <in> ipsis iugis ad diuortia aquarum castra posuisse. Cum ibi nullam belli causam inueniret quiescentibus regiis, circumegisse exercitum ad Gallograecos; cui nationi non ex senatus auctoritate, non populi iussu bellum illatum. Quod quem umquam de sua sententia facere ausum? Antiochi Philippi Hannibalis et Poenorum recentissima bella esse; de omnibus his consultum senatum, populum iussisse, per legatos ante res repetitas, postremo, qui bellum indicerent, missos. ‘Quid eorum, Cn. Manli, factum est, ut istud publicum populi Romani bellum et non tuum priuatum latrocinium ducamus? At eo ipso contentus fuisti, recto itinere exercitum duxisti ad eos, quos tibi hostis desumpseras; an per omnes amfractus uiarum, cum ad biuia consisteres, ut, quo flexisset agmen Attalus, Eumenis frater, eo consul mercennarius cum exercitu Romano sequereris, Pisidiae Lycaoniaeque et Phrygiae recessus omnis atque angulos peragrasti, stipem ab tyrannis castellanisque deuiis colligens? Quid enim tibi cum Oroandis? Quid cum aliis aequae innoxiiis populis?’ ‘Bellum autem ipsum, cuius nomine triumphum petis, quo modo gessisti? Loco aequo, tempore tuo pugnasti? Tu uero recte, ut diis immortalibus honos habeatur, postulas, primum quod pro temeritate imperatoris, nullo gentium iure bellum inferentis, poenas luere exercitum noluerunt; deinde quod beluas, non hostis nobis obiecerunt.

[46] Nolite nomen tantum existimare mixtum esse Gallograecorum; multo ante et corpora et animi mixti ac uitati sunt. An, si illi Galli

essent, cum quibus milliens uario euentu in Italia pugnatum est, quantum in imperatore uestro fuit, nuntius illinc redisset? Bis cum iis pugnatum est, bis loco iniquo subiit, in ualle inferiore pedibus paene hostium aciem subiecit. Vt non tela ex superiore loco mitterent, sed corpora sua nuda inicerent, obruere nos potuerunt. Quid igitur incidit? Magna fortuna populi Romani est, magnum et terribile nomen. Recenti ruina Hannibalis Philippi Antiochi prope attoniti erant. Tantae corporum moles fundis sagittisque in fugam consternatae sunt; gladius in acie cruentatus non est Gallico bello; uelut auium examina ad crepitum primum missilium auolauere. At hercule iidem nos — monente fortuna, quid, si hostem habuissemus, casurum fuisset — cum redeuntes in latrunculos Thracas incidissemus, caesi, fugati, exuti impedimentis sumus. Q. Minucius Thermus, in quo haud paulo plus damni factum est, quam si Cn. Manlius, cuius temeritate ea clades inciderat, perisset, cum multis uiris fortibus cecidit; exercitus spolia regis Antiochi referens trifariam dissipatus, alibi primum, alibi postremum agmen, alibi impedimenta, inter uepres in latebris ferarum noctem unam delituit. Pro his triumphus petitur? Si nihil in Thracia cladis ignominiaeque foret acceptum, de quibus hostibus triumphum peteres? De iis, ut opinor, quos tibi hostes senatus aut populus Romanus dedisset. Sic huic L. Scipioni, sic illi M'. Acilio de rege Antiocho, sic paulo ante T. Quinctio de rege Philippo, sic P. Africano de Hannibale et Poenis et Syphace triumphus datus. Et minima illa, cum iam senatus censuisset bellum, quaesita tamen sunt, quibus nuntiandum esset: ipsis utique regibus nuntiaretur, an satis esset ad praesidium aliquod nuntiari. Vultis ergo haec omnia pollui et confundi, tolli fetialia iura, nullos esse fetiales? Fiat, pace deum dixerim, iactura religionis; obliuio deorum capiat pectora uestra; num senatum quoque de bello consuli non placet? Non ad populum ferri, uelint iubeantne cum Gallis bellum geri? Modo certe consules Graeciam atque Asiam uolebant; tamen perseuerantibus uobis Ligures prouinciam decernere dicto audientes fuerunt. Merito ergo a uobis prospere bello gesto triumphum petent, quibus auctoribus gesserunt.'

[47] Talis oratio Furii et Aemilii fuit. Manlium in hunc maxime modum respondisse accepi: 'tribuni plebis antea solebant triumphum postulantibus aduersari, patres conscripti; quibus ego gratiam habeo, quod seu mihi seu magnitudini rerum gestarum hoc dederunt, ut non solum silentio comprobarent honorem meum, sed referre etiam, si opus esset, uiderentur parati esse; ex decem legatis, si diis placet, quod consilium dispensandae cohonestandaeque uictoriae imperatoribus maiores dederunt nostri, aduersarios habeo. L. Furius et L. Aemilius curram triumphalem me conscendere prohibent, coronam insignem capiti detrahunt, quos ego, si tribuni triumphare me prohiberent, testes citaturus fui rerum a me gestarum. Nullius equidem inuideo honori, patres conscripti; uos tribunos plebei nuper, uiros fortes ac strenuos, impediens Q. Fabii Labeonis triumphum auctoritate uestra deterruistis; triumphauit, quem non bellum iniustum gessisse, sed hostem omnino non uidisse inimici iactabant; ego, qui cum centum milibus ferocissimorum hostium signis collatis totiens pugnaui, qui plus quadraginta milia hominum cepi aut occidi, qui bina castra eorum expugnaui, qui citra iuga Tauri omnia pacatiora, quam terra Italia est, reliqui, non triumpho modo fraudor, sed causam apud uos, patres conscripti, accusantibus meis ipse legatis dico. Duplex eorum, ut animaduertistis, patres conscripti, accusatio fuit: nam nec gerendum mihi fuisse bellum cum Gallis, et gestum temere atque imprudenter dixerunt. 'Non erant Galli hostes, sed tu eos pacatos imperata facientes uiolasti.' Non sum postulaturus a uobis, patres conscripti, ut, quae communiter de immanitate gentis Gallorum, de infestissimo odio in nomen Romanum scitis, ea de illis quoque, qui Asiam incolunt, existimetis Gallis; remota uniuersae gentis infamia atque inuidia per se ipsos aestimate. Utinam rex Eumenes, utinam Asiae omnes ciuitates adessent, et illos potius querentes quam me accusantem audiretis. Mittite, agedum, legatos circa omnes Asiae urbes et quaerite, ultra grauiori seruitute, Antiocho ultra Tauri iuga emoto an Gallis subactis, liberati sint. Quotiens agri eorum uastati sint, quotiens praedae abactae, referant, cum uix redimendi captiuos copia esset, et mactatas humanas hostias immolatosque liberos suos audirent. Stipendium scitote pependisse socios uestros Gallis et nunc, liberatos per uos regio imperio, fuisse pensuros, si a me foret cessatum.

[48] Quo longius Antiochus emotus esset, hoc impotentius in Asia Galli dominarentur, et, quidquid est terrarum citra Tauri iuga, Gallorum imperio, non uestro adiecissetis. At enim sunt quidem ista

uera; <sed> etiam Delphos quondam, commune humani generis oraculum, umbilicum orbis terrarum, Galli spoliauerunt, nec ideo populus Romanus his bellum indixit aut intulit. Equidem aliquid interesse rebar inter id tempus, quo nondum in iure ac ditione uestra Graecia atque Asia erat, ad curandum animaduertendumque, quid in his terris fieret, et hoc, quo finem imperii Romani Taurum montem statuistis, quo libertatem, immunitatem ciuitatibus datis, quo aliis fines adicitis, alias agro multatis, aliis uestigal imponitis, regna augetis minuitis donatis adimitis, curae uestrae censetis esse, ut pacem terra marique habeant. An, nisi praesidia deduxisset Antiochus, quae quieti in suis arcibus erant, non putaretis liberatam Asiam; si Gallorum exercitus effusi uagarentur, rata dona uestra, quae dedistis, regi Eumeni, rata libertas ciuitatibus esset? Sed quid ego haec ita argumentor, tamquam non acceperim, sed fecerim hostes Gallos? Te, L. Scipio, appello, cuius ego mihi, succedens in uicem imperii tui, uirtutem felicitatemque pariter non frustra ab diis immortalibus precatus sum, te, P. Scipio, qui legati ius, collegae maiestatem et apud fratrem consulem et apud exercitum habuisti, sciatisme in exercitu Antiochi Gallorum legiones fuisse, uideritis in acie eos, in cornu utroque — id enim roboris esse uidebatur — locatos, pugnaueritis ut cum hostibus iustis, cecideritis, spolia eorum retuleritis. Atqui cum Antiocho, non cum Gallis bellum et senatus decreuerat et populus iusserat. Sed simul, ut opinor, cum his decreuerant iusserantque, qui intra praesidia eius fuissent; ex quibus praeter Antiochum, cum quo pacem pepigerat Scipio, et cum quo nominatim foedus ut fieret mandaueratis, omnes hostes erant, qui pro Antiocho arma aduersus nos tulerunt. In qua causa cum Galli ante omnes fuissent et reguli quidam et tyranni, ego tamen et cum aliis, pro dignitate imperii uestri coactis luere peccata sua, pacem pepigi, et Gallorum animos, si possent mitigari a feritate insita, temptaui et, postquam indomitos atque implacabiles cernebam, tum demum ui atque armis coercendos ratus sum.’ ‘Nunc, quoniam suscepti belli purgatum est crimen, gesti reddenda est ratio. In quo confiderem equidem causae meae, etiam si non apud Romanum sed apud Carthaginiensem senatum agerem, ubi in crucem tolli imperatores dicuntur, si prospero euentu, prauo consilio rem gesserunt; sed ego in ea ciuitate, quae ideo omnibus rebus incipiendis gerendisque deos adhibet, quia nullius calumniae subicit ea, quae dii comprobauerunt, et in sollemnibus uerbis habet, cum supplicationem aut triumphum decernit, ‘quod bene ac feliciter rem publicam administrarit’, si nollem, si graue ac superbum existimarem uirtute gloriari, <si> pro felicitate mea exercitusque mei, quod tantam nationem sine ulla militum iactura deuicimus, postularem, ut diis immortalibus honos haberetur et ipse triumphans in Capitolium ascenderem, unde uotis rite nuncupatis profectus sum, negaretis hoc mihi cum diis immortalibus?

[49] Iniquo enim loco dimicaui. Dic igitur, quo aequiore potuerim dimicare. Cum hostes montem cepissent, loco se munito tenerent, nempe eundum ad hostes erat, si uincere uellem. Quid? Si urbem eo loco haberent et moenibus se tenerent? Nempe oppugnandi erant. Quid? Ad Thermopylas aequone loco M’. Acilius cum rege Antiocho pugnaui? Quid? Philippum non eodem modo super Aoum amnem iuga tenentem montium T. Quinctius deiecit? Equidem adhuc, qualem aut sibi fingant aut uobis uideri uelint hostem fuisse, non inuenio. Si degenerem et emollitum amoenitate Asiae, quid periculi uel iniquo loco subeuntibus fuit? Si timendum et feritate animorum et robore corporum, huicine tantae uictoriae triumphum negatis? Caeca inuidia est, patres conscripti, nec quicquam aliud scit quam detractare uirtutes, corrumpere honores ac praemia earum. Mihi quaeso ita ignoscatis, patres conscripti, si longiorem orationem non cupiditas gloriandi de me, sed necessaria criminum defensio fecit. An etiam per Thraciam saltus patentes, qui angusti erant, et plana ex arduis et culta ex siluestribus facere potui et praestare, necubi notis sibi latebris delitescerent latrones Thraces, ne quid sarcinarum raperetur, ne quod iumentum ex tanto agmine abstraheretur, ne quis uulneraretur, ne ex uulnere uir fortis ac strenuus Q. Minucius moreretur? In hoc casu, quo infeliciter incidit, ut talem ciuem amitteremus, haerent; quod saltu iniquo, loco alieno cum adortus nos hostis esset, duae simul acies primi et nouissimi agminis haerentem ad impedimenta nostra exercitum barbarorum circumuenerunt, quod multa milia <illo> ipso die, plura multo post dies paucos ceciderunt et ceperunt, hoc, si ipsi tacuerint, uos scituros, cum testis orationis meae totus exercitus sit, non credunt? Si gladium in Asia non strinxissem, si hostem non uidissem, tamen [proconsul] triumphum in Thracia duobus proeliis merueram. Sed iam dictum satis est; quin pro eo, quod pluribus uerbis uos quam uellem fatigauī, ueniam a uobis petitam impetratamque uelim, patres conscripti.

[50] Plus crimina eo die quam defensio ualuisset, nī altercationem in serum perduxissent. Dimittitur senatus in ea opinione, ut negaturus triumphum fuisse uideretur. Postero die et cognati amicique Cn. Manlii summis opibus adnisi sunt, et auctoritas seniorum ualuit, negantium exemplum proditum memoriae esse, ut imperator, qui deuictis perduellibus, confecta prouincia exercitum reportasset, sine curru et laurea priuatus inhonoratusque urbem iniret. Hic pudor malignitatem uicit, triumphumque frequentes decreuerunt. Oppressit deinde mentionem memoriamque omnem contentionis huius maius et cum maiore et clariore uiro certamen ortum. P. Scipioni Africano, ut Ualerius Antias auctor est, duo Q. Petillii diem dixerunt. Id, prout cuiusque ingenium erat, interpretabantur. Alii non tribunos plebis, sed uniuersam ciuitatem, quae id pati posset, incusabant: duas maximas orbis terrarum urbes ingratas uno prope tempore in principes inuentas, Romam ingratiorem, si quidem uicta Carthago uictum Hannibalem in exilium expulisset, Roma uictrix uictorem Africanum expellat. Alii, neminem unum ciuem tantum eminere debere, ut legibus interrogari non possit; nihil tam aequandae libertatis esse quam potentissimum quemque posse dicere causam. Quid autem tuto cuiquam, nedum summam rem publicam, permitti, si ratio non sit reddenda? Qui ius aequum pati non possit, in eum uim haud iniustam esse. Haec agitata sermonibus, donec dies causae dicendae uenit. Nec alius antea quisquam nec ille ipse Scipio consul censorue maiore omnis generis hominum frequentia quam reus illo die in forum est deductus. Iussus dicere causam sine ulla criminum mentione orationem adeo magnificam de rebus ab se gestis est exorsus, ut satis constaret neminem umquam neque melius neque uerius laudatum esse. Dicebantur enim ab <eo> eodem animo ingenioque, quo gesta erant, et aurium fastidium aberat, quia pro periculo, non in gloriam referebantur.

[51] Tribuni uetera luxuriae crimina Syracusanorum hibernorum et Locris Pleminianum tumultum cum ad fidem praesentium criminum retulissent, suspicionibus magis quam argumentis pecuniae captae reum accusarunt: filium captum sine pretio redditum, omnibusque

aliis rebus Scipionem, tamquam in eius unius manu pax Romana bellumque esset, ab Antiocho cultum; dictatorem eum consuli, non legatum in prouincia fuisse; nec ad aliam rem eo profectum, quam ut, id quod Hispaniae Galliae Siciliae Africae iam pridem persuasum esset, hoc Graeciae Asiaeque et omnibus ad orientem uersis regibus gentibusque appareret, unum hominem caput columenque imperii Romani esse, sub umbra Scipionis ciuitatem dominam orbis terrarum latere, nutum eius pro decretis patrum, pro populi iussis esse. Infamia intactum inuidia, qua possunt, urgent. Orationibus in noctem perductis producta dies est. Vbi ea uenit, tribuni in Rostris prima luce consederunt; citatus reus magno agmine amicorum clientiumque per mediam contionem ad Rostra subiit silentioque facto ‘hoc’ inquit ‘die, tribuni plebis uosque, Quirites, cum Hannibale et Carthaginiensibus signis collatis in Africa bene ac feliciter pugnaui. Itaque, cum hodie litibus et iurgiis supersederi aequum sit, ego hinc extemplo in Capitolium ad Iouem optimum maximum Iunonemque et Mineruam ceterosque deos, qui Capitolio atque arci praesident, salutandos ibo, hisque gratias agam, quod mihi et hoc ipso die et saepe alias egregie gerendae rei publicae mentem facultatemque dederunt. Vestrum quoque quibus commodum est, Quirites, ite mecum, et orate deos, ut mei similes principes habeatis, ita, si ab annis septemdecim ad senectutem semper uos aetatem meam honoribus uestris anteistis, ego uestros honores rebus gerendis praecessi.’ Ab Rostris in Capitolium ascendit. Simul se uniuersa contio auertit et secuta Scipionem est, adeo ut postremo scribae uiatoresque tribunos relinquerent, nec cum iis praeter seruilem comitatum et praeconem qui reum ex Rostris citabat, quisquam esset. Scipio non in Capitolio modo, sed per totam urbem omnia templa deum cum populo Romano circumiit. Celebratior is prope dies fauore hominum et aestimatione uera magnitudinis eius fuit, quam quo triumphans de Syphace rege et Carthaginiensibus urbem est inuectus.

morbum causae esse, cur abesset, excusabat. Quam excusationem cum tribuni, qui diem dixerant, non acciperent, et ab eadem superbia non uenire ad causam dicendam arguerent, qua iudicium et tribunos plebis et contionem reliquisset, et, quibus ius sententiae de se dicendae et libertatem ademisset, his comitatus, uelut captos trahens, triumphum de populo Romano egisset secessionemque eo die in Capitolium a tribunis plebis fecisset:— ‘habetis ergo temeritatis illius mercedem; quo duce et auctore nos reliquistis, ab eo ipsi relictis estis, et tantum animorum in dies nobis decrescit, ut, ad quem ante annos septemdecim exercitum et classem habentem tribunos plebis aedilemque mittere in Siciliam ausi sumus, qui prenderent eum et Romam reducerent, ad eum priuatum ex uilla sua extrahendum ad causam dicendam mittere non audeamus’ — ; tribuni plebis appellati ab L. Scipione ita decreuerunt: si morbi causa excusaretur, sibi placere accipi eam causam diemque a collegis prodici. Tribunus plebis eo tempore Ti. Sempronius Gracchus erat, cui inimicitiae cum P. Scipione intercedebant. Is, cum uetuisset nomen suum decreto collegarum adscribi, tristiolemque omnes sententiam expectarent, ita decreuit: cum L. Scipio excusasset morbum esse causae fratri, satis id sibi uideri; se P. Scipionem, priusquam Romam redisset, accusari non passurum; tum quoque, si se appellet, auxilio ei futurum, ne causam dicat: ad id fastigium rebus gestis, honoribus populi Romani P. Scipionem deorum hominumque consensu peruenisse, ut sub Rostris reum stare et praebere aures adolescentium conuiciis populo Romano magis deforme quam ipsi sit.

haberi est coeptus. Ibi gratiae ingentes ab uniuerso ordine, praecipue a consularibus senioribusque, Ti. Graccho actae sunt, quod rem publicam priuatis simultatibus potiolem habuisset, et Petillii uexati sunt probis, quod splendere aliena inuidia uoluissent et spolia ex Africani triumpho peterent. Silentium deinde de Africano fuit. Vitam Literni egit sine desiderio urbis; morientem rure eo ipso loco sepeliri se iussisse ferunt monumentumque ibi aedificari, ne funus sibi in ingrata patria fieret. Vir memorabilis, bellicis tamen quam pacis artibus memorabilior. <nobilior> prima pars uitae quam postrema fuit, quia in iuuenta bella adsidue gesta, cum senecta res quoque defloruere, nec praebita est materia ingenio. Quid ad primum consulatum secundus, etiam si censuram adicias? Quid Asiatica legatio, et uoletudine aduersa inutilis et filii casu deformata et post reditum necessitate aut subeundi iudicii aut simul cum patria deserendi? Punici tamen belli perpetrati, quo nullum neque maius neque periculosius Romani gessere, unus praecipuam gloriam tulit.

[54] Morte Africani creuere inimicorum animi, quorum princeps fuit M. Porcius Cato, qui uiuo quoque eo adlatrare magnitudinem eius solitus erat. Hoc auctore existimantur Petillii et uiuo Africano rem ingressi et mortuo rogationem promulgasse. Fuit autem rogatio talis: ‘uelitis iubeatis, Quirites, quae pecunia capta ablata coacta ab rege Antiocho est quique sub imperio eius fuerunt, quod eius in publicum relatum non est, uti de ea re Ser. Sulpicius praetor urbanus ad senatum referat, quem eam rem uelit senatus quaerere de iis, qui praetores nunc sunt.’ Huic rogationi primo Q. Et L. Mummii intercedebant, senatum quaerere de pecunia non relata in publicum, ita ut antea semper factum esset, aequum censebant. Petillii nobilitatem et regnum in senatu Scipionum accusabant. L. Furius Purpureo consularis, qui in decem legatis in Asia fuerat, latius rogandum censebat, non quae ab Antiocho modo pecuniae captae forent, sed quae ab aliis regibus gentibusque, Cn. Manlium inimicum incessens. Et L. Scipio, quem magis pro se quam aduersus legem dicturum apparebat, dissuasor processit. Is morte P. Africani fratris, uiri omnium fortissimi clarissimique, eam exortam rogationem est conquestus; parum enim fuisse non laudari pro Rostri P. Africanum post mortem, nisi etiam accusaretur; et Carthaginienses exilio Hannibalis contentos esse, populum Romanum ne morte quidem P.

Scipionis exsatiari, nisi et ipsius fama sepulti laceretur et frater insuper, accessio inuidiae, mactetur. M. Cato suasit rogationem — exstat oratio eius de pecunia regis Antiochi — et Mummios tribunos auctoritate deterruit, ne aduersarentur rogationi. Remittentibus ergo his intercessionem omnes tribus uti rogassent iusserunt.

[55] Ser. Sulpicio deinde referente, quem rogatione Petillia quaerere uellent, Q. Terentium Culleonem patres iusserunt. Ad hunc praetorem, adeo amicum Corneliae familiae, ut, qui Romae mortuum elatumque P. Scipionem — est enim ea quoque fama — tradunt, pilleatum, sicut in triumpho ierat, in funere quoque ante lectum isse memoriae prodiderint, et ad Portam Capenam mulsum prosecutis funus dedisse, quod ab eo inter alios captiuos in Africa ex hostibus receptus esset, aut adeo inimicum eundem, ut propter insignem simultatem ab ea factione, quae aduersa Scipionibus erat, delectus sit potissimum ad quaestionem exercendam — ; ceterum ad hunc nimis aequum aut iniquum praetorem reus extemplo factus L. Scipio. Simul et delata et recepta nomina legatorum eius, A. Et L. Hostiliorum Catonum, et C. Furii Aculeonis quaestoris et, ut omnia contacta societate peculatus uiderentur, scribae quoque duo et accensus. L. Hostilius et scribae et accensus, priusquam de Scipione iudicium fieret, absoluti sunt, Scipio et A. Hostilius legatus et C. Furius damnati: quo commodior pax Antiocho daretur, Scipionem sex milia pondo auri, quadringenta octoginta argenti plus acceperisse, quam in aerarium retulerit, A. Hostilium octoginta pondo auri, argenti quadringenta tria, Furium quaestorem auri pondo centum triginta, argenti ducenta. Has ego summas auri et argenti relatas apud Antiatem inueni. In L. Scipione malim equidem librarii mendum quam mendacium scriptoris esse in summa auri atque argenti; similis enim ueri est argenti quam auri maius pondus fuisse, et potius quadragens quam ducentiens quadragens litem aestimatam, eo magis, quod tantae summae rationem etiam ab ipso P. Scipione requisitam esse in senatu tradunt, librumque rationis eius cum Lucium fratrem adferre iussisset, inspectante senatu suis ipsum manibus concerpsisse indignantem, quod, cum bis milliens in aerarium intulisset, quadragens ratio ab se posceretur. Ab eadem fiducia animi, cum quaestores pecuniam ex aerario contra legem promere non auderent, poposcisse clauis et se aperturum aerarium dixisse, qui, ut clauderetur, effecisset.

[56] Multa alia in Scipionis exitu maxime uitae dieque dicta, morte, funere, sepulcro, in diuersum trahunt, ut, cui famae, quibus scriptis adsentiar, non habeam. Non de accusatore conuenit: alii M. Naeuium, alii Petillios diem dixisse scribunt, non de tempore, quo dicta dies sit, non de anno, quo mortuus sit, non ubi mortuus aut elatus sit; alii Romae, alii Literni et mortuum et sepultum. Vtrobique monumenta ostenduntur et statuae; nam et Literni monumentum monumentoque statua superimposita fuit, quam tempestate deiectam nuper uidimus ipsi, et Romae extra portam Capenam in Scipionum monumento tres statuae sunt, quarum duae P. Et L. Scipionum dicuntur esse, tertia poetae Q. Ennii. Nec inter scriptores rerum discrepat solum, sed orationes quoque, si modo ipsorum sunt quae feruntur, P. Scipionis et Ti. Gracchi abhorrent inter se. Index orationis P. Scipionis nomen M. Naeuii tribuni plebis habet, ipsa oratio sine nomine est accusatoris; modo nebulonem, modo nugatorem appellat. Ne Gracchi quidem oratio aut Petilliorum accusatorum Africani aut diei dictae Africano ullam mentionem habet. Alia tota serenda fabula est Gracchi orationi conueniens, et illi auctores sequendi sunt, qui, cum L. Scipio et accusatus et damnatus sit pecuniae captae ab rege legatum in Etruria fuisse Africanum tradunt; qua post famam de casu fratris adlatam relicta legatione cucurrisse eum Romam et, cum a porta recta ad forum se contulisset, quod in uincula duci fratrem dictum erat, reppulisse a corpore eius uiatorem, et tribunis retinentibus magis pie quam ciuilitate uim fecisse. Haec enim ipsa Ti. Gracchus queritur dissolutam esse a priuato tribuniciam potestatem, et ad postremum, cum auxilium L. Scipioni pollicetur, adicit tolerabilioris exempli esse a tribuno plebis potius quam a priuato uictam uideri et tribuniciam potestatem et rem publicam esse. Sed ita hanc unam impotentem eius iniuriam inuidia onerat, ut increpando, quod degenerarit tantum a se ipse, cumulas ei ueteres laudes moderationis et temperantiae pro reprehensione praesenti reddat; castigatum enim quondam ab eo populum ait, quod eum perpetuum consulem et dictatorem uellet facere; prohibuisse statuas sibi in comitio, in Rostris, in curia, in Capitolio, in cella Iouis poni; prohibuisse, ne decerneretur, ut imago sua triumphali ornatu e templo Iouis optimi maximi exiret.

[57] Haec uel in laudatione posita ingentem magnitudinem animi moderantis ad ciuilem habitum honoribus significarent, quae exprobrando inimicus fatetur. Huic Graccho minorem ex duabus filiis — nam maior P. Cornelio Nasicae haud dubie a patre collocata erat — nuptam fuisse conuenit. Illud parum constat, utrum post mortem patris et desponsa sit et nupserit, an uerae illae opiniones sint, Gracchum, cum L. Scipio in uincula duceretur, nec quisquam collegarum auxilio esset, iurasse sibi inimicitias cum Scipionibus, quae fuissent, manere, nec se gratiae quaerendae causa quicquam facere, sed, in quem carcerem reges et imperatores hostium ducentem uidisset P. Africanum, in eum se fratrem eius duci non passurum. Senatum eo die forte in Capitolio cenantem consurrexisse et petisse, ut inter epulas Graccho filiam Africanus desponderet. Quibus ita inter publicum sollemne sponsalibus rite factis cum se domum recepisset, Scipionem Aemiliae uxori dixisse filiam se minorem despondisse. Cum illa, muliebriter indignabunda nihil de communi filia secum consultatum, adiecisset non, si Ti. Graccho daret, expertem consilii debuisse matrem esse, laetum Scipionem tam concordii iudicio ei ipsi desponsam respondisse. Haec de tanto uiro quam et opinionibus et monumentis litterarum uariarent, proponenda erant.

[58] Iudiciis a Q. Terentio praetore perfectis, Hostilius et Furius damnati praedes eodem die quaestoribus urbanis dederunt; Scipio cum contenderet omnem quam acceperisset pecuniam in aerario esse, nec se quicquam publici habere, in uincula duci est coeptus. P. Scipio Nasica tribunos appellauit orationemque habuit plenam ueris decoribus non communiter modo Corneliae gentis, sed proprie familiae suae. Parentes suos et P. Africani ac L. Scipionis, qui in carcerem duceretur, fuisse Cn. Et P. Scipiones, clarissimos uiros. Eos, cum per aliquot annos in terra Hispania aduersus multos Poenorum Hispanorumque et duces et exercitus nominis Romani famam auxissent non bello solum, sed quod Romanae temperantiae fideique specimen illis gentibus dedissent, ad extremum ambo pro republica mortem occubuisse. Cum illorum gloriam tueri posteris satis esset, P. Africanum tantum paternas superiecisse laudes, ut fidem fecerit non sanguine humano sed stirpe diuina satum se esse. L. Scipionem, de quo agatur, ut, quae in Hispania, quae in Africa, cum legatus fratris esset, gessisset, praetereantur, consulem et ab senatu dignum habitum, cui extra sortem Asia prouincia et bellum cum Antiocho rege decerneretur, et a fratre, cui post duos consulatus censuramque et triumphum legatus in Asiam iret. Ibi ne magnitudo et splendor legati laudibus consulis officeret, forte ita incidisse, ut, quo die ad Magnesiam signis collatis L. Scipio Antiochum deuicisset, aeger P. Scipio Elaeae dierum aliquot uia abesset. Non fuisse minorem eum exercitum quam Hannibalis, cum quo in Africa esset pugnatum; Hannibalem eundem fuisse inter multos alios regios duces, qui imperator Punici belli fuerit. Et bellum quidem ita gestum esse, ut ne fortunam quidem quisquam criminari possit; in pace crimen quaeri; eam dici uenisse. Hic decem legatos simul argui, quorum ex consilio data pax esset; quamquam exstitissent ex decem legatis, qui Cn. Manlium accusarent, tamen non modo ad criminis fidem, sed ne ad moram quidem triumphi eam accusationem ualuisse.

[59] At hercule in Scipione leges ipsas pacis, ut nimium accommodatas Antiocho, suspectas esse; integrum enim ei regnum relictum; omnia possidere eum uictum, quae ante bellum eius fuerint; auri et argenti cum uim magnam habuisset, nihil in publicum relatum, omne in priuatum uersum; an praeter omnium oculos tantum auri argentique in triumpho L. Scipionis, quantum non decem aliis triumphis, si omne in unum conferatur, latum? Nam quid de finibus regni dicam? Asiam omnem et proxima Europae tenuisse Antiochum. Ea quanta regio orbis terrarum sit, a Tauro monte in Aegaeum usque prominens mare, quot non urbes modo sed gentes amplectatur, omnes scire. Hanc regionem dierum plus triginta <iter> in longitudinem, decem inter duo maria in latitudinem patentem usque ad Tauri montis iuga Antiocho ademptam, expulso in ultimum angulum orbis terrarum. Quid, si gratuita pax esset, plus adimi ei potuisse? Philippo uicto Macedoniam, Nabidi Lacedaemonem relictam, nec Quinctio crimen quaesitum; non enim habuisse eum Africanum fratrem; cuius <cum> gloria prodesse L. Scipioni debuisset, inuidiam nocuisse. Tantum auri argentique iudicatum esse in domum L. Scipionis illatum, quantum uenditis omnibus bonis redigi non posset. Vbi ergo esse regium aurum, ubi tot hereditates acceptas? In domo, quam sumptus non exhauserint, exstare debuisse nouae fortunae cumulum. At enim, quod ex bonis redigi non possit, ex corpore et tergo per uexationem et contumelias L. Scipionis petitorios inimicos, ut in carcere inter fures nocturnos et latrones uir clarissimus includatur et in robore et tenebris exspiret, deinde nudus ante carcerem proiciatur. Non id Corneliae magis familiae quam urbi Romanae fore erubescendum.

[60] Aduersus ea Terentius praetor rogationem Petilliam et senatus consultum et iudicium de L. Scipione factum recitauit; se, ni referatur pecunia in publicum, quae iudicata sit, nihil habere quod faciat, nisi ut prendi damnatum et in uincula duci iubeat. Tribuni cum in consilium secessissent, paulo post C. Fannius ex sua collegarumque aliorum, praeter Gracchum, sententia pronuntiauit praetori non intercedere tribunos, quo minus sua potestate utatur. Ti. Gracchus ita decreuit, quo minus ex bonis L. Scipionis quod iudicatum sit redigatur, se non intercedere praetori; L. Scipionem, qui regem opulentissimum orbis terrarum deuicerit, imperium populi Romani propagauerit in ultimos terrarum fines, regem Eumenem, Rhodios, alias tot Asiae urbes deuinxerit populi Romani beneficiis, plurimos duces hostium in triumpho ductos carcere incluserit, non passurum inter hostes populi Romani in carcere et uinculis esse, mittique eum se iubere. Tanto adsensu auditum est decretum, adeo dimissum Scipionem laeti homines uiderunt, ut uix in eadem ciuitate uideretur factum iudicium. In bona deinde L. Scipionis possessum publice quaestores praetor misit. Neque in iis non modo uestigium ullum comparuit pecuniae regiae, sed nequaquam tantum redactum est, quantae summae damnatus fuerat. Collata ea pecunia a cognatis amicisque et clientibus est L. Scipioni, ut, si acciperet eam, locupletior aliquanto esset, quam ante calamitatem fuerat. Nihil accepit; quae necessaria ad cultum erant, redempta ei a proximis cognatis sunt; uerteratque Scipionum inuidia in praetorem et consilium eius et accusatores

LIBER XXXIX

[1] Dum haec, si modo hoc anno acta sunt, Romae aguntur, consules ambo in Liguribus gerebant bellum. is hostis uelut natus ad continendam inter magnorum interualla bellorum Romanis militarem disciplinam erat; nec alia prouincia militem magis ad uirtutem acuebat. nam Asia et amoenitate urbium et copia terrestrium maritimarumque rerum et mollitia hostium regiisque opibus ditiores quam fortiores exercitus faciebat. praecipue sub imperio Cn. Manlii solute ac neglegenter habiti sunt. itaque asperius paulo iter in Thracia et exercitior hostis magna clade eos castigauit. in Liguribus omnia erant, quae militem excitarent, loca montana et aspera, quae et ipsis capere labor erat et ex praeoccupatis deicere hostem; itinera ardua, angusta, infesta insidiis; hostis leuis et uelox et repentinus, qui nullum usquam tempus, nullum locum quietum aut securum esse sineret; oppugnatio necessaria munitorum castellorum, laboriosa simul periculosaque; inops regio, quae parsimonia astringeret milites, praedae haud multum praeberet. itaque non lixa sequebatur, non iumentorum longus ordo agmen extendebat. nihil praeter arma et uiros omnem spem in armis habentes erat. nec deerat umquam cum iis uel materia belli uel causa, quia propter domesticam inopiam uicinos agros incursabant. nec tamen in discrimen summae rerum pugnabatur.

[2] C. Flaminius consul, cum Friniatibus Liguribus in agro eorum pluribus proeliis secundis factis, in deditionem gentem accepit et arma ademit. ea quia non sincera fide tradebant, cum castigarentur, relictis uicis in montem Auginum profugerunt. confestim secutus est consul. ceterum effusi rursus, et pars maxima inermes, per inuia et rupes deruptas praecipitantes fugerunt, qua sequi hostis non posset. ita trans Appenninum abierunt. qui castris se tenuerant, circumsessi et expugnati sunt. inde trans Appenninum ductae legiones. ibi montis quem ceperant altitudine paulisper se tutati, mox in deditionem concesserunt. tum conquisita cum intentiore cura arma, et omnia adempta. translatum deinde ad Apuanos Ligures bellum, qui in agrum Pisanum Bononiensemque ita incursauerant, ut coli non possent. his quoque perdomitis consul pacem dedit finitimis. et quia a bello quieta ut esset prouincia effecerat, ne in otio militem haberet, uiam a Bononia perduxit Arretium. M. Aemilius alter consul agros Ligurum uicosque, qui in campis aut uallibus erant, ipsis montes duos Ballistam Suismontiumque tenentibus, deussit depopulatusque est. deinde eos, qui in montibus erant, adortus primo leuibis proeliis fatigauit, postremo coactos in aciem descendere iusto proelio deuicit, in quo et aedem Dianae uouit. subactis cis Appenninum omnibus, tum transmontanos adortus — in his et Friniates Ligures erant, quos non adierat C. Flaminius — omnes Aemilius subegit armaque ademit et de montibus in campos multitudinem deduxit. pacatis Liguribus exercitum in agrum Gallicum duxit, uiamque a Placentia, ut Flaminiae committeret, Ariminum perduxit. proelio ultimo, quo cum Liguribus signis collatis confligit, aedem Iunoni reginae uouit. haec in Liguribus eo anno gesta.

legatis deinde sociorum Latini nominis, qui toto undique ex Latio frequentes conuenerant, senatus datus est. his querentibus magnam multitudinem ciuium suorum Romam commigrasse et ibi censos esse, Q. Terentio Culleoni praetori negotium datum est, ut eos conquereret, et quem C. Claudio M. Liuius censoribus postue eos censores ipsum parentemue eius apud se censum esse probassent socii, ut redire eo cogeret, ubi censi essent. hac conquisitione duodecim milia Latinorum domos redierunt, iam tum multitudine alienigenarum urbem onerante.

[4] Priusquam consules redirent Romam, M. Fuluius proconsul ex Aetolia redit; isque ad aedem Apollinis in senatu cum de rebus in Aetolia Cephallaniaque ab se gestis disseruisset, petit a patribus, ut, <si> aequum censerent, ob rem publicam bene ac feliciter gestam et diis immortalibus honorem haberi iuberent et sibi triumphum decernerent. M. Aburius tribunus plebis, si quid de ea re ante M. Aemilii consulis aduentum decerneretur, intercessurum se ostendit: eum contra dicere uelle, proficiscentemque in prouinciam ita sibi mandasse, ut ea disceptatio integra in aduentum suum seruaretur. Fuluium temporis iacturam facere: senatum etiam praesente consule quod uellet decreturum. <tum> Fuluius: si aut similtas M. Aemilii secum ignota hominibus esset, aut quam is eas inimicitias impotenti ac prope regia ira exerceret, tamen non fuisse ferendum absentem consulem et deorum immortalium honori obstare et meritum debitumque triumphum morari, imperatorem rebus egregie gestis uictoremque exercitum cum praeda et captiuis ante portas stare, donec consuli ob hoc ipsum moranti redire Romam libitum esset. uerum enimvero cum sint notissimae sibi cum consule inimicitiae, quid ab eo quemquam posse aequi exspectare, qui per infrequentiam furtim senatus consultum factum ad aerarium detulerit, Ambraciam non uideri ui captam, quae aggere ac uineis oppugnata sit, ubi incensis operibus alia de integro facta sint, ubi circa muros supra subterque terram per dies quindecim pugnatum, ubi a prima luce, cum iam transcendisset muros miles, usque ad noctem diu anceps proelium tenuerit, ubi plus tria milia hostium sint caesa. iam de deorum immortalium templis spoliatis in capta urbe qualem calumniam * * ad pontifices attulerit? nisi Syracusarum ceterarumque captarum ciuitatum ornamentis urbem exornari fas fuerit, in Ambracia una capta non ualuerit belli ius. se et patres conscriptos orare et ab tribuno petere, ne se superbissimo inimico ludibrio esse sinant.

[5] Undique omnes alii deprecari tribunum, alii castigare. Ti. Gracchi collegae plurimum oratio mouit. ne suas quidem similtates pro magistratu exercere boni exempli esse: alienarum uero similtatum tribunum plebis cognitorem fieri turpe et indignum collegii eius potestate et sacratis legibus esse. suo quemque iudicio et homines odisse aut diligere et res probare aut improbare debere, non pendere ex alterius uultu ac nutu nec alieni momentis animi circumagi, adstipularique irato consuli tribunum plebei; et quid priuatim M. Aemilius mandauerit, meminisse, tribunatum sibi a populo Romano mandatum obliuisci, et mandatum pro auxilio ac libertate priuatorum, non pro consulari regno. ne hoc quidem cernere eum, fore ut memoriae ac posteritati mandetur eiusdem collegii alterum e duobus tribunis plebis suas inimicitias remisisse rei publicae, alterum alienas et mandatas exercuisse. his uictus castigationibus tribunus cum templo excessisset, referente Ser. Sulpicio praetore triumphus M. Fuluio est decretus. is cum gratias patribus conscriptis egisset, adiecit ludos magnos se Ioui optimo maximo eo die quo Ambraciam cepisset uouisse; in eam rem sibi centum pondo auri a ciuitatibus collatum; petere ut ex ea pecunia, quam in triumpho latam in aerario positurus esset, id aurum secerni iuberent. senatus pontificum collegium consuli iussit, num omne id aurum in ludos consumi necesse esset. cum pontifices negassent ad religionem pertinere, quanta impensa in ludos fieret, senatus Fuluio quantum impenderet permisit, dum ne summam octoginta milium excederet. triumphare mense Ianuario statuerat: sed cum audisset consulem M. Aemilium, litteris M. Aburii tribuni plebis acceptis de remissa intercessione, ipsum ad impediendum triumphum Romam uenientem aegrum in uia substitisse, ne plus in triumpho certaminum quam in bello haberet, praetulit triumphi diem. triumphauit ante diem decimum Kal. Ianuarias de Aetolis et de Cephallania. aureae coronae centum duodecim pondo ante currum latae sunt; argenti pondo milia octoginta tria, auri pondo ducenta quadraginta tria, tetrachma Attica centum octodecim milia, Philippei nummi duodecim milia trecenti uiginti duo, signa aenea septingenta octoginta quinque, signa marmorea ducenta triginta, arma tela cetera spolia hostium, magnus numerus, ad hoc catapultae, ballistae, tormenta omnis generis; duces aut Aetoli et Cephallanes aut regii ab Antiocho ibi relictis ad uiginti septem. multos eo die, priusquam in urbem inueheretur, in circo Flaminio tribunos praefectos equites centuriones, Romanos sociosque, donis militaribus donauit. militibus ex praeda uicenos quinos denarios diuisit, duplex centurioni, triplex equiti.

Extremo anni, magistratibus iam creatis, ante diem tertium nonas Martias Cn. Manlius Uulso de Gallis qui Asiam incolunt triumphauit. serius ei triumphandi causa fuit, ne Q. Terentio Culleone praetore causam lege Petillia diceret, et incendio alieni iudicii, quo L. Scipio damnatus erat, conflagraret, eo infensioribus in se quam in illum iudicibus, quod disciplinam militarem seuere ab eo conseruatam successorem ipsum omni genere licentiae corrupisse fama attulerat. neque ea sola infamiae erant, quae in prouincia procul ab oculis facta narrabantur, sed ea etiam magis, quae in militibus eius quotidie aspiciebantur. luxuriae enim peregrinae origo ab exercitu Asiatico inuecta in urbem est. ii primum lectos aeratos, uestem stragulam pretiosam, plagulas et alia textilia, et quae tum magnificae supellectilis habebantur, monopodia et abacos Romam aduexerunt. tunc psaltriae sambucistriaeque et conuiuialia alia ludorum oblectamenta addita epulis; epulae quoque ipsae et cura et sumptu maiore apparari coeptae. tum coquus, uilissimum antiquis mancipium et aestimatione et usu, in pretio esse, et quod ministerium fuerat, ars haberi coepta. uix tamen illa quae tum conspiciebantur, semina erant futurae luxuriae.

[7] In triumpho tulit Cn. Manlius coronas aureas ducenta duodecim [pondo], argenti pondo ducenta uiginti milia, auri pondo duo milia centum tria, tetrachmum Atticum centum uiginti septem milia, cistophori ducenta quinquaginta, Philippeorum aureorum nummorum sedecim milia trecentos uiginti; et arma spoliaque multa Gallica carpentis trauecta, duces hostium duo et quinquaginta ducti ante currum. militibus quadragenos binos denarios diuisit, duplex centurioni, triplex in equites, et stipendium duplex [in pedites] dedit; multi omnium ordinum donati militaribus donis currum secuti sunt. carminaque a militibus ea in imperatorem dicta, ut facile appareret in ducem indulgentem ambitiosumque ea dici, triumphum esse militari magis fauore quam populari celebrem. sed ad populi quoque gratiam conciliandam amici Manlii ualuerunt; quibus adnitentibus senatus consultum factum est, ut ex pecunia quae in triumpho translata esset, stipendium collatum a populo in publicum, quod eius solutum antea non esset, solueretur. uicenos quinos et semisses in milia aeris quaestores urbani cum fide et cura soluerunt. per idem tempus tribuni militum duo ex duabus Hispaniis cum litteris C. Atinii et L. Manlii, qui eas prouincias obtinebant, uenerunt. ex iis litteris cognitum est Celtiberos Lusitanosque in armis esse et sociorum agros populari. de ea re consultationem integram senatus ad nouos magistratus reiecit.

Postumius Albinus faciebant, malus in circo instabilis in signum Pollentiae procidit atque id deicit. ea religione moti patres et diem unum adiciendum ludorum censuerunt, et signa duo pro uno reponenda, et nouum auratum faciendum. et plebei ludi ab aedilibus C. Sempronio Blaeso et M. Furio Lusco diem unum instaurati sunt.

[8] Insequens annus Sp. Postumium Albinum et Q. Marcium Philippum consules ab exercitu bellorumque et prouinciarum cura ad intestinae coniurationis uindictam auertit. praetores prouincias sortiti sunt, T. Maenius urbanam, M. Licinius Lucullus inter ciues et peregrinos, C. Aurelius Scaurus Sardiniam, P. Cornelius Sulla Siciliam, L. Quinctius Crispinus Hispaniam citeriorem, C. Calpurnius Piso Hispaniam ulteriorem. consulibus ambobus quaestio de clandestinis coniurationibus decreta est. Graecus ignobilis in Etruriam primum uenit nulla cum arte earum, quas multas ad animorum corporumque cultum nobis eruditissima omnium gens inuexit, sacrificulus et uates; nec is qui aperta religione, propalam et quaestum et disciplinam profitendo, animos errore imbueret, sed occultorum et nocturnorum antistes sacrorum. initia erant, quae primo paucis tradita sunt, deinde uulgari coepta sunt per uiros mulieresque. additae uoluptates religioni uini et epularum, quo plurium animi illicerentur. cum uinum animos <incendissent>, et nox et mixti feminis mares, aetatis tenerae maioribus, discrimen omne pudoris exstinxissent, corruptelae primum omnis generis fieri coeptae, cum ad id quisque, quo natura pronioris libidinis esset, paratam uoluptatem haberet. nec unum genus noxae, stupra promiscua ingenuorum feminarumque erant, sed falsi testes, falsa signa testamentaque et indicia ex eadem officina exhibant: uenena indidem intestinaeque caedes, ita ut ne corpora quidem interdum ad sepulturam exstarent. multa dolo, pleraque per uim audebantur. occulebat uim quod prae ululatibus tympanorumque et cymbalorum strepitu nulla uox quiritantium inter stupra et caedes exaudiri poterat.

et mater dedita uiro erat, et uiricus, quia tutelam ita gesserat, ut rationem reddere non posset, aut tolli pupillum aut obnoxium sibi uinculo aliquo fieri cupiebat. uia una corruptelae Bacchanalia erant. mater adulescentem appellat: se pro aegro eo uouisse, ubi primum conualuisset, Bacchis eum se initiaturam; damnatam uoti benignitate deum exsoluere id uelle. decem dierum castimonia opus esse: decimo die cenatum, deinde pure lautum in sacrarium deducturam. scortum nobile libertina Hispala Faecenia, non digna quaestu, cui ancillula adsuerat, etiam postquam manumissa erat, eodem se genere tuebatur. huic consuetudo iuxta uicinitatem cum Aebutio fuit, minime adulescentis aut rei aut famae damnosa: ultro enim amatus appetitusque erat, et maligne omnia praebentibus suis meretriculae munificentia sustinebatur. quin eo processerat consuetudine capta, ut post patroni mortem, quia in nullius manu erat, tutore ab tribunis et praetore petito, cum testamentum faceret, unum Aebutium institueret heredem.

[10] Haec amoris pignora cum essent, nec quicquam secretum alter ab altero haberent, per iocum adulescens uetat eam mirari, si per aliquot noctes secubuisset: religionis se causa, ut uoto pro ualitudine sua facto liberetur, Bacchis initiari uelle. id ubi mulier audiuit, perturbata ‘dii meliora.’ inquit: mori et sibi et illi satius esse quam id faceret; et in caput eorum detestari minas periculaque, qui id suasissent. admiratus cum uerba tum perturbationem tantam adulescens parcere execrationibus iubet: matrem id sibi adsentiente uirico imperasse. ‘uiricus ergo’ inquit ‘tuus — matrem enim insimulare forsitan fas non sit — pudicitiam famam spem uitamque tuam perditum ire hoc facto properat.’ eo magis mirabundo quaerentique, quid rei esset, pacem ueniamque precata deorum dearumque, si coacta caritate eius silenda enuntiasset, ancillam se ait dominae comitem id sacrarium intrasse, liberam numquam eo accessisse. scire corruptelarum omnis generis eam officinam esse; et iam biennio constare neminem initiatum ibi maiorem annis uiginti. ut quisque introductus sit, uelut uictimam tradi sacerdotibus. eos deducere in locum, qui circumsonet ululatibus cantuque symphoniae et cymbalorum et tympanorum pulsu, ne uox quiritantis, cum per uim stuprum inferatur, exaudiri possit. orare inde atque obsecrare, ut eam rem quocumque modo discuteret nec se eo praecipitaret, ubi omnia infanda patienda primum, deinde facienda essent. neque ante dimisit eum, quam fidem dedit adulescens ab his sacris se temperaturum.

[11] Postquam domum uenit, et mater mentionem intulit, quid eo die, quid deinceps ceteris, quae ad sacra pertinerent, faciendum esset, negat eorum se quicquam facturum, nec initiari sibi in animo esse. aderat sermoni uitricus. confestim mulier exclamat Hispalae concubitu carere eum decem noctes non posse; illius excetrae delenimentis et uenenis imbutum nec parentis nec uitrici nec deorum uerecundiam habere. iurgantes hinc mater, hinc uitricus cum quattuor eum seruis domo exegerunt. adulescens inde ad Aebutiam se amitam contulit, causamque ei, cur esset a matre eiectus, narrauit, deinde ex auctoritate eius postero die ad consulem Postumium arbitris remotis rem detulit. consul post diem tertium redire ad se iussum dimisit; ipse Sulpiciam grauem feminam, socrum suam, percunctatus est, ecquam anum Aebutiam ex Auentino nosset. cum ea nosse probam et antiqui moris feminam respondisset, opus esse sibi ea conuenta dixit: mitteret nuntium ad eam, ut ueniret. Aebutia accita ad Sulpiciam uenit, et consul paulo post, uelut forte interuenisset, sermonem de Aebutio fratris eius filio infert. lacrimae mulieri obortae, et miserari casum adulescentis coepit, qui spoliatus fortunis, a quibus minime oporteret, apud se tunc esset, eiectus a matre, quod probus adulescens — dii propitii essent — obscenis, ut fama esset, sacris initiari nolle.

[12] Satis exploratum de Aebutio ratus consul non uanum auctorem esse, Aebutia dimissa socrum rogat, ut Hispalam indidem ex Auentino libertinam, non ignotam uicinia, arcesseret ad sese: eam quoque esse quae percunctari uellet. ad cuius nuntium perturbata Hispala, quod ad tam nobilem et grauem feminam ignara causae arcesseretur, postquam lictores in uestibulo turbamque consularem et consulem ipsum conspexit, prope exanimata est. in interiorem partem aedium abductam socru adhibita consul, si uera dicere inducere in animum posset, negat perturbari debere; fidem uel a Sulpicia, tali femina, uel ab se acciperet; expromeret sibi, quae in luco Stimulae Bacchanalibus in sacro nocturno solerent fieri. hoc ubi audiuit, tantus pauor tremorque omnium membrorum mulierem cepit, ut diu hiscere non posset. tandem confirmata puellam admodum se ancillam initiatam cum domina ait: aliquot annis, ex quo manumissa sit, nihil quid ibi fiat scire. iam id ipsum consul laudare, quod initiatam se non infitiaretur: sed et cetera eadem fide expromeret. neganti ultra quicquam scire, non eandem dicere, si coarguatur ab alio, ac per se fatenti ueniam aut gratiam fore; eum sibi omnia exposuisse, qui ab illa audisset.

[13] Mulier haud dubie, id quod erat, Aebutium indicem arcani rata esse, ad pedes Sulpiciae procidit, et eam primo orare coepit, ne mulieris libertinae cum amatore sermonem in rem non seriam modo sed capitalem etiam uerti uellet: se terrendi eius causa, non quod sciret quicquam, ea locutam esse. hic Postumius accensus ira tum quoque ait eam cum Aebutio se amatore cauillari credere, non in domo grauissimae feminae et cum consule loqui. et Sulpicia attollere pauentem, simul illam adhortari, simul iram generi lenire. tandem confirmata, multum incusata perfidia Aebutii, qui optime de ipso merita talem gratiam rettulisset, magnum sibi metum deorum, quorum occulta initia enuntiaret, maiorem multo dixit hominum esse, qui se indicem manibus suis discerpturi essent. itaque hoc se Sulpiciam, hoc consulem orare, ut se extra Italiam aliquo ablegarent, ubi reliquum uitae degere tuto posset. bono animo esse iubere eam consul, et sibi curae fore dicere, ut Romae tuto habitaret. tum Hispala originem sacrorum expromit. primo sacrarium id feminarum fuisse, nec quemquam eo uirum admitti solitum. tres in anno statos dies habuisse, quibus interdum Bacchis initiarentur; sacerdotes in uicem matronas creari solitas. Pacullam Anniam Campanam sacerdotem omnia, tamquam deum monitu, immutasse: nam et uiros eam primam filios suos initiasse, Minium et Herennium Cerrinios; et nocturnum sacrum ex diurno, et pro tribus in anno diebus quinos singulis mensibus dies initiorum fecisse. ex quo in promiscuo sacra sint et permixti uiri feminis, et noctis licentia accesserit, nihil ibi facinoris, nihil flagitii praetermissum. plura uirorum inter sese quam feminarum esse stupra. si qui minus patientes dedecoris sint et pigriores ad facinus, pro uictimis immolari. nihil nefas ducere, hanc summam inter eos religionem esse. uiros, uelut mente capta, cum iactatione fanatica corporis uaticinari; matronas Baccharum habitu crinibus sparsis cum ardentibus facibus decurrere ad Tiberim, demissasque in aquam faces, quia uiuum sulphur cum calce insit, integra flamma efferre. raptos a diis homines dici, quos machinae illigatos ex conspectu in abditos specus abripiant: eos esse, qui aut coniurare aut sociari facinoribus aut stuprum pati noluerint. multitudinem ingentem, alterum iam prope populum esse; in his nobiles quosdam uiros feminasque. biennio proximo institutum esse, ne quis maior uiginti annis initiaretur: captari aetates et erroris et stupri patientes.

[14] Peracto indicio aduoluta rursus genibus preces easdem, ut se ablegaret, repetiuit. consul rogat socrum, ut aliquam partem aedium uacuum faceret, quo Hispala immigraret. cenaculum super aedes datum est, scalis ferentibus in publicum obseratis, aditu in aedes uerso. res omnes Faeceniae extemplo translatae et familia arcessita, et Aebutius migrare ad consulis clientem iussus.

Ita cum indices ambo in potestate essent, rem ad senatum Postumius defert, omnibus ordine expositis, quae delata primo, quae deinde ab se inquisita forent. patres paor ingens cepit, cum publico nomine, ne quid eae coniurationes coetusque nocturni fraudis occultae aut periculi importarent, tum priuatim suorum cuiusque uicem, ne quis adfinis ei noxae esset. censuit autem senatus gratias consuli agendas, quod eam rem et cum singulari cura et sine ullo tumultu inuestigasset. quaestionem deinde de Bacchanalibus sacrisque nocturnis extra ordinem consulibus mandant; indicibus Aebutio ac Faeceniae ne fraudi ea res sit curare et alios indices praemiis inuitare iubent; sacerdotes eorum sacrorum, seu uiri seu feminae essent, non Romae modo sed per omnia fora et conciliabula conquiri, ut in consulum potestate essent; edici praeterea in urbe Roma et per totam Italiam edicta mitti, ne quis, qui Bacchis initiatus esset, coisse aut conuenisse sacrorum causa uelit, neu quid talis rei diuinae fecisse. ante omnia ut quaestio de iis habeatur, qui coierint coniurauerintue, quo stuprum flagitiumue inferretur. haec senatus decreuit. consules aedilibus curulibus imperarunt, ut sacerdotes eius sacri omnes conquirerent, comprehensosque libero conclauis ad quaestionem seruarent; aediles plebis uiderent, ne qua sacra in operto fierent. triumuiris capitalibus mandatum est, ut uigilias disponerent per urbem seruarentque, ne qui nocturni coetus fierent, utque ab incendiis caueretur; adiutores triumuiris quinqueuiri uisus cis Tiberim suae quisque regionis aedificiis praeessent.

quod praefari, priusquam populum adloquantur, magistratus solent, peregisset consul, ita coepit. ‘nulli umquam contioni, Quirites, tam non solum apta sed etiam necessaria haec sollemnis deorum comprecatio fuit, quae uos admoneret hos esse deos, quos colere uenerari precarique maiores uestri instituissent, non illos, qui prauis et externis religionibus captas mentes uelut furialibus stimulis ad omne scelus et ad omnem libidinem agerent. equidem nec quid taceam nec quatenus proloquar inuenio. si aliquid ignorabitis, ne locum negligentiae dem, si omnia nudauero, ne nimium terroris offundam uobis, uereor. quidquid dixerō, minus quam pro atrocitate et magnitudine rei dictum scitote esse: ut ad cauendum satis sit, dabitur opera a nobis. Bacchanalia tota iam pridem Italia et nunc per urbem etiam multis locis esse, non fama solum accepisse uos sed crepitibus etiam ululatibusque nocturnis, qui personant tota urbe, certum habeo, ceterum quae ea res sit, ignorare: alios deorum aliquem cultum, alios concessum ludum et lasciuiam credere esse, et quaecumque sit, ad paucos pertinere. quod ad multitudinem eorum attinet, si dixerō multa milia hominum esse, ilico necesse est exterreamini, nisi adiunxero qui qualesque sint. primum igitur mulierum magna pars est, et is fons mali huiusce fuit; deinde simillimi feminis mares, stuprati et constupratores, fanatici, uigiliis, uino, strepitibus clamoribusque nocturnis attoniti. nullas adhuc uires coniuratio, ceterum incrementum ingens uirium habet, quod in dies plures fiunt. maiores uestri ne uos quidem, nisi cum aut uexillo in arce posito comitiorum causa exercitus eductus esset, aut plebi concilium tribuni edixissent, aut aliquis ex magistratibus ad contionem uocasset, forte temere coire uoluerunt; et ubicumque multitudo esset, ibi et legitimum rectorem multitudinis censebant esse debere. quales primum nocturnos coetus, deinde promiscuos mulierum ac uirorum esse creditis? si quibus aetatibus initientur mares sciatis, non misereat uos eorum solum, sed etiam pudeat. hoc sacramento initiatos iuuenes milites faciendos censetis, Quirites? his ex obsceno sacrario eductis arma committenda? hi cooperti stupris suis alienisque pro pudicitia coniugum ac liberorum uestrorum ferro decernent?

mentem a fraudibus abstinuissent: numquam tantum malum in re publica fuit, nec ad plures nec ad plura pertinens. quidquid his annis libidine, quidquid fraude, quidquid scelere peccatum est, ex illo uno sacrario scitote ortum esse. necdum omnia, in quae coniurarunt, edita facinora habent. adhuc priuatis noxiis, quia nondum ad rem publicam opprimendam satis uirium est, coniuratio sese impia tenet. crescit et serpit quotidie malum. iam maius est, quam ut capere id priuata fortuna possit: ad summam rem publicam spectat. nisi praecauetis, Quirites, iam huic diurnae, legitime ab consule uocatae, par nocturna contio esse poterit. nunc illi uos singuli uniuersos contionantes timent: iam ubi uos dilapsi domos et in rura uestra eritis, illi coierint, consultabunt de sua salute simul ac uestra pernicie: tum singulis uobis uniuersi timendi erunt. optare igitur unusquisque uestrum debet, ut bona mens suis omnibus fuerit. si quem libido, si furor in illum gurgitem abripuit, illorum eum, cum quibus in omne flagitium et facinus coniurauit, non suum iudicet esse. ne quis etiam errore labatur uestrum, Quirites, non sum securus. nihil enim in speciem fallacius est quam praua religio. ubi deorum numen praetenditur sceleribus, subit animum timor, ne fraudibus humanis uindicandis diuini iuris aliquid immixtum uiolemus. hac uos religione innumerabilia decreta pontificum, senatus consulta, haruspicum denique responsa liberant. quotiens hoc patrum auorumque aetate negotium est magistratibus datum, uti sacra externa fieri uetarent, sacrificulos uatesque foro circo urbe prohiberent, uaticinos libros conquirent comburerentque, omnem disciplinam sacrificandi praeterquam more Romano abolerent. iudicabant enim prudentissimi uiri omnis diuini humanique iuris nihil aequae dissoluendae religionis esse, quam ubi non patrio sed externo ritu sacrificaretur. haec uobis praedicenda ratus sum, ne qua superstitio agigaret animos uestros, cum demolientes nos Bacchanalia discutientesque nefarios coetus cerneretis. omnia diis propitiis uolentibusque [ea] faciemus; qui quia suum numen sceleribus libidinibusque contaminari indigne ferebant, ex occultis ea tenebris in lucem extraxerunt, nec patefieri, ut impunita essent, sed ut uindicarentur et opprimerentur, uoluerunt. senatus quaestionem extra ordinem de ea re mihi collegaeque meo mandauit. nos, quae ipsis nobis agenda sunt, impigre exsequemur; uigiliarum nocturnarum curam per urbem minoribus magistratibus mandauimus. uos quoque aequum est, quae uestra munia sunt, quo quisque loco positus erit, quod imperabitur, impigre praestare, et dare operam, ne quid fraude noxiorum periculi aut tumultus oriatur.’

[17] Recitari deinde senatus consulta iusserunt, indicique praemium proposuerunt, si quis quem ad se deduxisset nomenue absentis detulisset. qui nominatus profugisset, diem certam se finituros, ad quam nisi citatus respondisset, absens damnaretur. si quis eorum, qui tum extra terram Italiam essent, nominaretur, ei laxiorem diem daturus, si uenire ad causam dicendam uellet. edixerunt deinde, ne quis quid fugae causa uendidissee neuē emisse uellet; ne quis reciperet, celaret, ope ulla iuuaret fugientes.

Contione dimissa terror magnus urbe tota fuit, nec moenibus se tantum urbis aut finibus Romanis continuit, sed passim per totam Italiam, litteris hospitem de senatus consulto et contione et edicto consulum acceptis, trepidari coeptum est. multi ea nocte, quae diem insecuta est, quo in contione res palam facta est, custodiis circa portas positis fugientes a triumuiris comprehensi et reducti sunt: multorum delata nomina. quidam ex iis uiri feminaeque mortem sibi consciuerunt. coniurasse supra septem milia uirorum ac mulierum dicebantur. capita autem coniurationis constabat esse M. et C. Atinios de plebe Romana et Faliscum L. Opicernium et Minium Cerrinium Campanum: ab his omnia facinora et flagitia orta, eos maximos sacerdotes conditoresque eius sacri esse. data opera, ut primo quoque tempore comprehenderentur. adducti ad consules fassique de se nullam moram indicio fecerunt.

[18] Ceterum tanta fuga ex urbe facta erat, ut, quia multis actiones et res peribant, cogerentur praetores T. Maenius et M. Licinius per senatum res in diem tricesimum differre, donec quaestiones a consulibus perficerentur. eadem solitudo, quia Romae non respondebant nec inueniebantur, quorum nomina delata erant, coegit consules circa fora proficisci ibique quaerere et iudicia exercere. qui tantum initiati erant et ex carmine sacro, praeuente uerba sacerdote, precationes fecerant, [in] quibus nefanda coniuratio in omne facinus ac libidinem continebatur, nec earum rerum ullam, in quas iureiurando obligati erant, in se aut alios admiserant, eos in uinculis relinquebant: qui stupris aut caedibus uiolati erant, qui falsis testimoniis, signis adulterinis, subiectione testamentorum, fraudibus aliis contaminati, eos capitali poena adficiebant. plures necati quam in uincula coniecti sunt. magna uis in utraque causa uirorum mulierumque fuit. mulieres damnatas cognatis, aut in quorum manu essent, tradebant, ut ipsi in priuato animaduernerent in eas: si nemo erat idoneus supplicii exactor, in publico animaduertebatur. datum deinde consulibus negotium est, ut omnia Bacchanalia Romae primum, deinde per totam Italiam diruerent, extra quam si qua ibi uetusta ara aut signum consecratum esset. in reliquum deinde senatus consulto cautum est, ne qua Bacchanalia Romae neu in Italia essent. si quis tale sacrum sollemne et necessarium duceret, nec sine religione et piaculo se id omittere posse, apud praetorem urbanum profiteretur, praetor senatum consuleret. si ei permissum esset, cum in senatu centum non minus essent, ita id sacrum faceret, dum ne plus quinque sacrificio interessent, neu qua pecunia communis neu quis magister sacrorum aut sacerdos esset.

[19] Aliud deinde huic coniunctum referente Q. Marcio consule senatus consultum factum est, ut de iis, quos pro indicibus consules habuissent, integra res ad senatum referretur, cum Sp. Postumius quaestionibus perfectis Romam redisset. Minium Cerrinium Campanum Ardeam in uincula mittendum censuerunt, magistratibusque Ardeatium praedicendum, ut intentiore eum custodia adseruarent, non solum ne effugeret, sed ne mortis consciscendae locum haberet. Sp. Postumius aliquanto post Romam uenit: eo referente de P. Aebutii et Hispalae Faeceniae praemio, quod eorum opera indicata Bacchanalia essent, senatus consultum factum est, uti singulis his centena milia aeris quaestores urbani ex aerario darent; utique consul cum tribunis plebis ageret, ut ad plebem primo quoque tempore ferrent, ut P. Aebutio emerita stipendia essent, ne inuitus militaret neu censor ei inuito equum publicum adsignaret; utique Faeceniae Hispalae datio, deminutio, gentis enuptio, tutoris optio item esset, quasi ei uir testamento dedisset; utique ei ingenuo nubere liceret, neu quid ei qui eam duxisset ob id fraudi ignominiaeue esset; utique consules praetoresque, qui nunc essent quique postea futuri essent, curarent, ne quid ei mulieri iniuriae fieret, utique tuto esset. id senatum uelle et aequum censere, ut ita fieret. ea omnia lata ad plebem factaque sunt ex senatus consulto; [et] de ceterorum indicum impunitate praemiisque consulibus permissum est.

[20] Et iam Q. Marcius quaestionibus suae regionis perfectis in Ligures prouinciam proficisci parabat, tribus milibus peditum Romanorum, centum quinquaginta equitibus, et quinque milibus Latini nominis peditum ducentis equitibus in supplementum acceptis. eadem prouincia, idem numerus peditum equitumque et collegae decretus erat. exercitus acceperunt, quos priore anno C. Flaminius et M. Aemilius consules habuerant. duas praeterea legiones nouas ex senatus consulto scribere iussi sunt, et uiginti milia peditum sociis et nomini Latino imperarunt et equites octingentos, et tria milia peditum Romanorum, ducentos equites. totum hunc exercitum praeter legiones in supplementum Hispaniensis exercitus duci placebat. itaque consules, dum ipsi quaestionibus impediabantur, T. Maenium dilectui habendo praefecerunt. perfectis quaestionibus prior Q. Marcius in Ligures Apuanos est profectus. dum penitus in abditos saltus, quae latebrae receptaculaque illis semper fuerant, persequitur, in praeoccupatis angustiis loco iniquo est circumuentus. quattuor milia militum amissa, et legionis secundae signa tria, undecim uexilla socium Latini nominis in potestatem hostium uenerunt, et arma multa, quae quia impedimento fugientibus per siluestres semitas erant, passim iactabantur. prius sequendi Ligures finem quam fugae Romani fecerunt. consul ubi primum ex hostium agro euasit, ne, quantum deminutae copiae forent, appareret, in locis pacatis exercitum dimisit. non tamen obliterare famam rei male gestae potuit: nam saltus, unde eum Ligures fugauerant, Marcius est appellatus.

[21] Sub hunc nuntium ex Ligustinis uulgatum litterae ex Hispania mixtam gaudio tristitiam adherentes recitatae sunt. C. Atinius, qui biennio ante praetor in eam prouinciam profectus erat, cum Lusitanis in agro Hastensi signis collatis pugnauit: ad sex milia hostium sunt caesa, ceteri fusi et fugati castrisque exuti. ad oppidum deinde Hastam oppugnandum legiones ducit: id quoque haud multo maiore certamine cepit quam castra; sed dum incautius subit muros, ictus ex uulnere post dies paucos moritur. litteris de morte propriaetoris recitatis senatus censuit mittendum, qui ad Lunae portum C. Calpurnium praetorem consequeretur, nuntiaretque senatum aequum censere, ne sine imperio prouincia esset, maturare eum proficisci.

quarto die qui missus erat Lunam uenit: paucis ante diebus Calpurnius profectus erat. et in citeriore Hispania L. Manlius Acidinus, qui eodem tempore, quo C. Atinius in prouinciam ierat, cum Celtiberis acie conflixit. incerta uictoria discessum est, nisi quod Celtiberi castra inde nocte proxima mouerunt, Romanis et suos sepeliendi et spolia legendi ex hostibus potestas facta est. paucos post dies maiore coacto exercitu Celtiberi ad Calagurrim oppidum ultro lacesiuerunt proelio Romanos. nihil traditur, quae causa numero aucto infirmiores eos fecerit. superati proelio sunt: ad duodecim milia hominum caesa, plus duo capta, et castris Romanus potitur. et nisi successor aduentus suo inhibuisset impetum uictoris, subacti Celtiberi forent. noui praetores ambo in hiberna exercitus deduxerunt.

[22] Per eos dies, quibus haec ex Hispania nuntiata sunt, ludi Taurii per biduum facti religionis causa. decem deinde <dies magno> apparatu ludos M. Fuluius, quos uouerat Aetolico bello, fecit. multi artifices ex Graecia uenerunt honoris eius causa. athletarum quoque certamen tum primo Romanis spectaculo fuit, et uenatio data leonum et pantherarum, et prope huius saeculi copia ac uarietate ludicrum celebratum est. nouemdiale deinde sacrum tenuit, quod in Piceno per triduum lapidibus pluerat, ignesque caelestes multifariam orti adussisse complurium leui adflatu uestimenta maxime dicebantur. addita et unum diem supplicatio est ex decreto pontificum, quod aedis Opis in Capitolio de caelo tacta erat. hostiis maioribus consules procurarunt urbemque lustrauerunt. sub idem tempus et ex Umbria nuntiatum est semimarem duodecim ferme annos natum inuentum. id prodigium abominantes arceri Romano agro necarique quam primum iusserunt.

Eodem anno Galli Transalpini transgressi in Uenetiam sine populatione aut bello haud procul inde, ubi nunc Aquileia est, locum oppido condendo ceperunt. legatis Romanis de ea re trans Alpes missis responsum est neque profectos ex auctoritate gentis eos, nec quid in Italia facerent sese scire.

L. Scipio ludos eo tempore, quos bello Antiochi uouisse sese dicebat, ex collata ad id pecunia ab regibus ciuitatibusque per dies decem fecit. legatum eum post damnationem et bona uendita missum in Asiam ad dirimenda inter Antiochum et Eumenem reges certamina

Ualerius Antias est auctor: tum collatas ei pecunias congregatosque per Asiam artifices, et quorum ludorum post bellum, in quo uotos diceret, mentionem non fecisset, de iis post legationem demum in senatu actum.

[23] Cum iam in exitu annus esset, Q. Marcius absens magistratu abiturus erat, Sp. Postumius quaestionibus cum summa fide curaue perfectis comitia habuit. creati consules sunt Ap. Claudius Pulcher M. Sempronius Tuditanus. postero die praetores facti P. Cornelius Cethegus A. Postumius Albinus C. Afranius Stellio C. Atilius Serranus L. Postumius Tempsanus M. Claudius Marcellinus. extremo anni, quia Sp. Postumius consul renuntiauerat peragrantem se propter quaestiones utrumque litus Italiae desertas colonias Sipontum supero, Buxentum infero mari inuenisse, triumuii ad colonos eo scribendos ex senatus consulto ab T. Maenio praetore urbano creati sunt L. Scribonius Libo M. Tuccius Cn. Baebius Tamphilus.

Cum Perseo rege et Macedonibus bellum quod imminabat, non unde plerique opinantur, nec ab ipso Perseo causas cepit: inchoata initia a Philippo sunt; et is ipse, si diutius uixisset, id bellum gessisset. una eum res, cum uicto leges imponentur, maxime angebat, quod qui Macedonum ab se defecerant in bello, in eos ius saeuiendi ademptum ei ab senatu erat, cum, quia rem integram Quinctius in condicionibus pacis distulerat, non desperasset impetrari posse. Antiocho rege deinde bello superato ad Thermopylas, diuisis partibus, cum per eosdem dies consul Acilius Heracleam, Philippus Lamiam oppugnasset, capta Heraclea quia iussus abscedere a moenibus Lamiae erat Romanisque oppidum deditum est, aegre eam rem tulerat. permulsit iram eius consul, quod ad Naupactum ipse festinans, quo se ex fuga Aetoli contulerant, Philippo permisit, ut Athamaniae et Amyndandro bellum inferret, et urbes quas Thessalis Aetoli ademerant, regno adiceret. haud magno certamine et Amyndandrum Athamania expulerat et urbes receperat aliquot. Demetriadem quoque, urbem ualidam et ad omnia opportunam, et Magnetum gentem suae dicionis fecit. inde et in Thracia quasdam urbes, nouae atque insuetae libertatis uitio seditionibus principum turbatas, partibus, quae domestico certamine uincerentur, adiungendo sese cepit.

[24] His sedata in praesentia regis ira in Romanos est. numquam

tamen remisit animum a colligendis in pace uiribus, quibus, quandoque data fortuna esset, ad bellum uteretur. uectigalia regni non fructibus tantum agrorum portoriisque maritimis auxit, sed metalla etiam et uetera intermissa recoluit et noua multis locis instituit. ut uero antiquam multitudinem hominum, quae belli cladibus amissa erat, restitueret, non subolem tantum stirpis parabat cogendis omnibus procreare atque educare liberos, sed Thracum etiam magnam multitudinem in Macedoniam traduxerat, quietusque aliquamdiu a bellis omni cura in augendas regni opes intentus fuerat. redire deinde causae, quae de integro iram mouerent in Romanos. Thessalorum et Perrhaeborum querellae de urbibus suis ab eo possessis, et legatorum Eumenis regis de Thraciis oppidis per uim occupatis traductaque in Macedoniam multitudine, ita auditaerant, ut eas non neglegi satis appareret. maxime mouerat senatum, quod iam Aeni et Maroneae adfectari possessionem audierant; minus Thessalos curabant. Athamanes quoque uenerant legati, non partis amissae, non finium iacturam querentes, sed totam Athamaniam sub ius iudiciumque regis uenisse; et Maronitarum exules uenerant, pulsique, quia libertatis causam defendissent ab regio praesidio: ii non Maroneam modo sed etiam Aenum in potestate narrabant esse Philippi. uenerant et a Philippo legati ad purganda ea, qui nihil nisi permissu Romanorum imperatorum factum adfirmabant: ciuitates Thessalorum et Perrhaeborum et Magnetum et cum Amynandro Athamanum gentem in eadem causa qua Aetolos fuisse; Antiocho rege pulso occupatum oppugnandis Aetolicis urbibus consulem ad recipiendas eas ciuitates Philippum misisse; armis subactos parere. senatus, ne quid absente rege statueret, legatos ad eas controuersias disceptandas misit Q. Caecilium Metellum M. Baebium Tamphilum Ti. Sempronium. quorum sub aduentum ad Thessalica Tempe omnibus iis ciuitatibus, quibus cum rege disceptatio erat, concilium indictum est.

[25] Ibi cum Romani legati disceptatorum loco, Thessali Perrhaebique et Athamanes haud dubii accusatores, Philippus ad audienda crimina tamquam reus consedissent, pro ingenio quisque eorum, qui principes legationum erant, et gratia cum Philippo aut odio acerbius leniusue egerunt. in controuersiam autem ueniebant Philippopolis Tricca Phaloria et Eurymenae et cetera circa eas

oppida, utrum, Thessalorum iuris cum <essent>, ui ademptae possessaeque ab Aetolis forent — nam Philippum Aetolis ademisse eas constabat — , an Aetolica antiquitus ea oppida fuissent: ita enim Acilium regi concessisse, si Aetolorum fuissent, et si uoluntate, non si ui atque armis coacti cum Aetolis essent. eiusdem formulae disceptatio de Perrhaeborum Magnetumque oppidis fuit: omnium enim iura possidendo per occasiones Aetoli miscuerant. ad haec, quae disceptationis erant, querellae Thessalorum adiectae, quod ea oppida, si iam redderentur sibi, spoliata ac deserta redditurus esset: nam praeter belli casibus amissos quingentos principes iuuentutis in Macedoniam abduxisse, et opera eorum in seruilibus abuti ministeriis; et quae reddiderit coactus Thessalis, inutilia ut redderet curasse. Thebas Pthias unum maritimum emporium fuisse quondam Thessalis quaestuosum et frugiferum: ibi nauibus onerariis comparatis regem, quae praeter Thebas Demetriadem cursum derigerent, negotiationem maritimam omnem eo auertisse. iam ne a legatis quidem, qui iure gentium sancti sint, uiolandis abstinere: insidias positas euntibus ad T. Quinctium. itaque ergo in tantum metum omnes Thessalos coniectos, ut non in ciuitatibus suis, non in communibus gentis conciliis quisquam hiscere audeat. procul enim abesse libertatis auctores Romanos: lateri adhaerere grauem dominum, prohibentem uti beneficiis populi Romani. quid autem, si uox libera non sit, liberum esse? nunc se fiducia et praesidio legatorum ingemiscere magis quam loqui. nisi prouideant aliquid Romani, quo et Graecis Macedoniam accolentibus metus et audacia Philippo minuatur, nequiquam et illum uictum et se liberatos esse. ut equum tenacem, non parentem frenis asperioribus castigandum esse. haec acerbè postremi, cum priores leniter permulsissent iram eius petentes, ut ignosceret pro libertate loquentibus, et ut deposita domini acerbitate adsuesceret socium atque amicum sese praestare, et imitaretur populum Romanum, qui caritate quam metu adiungere sibi socios mallet. Thessalis auditis Perrhaebi Gonnocondylum, quod Philippus Olympiadem appellauerat, Perrhaebiae fuisse, et ut sibi restitueretur, agebant; et de Malloea et Ericinio eadem postulatio erat. Athamanes libertatem repeteabant et castella Athenaeum et Poetneum.

[26] Philippus, ut accusatoris potius quam rei speciem haberet, et ipse a querellis orsus Menelaidem in Dolopia, quae regni sui fuisset, Thessalos ui atque armis expugnasse questus est; item Petram in Pieria ab iisdem Thessalis Perrhaebisque captam. Xynias quidem, haud dubie Aetolicum oppidum, sibi contribuisse eos; et Paracheloida, quae sub Athamania esset, nullo iure Thessalorum formulae factam. nam quae sibi crimina obiciantur de insidiis legatorum et maritimis portubus frequentatis aut desertis, alterum ridiculum esse, se reddere rationem, quos portus mercatores aut nautici petant, alterum mores respuere suos. tot annos esse, per quos numquam cessauerint legati nunc ad imperatores Romanos nunc Romam ad senatum crimina de se deferre: quem umquam uerbo uiolatum esse? semel euntibus ad Quinctium insidias dici factas: sed quid iis acciderit, non adici. quaerentium quod falso obiciant, cum ueri nihil habeant, ea crimina esse. insolenter et immodice abuti Thessalos indulgentia populi Romani, uelut ex diutina siti nimis auide meram haurientes libertatem: ita seruorum modo praeter spem repente manumissorum licentiam uocis et linguae experiri et iactare sese insectatione et conuiciis dominorum. elatus deinde ira adiecit nondum omnium dierum solem occidisse. id minaciter dictum non Thessali modo in sese, sed etiam Romani acceperunt. et cum fremitus post eam uocem ortus et tandem sedatus esset, Perrhaeborum inde Athamanumque legatis respondit eandem, de quibus illi agant, ciuitatum causam esse. consulem Acilium et Romanos sibi dedisse eas, cum hostium essent. si suum munus qui dedissent adimere uelint, scire cedendum esse: sed meliori et fideliori amico in gratiam leuium et inutitium sociorum iniuriam eos facturos. nec enim ullius rei minus diuturnam esse gratiam quam libertatis, praesertim apud eos, qui male utendo eam corrupturi sint. causa cognita pronuntiarunt legati placere deduci praesidia Macedonum ex iis urbibus, et antiquis Macedoniae terminis regnum finiri. de iniuriis, quas ultro citroque illatas querantur, quo modo inter eas gentes et Macedonas disceptetur, formulam iuris exsequendi constituendam esse.

[27] Inde grauiter offenso rege Thessalonicen ad cognoscendum de Thraciae urbibus proficiscuntur. ibi legati Eumenis, si liberas esse Aenum et Maroneam uelint Romani, nihil sui pudoris esse ultra dicere, quam ut admoneant, re, non uerbo eos liberos relinquant, nec

suum munus intercipi ab alio patiantur. sin autem minor cura sit ciuitatum in Thracia positarum, multo uerius esse, quae sub Antiocho fuerint, praemia belli Eumenem quam Philippum habere, uel pro patris Attali meritis bello, quod aduersus Philippum ipsum gesserit populus Romanus, uel suis, quod Antiochi bello terra marique laboribus periculisque omnibus interfuerit. habere eum praeterea decem legatorum in eam rem praeiudicium, qui cum Chersonesum Lysimachiamque dederint, Maroneam quoque atque Aenum profecto dedisse, quae ipsa propinquitate regionis uelut appendices maioris muneris essent. nam Philippum quidem quo aut merito in populum Romanum aut iure imperii, cum tam procul a finibus Macedoniae absint, ciuitatibus his praesidia imposuisse? uocari Maronitas iuberent: ab iis certiora omnia de statu ciuitatum earum scituros.

Legati Maronitarum uocati non uno tantum loco urbis praesidium regium esse, sicut in aliis ciuitatibus, dixerunt, sed pluribus simul, et plenam Macedonum Maroneam esse. itaque dominari adsentatores regios: his solis loqui et in senatu et in contionibus licere; eos omnes honores et capere ipsos et dare aliis. optimum quemque, quibus libertatis, quibus legum cura sit, aut exulare pulsos patria aut inhonoratos et deterioribus obnoxios silere. de iure etiam finium pauca adiecerunt: Q. Fabium Labeonem, cum in regione ea fuisset, derexisse finem Philippo ueterem uiam regiam, quae ad Thraciae Paroreian subeat, nusquam ad mare declinantem: Philippum nouam postea deflexisse uiam, qua Maronitarum urbes agrosque amplectatur.

abducere copias inde coegit. ad huius solacium iniuriae permissum est, ut Thessaliae Perrhaebiaeque et Athamanum reciperem quaedam castella magis quam urbes. ea quoque ipsa uos mihi, Q. Caecili, paucos ante dies ademistis. pro non dubio paulo ante, si diis placet, legati Eumenis sumebant, quae Antiochi fuerunt, Eumenem aequius esse quam me habere. id ego longe aliter iudico esse. Eumenes enim non, nisi uicissent Romani, sed nisi bellum gessissent, manere in regno suo non potuit. itaque ille uestrum meritum habet, non uos illius. mei autem regni tantum aberat ut ulla pars in discrimine fuerit, ut tria milia talentum et quinquaginta tectas naues et omnes Graeciae ciuitates, quas antea tenuissem, pollicentem ultro Antiochum in mercedem societatis sim aspernatus; hostemque ei me esse prius etiam quam M'. Acilius exercitum in Graeciam traiceret praetuli. et cum eo consule belli partem, quamcumque mihi delegauit, gessi, et insequenti consuli L. Scipioni, cum terra statuisset ducere exercitum ad Hellespontum, non iter tantum per regnum nostrum dedi, sed uias etiam muniui, pontes feci, commeatus praebui; nec per Macedoniam tantum, sed per Thraciam etiam, ubi inter cetera pax quoque praestanda a barbaris erat. pro hoc studio meo erga uos, ne dicam merito, utrum adicere uos, Romani, aliquid et amplificare et augere regnum meum munificentia uestra oportebat, an, quae haberem aut meo iure aut beneficio uestro eripere, id quod nunc facitis? Macedonum ciuitates, quas regni mei fuisse fatemini, non restituuntur. Eumenes tamquam ad Antiochum spoliandum me uenit, et si diis placet, decem legatorum decretum calumniae impudentissimae praetendit, quo maxime et refelli et coargui potest. disertissime enim planissimeque in eo scriptum est Chersonesum et Lysimachiam Eumeni dari. ubi tandem Aenus et Maronea et Thraciae ciuitates adscriptae sunt? quod ab illis ne postulare quidem est ausus, id apud uos, tamquam ab illis impetrauerit, obtinebit? quo in numero me apud uos esse uelitis, refert. si tamquam inimicum et hostem insectari propositum est, pergite ut coepistis facere: sin aliquis respectus est mei ut socii atque amici regis, deprecor, ne me tanta iniuria dignum iudicetis.'

[29] Mouit aliquantum oratio regis legatos. itaque medio responso rem suspenderunt: si decem legatorum decreto Eumeni datae ciuitates eae essent, nihil se mutare; si Philippus bello cepisset eas, praemium uictoriae iure belli habiturum; si neutrum eorum foret, cognitionem placere senatui reseruari et, ut omnia in integro manerent, praesidia, quae in iis urbibus sint, deduci.

Hae causae maxime animum Philippi alienauerunt ab Romanis, ut non a Perseo filio eius nouis causis motum, sed ob has a patre bellum relictum filio uideri possit. Romae nulla Macedonici belli suspicio erat. L. Manlius proconsul ex Hispania redierat; cui postulanti ab senatu in aede Bellonae triumphum rerum gestarum magnitudo impetrabilem faciebat; exemplum obstabat, quod ita comparatum more maiorum erat, ne quis, qui exercitum non deportasset, triumpharet, nisi perdomitam pacatamque prouinciam tradidisset successori. medius tamen honos Manlio habitus, ut ouans urbem iniret. tulit coronas aureas quinquaginta duas, auri praeterea pondo centum triginta duo, argenti sedecim milia trecenta, et pronuntiauit in senatu decem milia pondo argenti et octoginta auri Q. Fabium quaestorem aduehere: id quoque se in aerarium delaturum.

Magnus motus seruilis eo anno in Apulia fuit. Tarentum prouinciam L. Postumius praetor habebat. is de pastorum coniuratione, qui uias latrociniis pascuaeque publica infesta habuerant, quaestionem seuerè exercuit. ad septem milia hominum condemnauit: multi inde fugerunt, de multis sumptum est supplicium. consules diu retenti ad urbem dilectibus tandem in prouincias profecti sunt.

[30] Eodem anno in Hispania praetores C. Calpurnius et L. Quinctius, cum primo uere ex hibernis copias eductas in Baeturia iunxissent, in Carpetaniam, ubi hostium castra erant, progressi sunt, communi animo consilioque parati rem gerere. haud procul Dipone et Toletum urbibus inter pabulatores pugna orta est, quibus dum utrimque subuenitur a castris, paulatim omnes copiae in aciem eductae sunt. in eo tumultuario certamine et loca sua et genus pugnae pro hoste fuere. duo exercitus Romani fusi atque in castra compulsi sunt. non institere percussis hostes. praetores Romani, ne postero die castra oppugnarentur, silentio proximae noctis tacito signo exercitum abduxerunt. luce prima Hispani acie instructa ad uallum accesserunt, uacuaeque praeter spem castra ingressi, quae relictæ inter nocturnam trepidationem erant, diripuerunt, regressique in castra sua paucos dies quieti statuius manserunt. Romanorum sociorumque in proelio fugaque ad quinque milia occisa, quorum se spoliis hostes armarunt. inde ad Tagum flumen profecti sunt. praetores interim Romani omne id tempus contrahendis ex ciuitatibus sociis Hispanorum auxiliis et reficiendis ab terrore aduersae pugnae militum animis consumpserunt. ubi satis placere uires et iam miles quoque ad delendam priorem ignominiam hostem poscebat, duodecim milia passuum ab Tago flumine posuerunt castra. inde tertia uigilia sublatis signis quadrato agmine principio lucis ad Tagi ripam peruenerunt. trans fluuium in colle hostium castra erant. extemplo, qua duobus locis uada nudabat amnis, dextra parte Calpurnius, laeua Quinctius exercitus traduxerunt quieto hoste, dum miratur subitum aduentum consultatque, qui tumultum inicere trepidantibus in ipso transitu amnis potuisset. interim Romani, impedimentis quoque omnibus traductis contractisque in unum locum, quia iam moueri uidebant hostem nec spatium erat castra communiendi, aciem instruxerunt. in medio locatae quinta Calpurnii legio et octaua Quinctii: id robur totius exercitus erat. campum apertum usque ad hostium castra habebant, liberum a metu insidiarum.

[31] Hispani postquam in citeriore ripa duo Romanorum agmina conspexerunt, ut, priusquam se iungere atque instruere possent, occuparent eos, castris repente effusi cursu ad pugnam tendunt. atrox in principio pugna fuit, et Hispanis recenti uictoria ferocibus et insueta ignominia milite Romano accenso. acerrime media acies, duae fortissimae legiones, dimicabant. quas cum aliter moueri loco non posse hostis cerneret, cuneo institit pugnare; et usque plures confertioresque medios urgebant. ibi postquam laborare aciem Calpurnius praetor uidit, T. Quinctilium Uarum et L. Iuuentium Talam legatos ad singulas legiones adhortandas propere mittit; docere et monere iubet in illis spem omnem uincendi et retinendae Hispaniae esse: si illi loco cedant, neminem eius exercitus non modo Italiam, sed ne Tagi quidem ulteriorem ripam umquam uisurum. ipse cum equitibus duarum legionum paulum circumuectus in cuneum hostium, qui mediam urgebat aciem, ab latere incurrit. Quinctius cum sociis equitibus alterum hostium latus inuadit. sed longe acrius Calpurniani equites pugnabant, et praetor ante alios: nam et primus hostem percussit, et ita se immiscuit mediis, ut uix, utrius partis esset, nosci posset; et equites praetoris eximia uirtute et equitum pedites accensi sunt. pudor mouit primos centuriones, qui inter tela hostium praetorem conspexerunt. itaque urgere signiferos pro se quisque, iubere inferre signa et confestim militem sequi. renouatur ab omnibus clamor: impetus fit uelut ex superiore loco. haud secus ergo quam torrentis modo fundunt sternuntque percussos, nec sustineri alii super alios inferentes sese possunt. fugientes in castra equites persecuti sunt, et permixti turbae hostium intra uallum penetrauerunt; ubi ab relictis in praesidio castrorum proelium instauratum, coactique sunt Romani equites descendere ex equis. dimicantibus iis legio quinta superuenit; deinde, ut quaeque potuerant, copiae adfluebant. caeduntur passim Hispani per tota castra; nec plus quam quattuor milia hominum effugerunt. inde tria milia fere, qui arma retinuerant, montem propinquum ceperunt; mille semiermes maxime per agros palati sunt. supra triginta quinque milia hostium fuerant, ex quibus tam exigua pars pugnae superfuit. signa capta centum triginta tria. Romani sociique paulo plus sescenti et prouincialium auxiliorum centum quinquaginta ferme ceciderunt. tribuni militum quinque amissi et pauci equites Romani cruentae maxime uictoriae speciem fecerunt. in castris hostium, quia ipsis spatium sua communiendi non fuerat, manserunt. pro contione postero die laudati donatique a C. Calpurnio equites phaleris, pronuntiauitque eorum maxime opera hostes fusos, castra capta et expugnata esse. Quinctius alter praetor suos equites catellis ac fibulis donauit. donati et centuriones ex utriusque exercitu permulti, maxime qui mediam aciem tenuerant.

[32] Consules dilectibus aliisque, quae Romae agenda erant, peractis rebus in Ligures prouinciam exercitum duxerunt. Sempronius a Pisis profectus in Apuanos Ligures, uastando agros urendoque uicos et castella eorum aperuit saltum usque ad Macram fluuium et Lunae portum. hostes montem, antiquam sedem maiorum suorum, ceperunt; et inde superata locorum iniquitate proelio deiecti sunt. et Ap. Claudius felicitatem uirtutemque collegae in Liguribus Ingaunis aequauit secundis aliquot proeliis. sex praeterea oppida eorum expugnauit; multa milia hominum in iis cepit; belli auctores tres et quadraginta securi percussit. iam comitiorum appetebat tempus. prior tamen Claudius quam Sempronius, cui sors comitia habendi obtigerat, Romam uenit, quia P. Claudius frater eius consulatum petebat. competitores habebat patricos L. Aemilium Q.

Fabium Ser. Sulpicium Galbam, ueteres candidatos, et ab repulsis eo magis debitum, quia primo negatus erat, honorem repetentes. etiam quia plus quam unum ex patriciis creari non licebat, artior petitio quattuor petentibus erat. plebei quoque gratiosi homines petebant, L. Porcius Q. Terentius Culleo Cn. Baebius Tamphilus, et hi repulsis in spem impetrandi tandem aliquando honoris dilati. Claudius ex omnibus unus nouus candidatus erat. opinione hominum haud dubie destinabantur Q. Fabius Labeo et L. Porcius Licinus. sed Claudius consul sine lictoribus cum fratre toto foro uolitando, clamitantibus aduersariis et maiore parte senatus, meminisse eum debere se prius consulem populi Romani quam fratrem P. Claudii esse: quin ille sedens pro tribunali aut arbitrum aut tacitum spectatorem comitiorum se praeberet? — coerceri tamen ab effuso studio nequit. magnis contentionibus tribunorum quoque plebis, qui aut contra consulem aut pro studio eius pugnabant, comitia aliquotiens turbata, donec peruicit Appius, ut delecto Fabio fratrem traheret. creatus P. Claudius Pulcher praeter spem suam et ceterorum. locum suum tenuit L. Porcius Licinus, quia moderatis studiis, non ui Claudiana inter plebeios certatum est. praetorum inde comitia sunt habita: C. Decimius Flauus P. Sempronius Longus P. Cornelius Cethegus Q. Naeuius Matho C. Sempronius Blaesus A. Terentius Uarro praetores facti. haec eo anno, quo Ap. Claudius M. Sempronius consules fuerunt, domi militiaeque gesta.

[33] Principio insequentis anni P. Claudius L. Porcius consules, cum Q. Caecilius M. Baebius Ti. Sempronius, qui ad disceptandum inter Philippum et Eumenem reges Thessalorumque ciuitates missi erant, legationem renuntiassent, regum quoque eorum ciuitatiumque legatos in senatum introduxerunt. eadem utrimque iterata, quae dicta apud legatos in Graecia erant. aliam deinde nouam legationem patres, cuius princeps Ap. Claudius fuit, in Graeciam et Macedoniam decreuerunt ad uisendum, redditaene ciuitates Thessalis et Perrhaebis essent. iisdem mandatum, ut ab Aeno et Maronea praesidia deducerentur, maritimaque omnis Thraciae ora a Philippo et Macedonibus liberaretur. Peloponnesum quoque adire iussi, unde prior legatio discesserat incertiore statu rerum, quam si non uenissent: nam super cetera etiam sine responso dimissi, nec datum petentibus erat Achaeorum concilium. de qua re querente grauiter Q.

Caecilio et simul Lacedaemoniis deplorantibus moenia diruta, abductam plebem in Achaiam et uenundatam, ademptas, quibus ad eam diem ciuitas stetisset, Lycurgi leges, Achaei maxime concilii negati crimen excusabant recitando legem, quae nisi belli pacisue causa, et cum legati ab senatu cum litteris aut scriptis mandatis uenirent, uetaret indici concilium. ea ne postea excusatio esset, ostendit senatus curae iis esse debere, ut legatis Romanis semper adeundi concilium gentis potestas fieret, quem ad modum et illis, quotiens uellent, senatus daretur.

[34] Dimissis iis legionibus, Philippus a suis certior factus cedendum ciuitatibus deducendaque praesidia esse, infensus omnibus in Maronitas iram effundit. Onomasto, qui praeerat maritimae orae, mandat, ut partis aduersae principes interficeret. ille per Casandrum quendam, unum ex regiis iam diu habitantem Maroneae, nocte Thracibus intromissis uelut in bello capta urbe caedem fecit. idem apud Romanos legatos querentes tam crudeliter aduersus innoxios Maronitas, tam superbe aduersus populum Romanum factum, ut, quibus libertatem restituendam senatus censuisset, ii pro hostibus trucidarentur, abnuebat quicquam eorum ad se aut quemquam suorum pertinere; seditione inter ipsos dimicatum, cum ad se alii, alii ad Eumenem ciuitatem traherent; id facile scituros esse; percunctarentur ipsos Maronitas — , haud dubius, percussis omnibus terrore tam recentis caedis, neminem hiscere aduersus se ausurum. negare Appius rem euidentem pro dubia quaerendam. si ab se culpam remouere uellet, Onomastum et Casandrum, per quos acta res diceretur, mitteret Romam, ut eos senatus percunctari posset. primo adeo perturbauit ea uox regem, ut non color, non uultus ei constaret; deinde collecto tandem animo Casandrum, qui Maroneae fuisset, si utique uellent, se missurum dixit: ad Onomastum quidem quid eam rem pertinere, qui non modo Maroneae, sed ne in regione quidem propinqua fuisset? et parcebat magis Onomasto, honoratiori amico, et eundem indicem haud paulo plus timebat, quia et ipse sermonem cum eo contulerat et multorum talium ministrum et conscium habebat. Casander quoque, missis qui per Epirum ad mare prosequerentur eum, ne qua indicium emanaret, ueneno creditur sublatus.

[35] Et legati a Philippi colloquio ita digressi sunt, ut prae se ferrent

nihil eorum sibi placere, et Philippus minime, quin rebellandum esset, dubius. quia tamen immaturae ad id uires erant, ad moram interponendam Demetrium minorem filium mittere Romam simul ad purganda crimina, simul ad deprecandam iram senatus statuit, satis credens ipsum etiam iuuenem, quod Romae obses specimen indolis regiae dedisset, aliquid momenti facturum. interim per speciem auxilii Byzantiis ferendi, re ipsa ad terrorem regulis Thracum iniciendum profectus, percussis iis uno proelio et Amadoco duce capto in Macedoniam rediit, missis ad accolae Histri fluminis barbaros, ut in Italiam irrumperent, sollicitandos. et in Peloponneso aduentus legatorum Romanorum, qui ex Macedonia in Achaia ire iussi erant, exspectabatur; aduersus quos ut praeparata consilia haberent, Lycortas praetor concilium indixit. ibi de Lacedaemoniis actum: ex hostibus eos accusatores factos, et periculum esse, ne uicti magis timendi forent, quam bellantes fuissent. quippe in bello sociis Romanis Achaeos usos: nunc eosdem Romanos aequiores Lacedaemoniis quam Achaeis esse, ubi Areus etiam et Alcibiades, ambo exsules, suo beneficio restituti, legationem Romam aduersus gentem Achaeorum ita de ipsis meritam suscepissent, adeoque infesta oratione usi essent, ut pulsus patria, non restituti in eam uiderentur. clamor undique ortus, referret nominatim de iis; et cum omnia ira, non consilio gererentur, capitis damnati sunt. paucos post dies Romani legati uenerunt. his Clitore in Arcadia datum est concilium.

[36] Priusquam agerent quicquam, terror Achaeis iniectus erat et cogitatio, quam non ex aequo disceptatio futura esset, quod Areum et Alcibiadem capitis ab se concilio proximo damnatos cum legatis uidebant; nec hiscere quisquam audebat. Appius ea, quae apud senatum questi erant Lacedaemonii, displicere senatui ostendit: caedem primum ad Compasium factam eorum, qui a Philopoemene ad causam dicendam euocati uenissent; deinde cum in homines ita saeuitum esset, ne ulla parte crudelitas eorum cessaret, muros dirutos urbis nobilissimae esse, leges uetustissimas abrogatas, inclutamque per gentes disciplinam Lycurgi sublatam. haec cum Appius dixisset, Lycortas, et quia praetor et quia Philopoemenis, auctoris omnium quae Lacedaemone acta fuerant, factionis erat, ita respondit. 'difficilior nobis, Ap. Claudii, apud uos oratio est quam Romae nuper

apud senatum fuit. tunc enim Lacedaemoniis accusantibus respondendum erat: nunc a uobis ipsis accusati sumus, apud quos causa est dicenda. quam iniquitatem condicionis subimus illa spe, iudicis animo te auditurum esse, posita contentione qua paulo ante egisti. ego certe, cum ea, quae et hic antea apud Q. Caecilium et postea Romae questi sunt Lacedaemonii, a te paulo ante relata sint, non tibi sed illis me apud te respondere credam. caedem obicitis eorum, qui a Philopoemene praetore euocati ad causam dicendam interfecti sunt. hoc ego crimen non modo a uobis, Romani, sed ne apud uos quidem nobis obiciendum fuisse arbitror. quid ita? quia in uestro foedere erat, ut maritimis urbibus abstinerent Lacedaemonii. quo tempore armis captis urbes, a quibus abstinere iussi erant, nocturno impetu occupauerunt, si T. Quinctius, si exercitus Romanus, sicut antea, in Peloponneso fuisset, eo nimirum capti et oppressi confugissent. cum uos procul essetis, quo alio nisi ad nos, socios uestros, quos antea Gytheo opem ferentes, quos Lacedaemonem uobiscum simili de causa oppugnantes uiderant, confugerent? pro uobis igitur iustum piumque bellum suscepimus. quod cum alii laudent, reprehendere ne Lacedaemonii quidem possint, dii quoque ipsi comprobauerint, qui nobis uictoriam dederunt, quonam modo ea, quae belli iure acta sunt, in disceptationem ueniunt? quorum tamen maxima pars nihil pertinet ad nos. nostrum est, quod euocauimus ad causam dicendam eos, qui ad arma multitudinem exciuerant, qui expugnauerant maritima oppida, qui diripuerant, qui caedem principum fecerant. quod uero illi uenientes in castra interfecti sunt, uestrum est, Areu et Alcibiade, qui nunc nos, si diis placet, accusatis, non nostrum. exsules Lacedaemoniorum, quo ex numero hi quoque duo fuerunt, et tunc nobiscum erant, et quod domicilio sibi delegerant maritima oppida, se petitos credentes, in eos, quorum opera patria extorres ne in tuto quidem exsilio posse consenescere se indignabantur, impetum fecerunt. Lacedaemonii igitur Lacedaemonios, non Achaei interfecerunt; nec iure an iniuria caesi sint, argumentari refert.

dissoluendam Lycurgi disciplinam exstructi sint? tyranni enim nuper eos arcem et munimentum sibi, non ciuitati parauerunt; et si exsistat hodie ab inferis Lycurgus, gaudeat ruinis eorum, et nunc se patriam et Spartam antiquam agnoscere dicat. non Philopoemenem exspectare nec Achaeos, sed uos ipsi Lacedaemonii, uestris manibus amoliri et diruere omnia uestigia tyrannidis debuistis. uestrae enim illae deformes ueluti notae seruitutis erant, et cum sine muris per octingentos prope annos liberi, aliquando etiam principes Graeciae fuissetis, muris uelut compedibus circumdatis uincti per centum annos seruistis. quod ad leges ademptas attinet, ego antiquas Lacedaemoniis leges tyrannos ademisse arbitror; nos non suas ademisse, quas non habebant, sed nostras leges dedisse; nec male consuluisse ciuitati, cum concilii nostri eam fecerimus et nobis miscuerimus, ut corpus unum et concilium totius Peloponnesi esset. tunc, ut opinor, si aliis ipsi legibus uiueremus, alias istis iniunxissemus, queri se iniquo iure esse et indignari possent. scio ego, Ap. Claudii, hanc orationem, qua sum adhuc usus, neque sociorum apud socios neque liberae gentis esse, sed uere seruorum disceptantium apud dominos. nam si non uana illa uox praeconis fuit, qua liberos esse omnium primos Achaeos iussistis, si foedus ratum est, si societas et amicitia ex aequo obseruatur, cur ego, quid Capua capta feceritis Romani, non quaero, uos rationem reposcitis, quid Achaei Lacedaemoniis bello uictis fecerimus? interfecti aliqui sunt, finge, a nobis: quid? uos senatores Campanos securi non percussistis? at muros diruimus: uos non muros tantum sed urbem agrosque ademistis. specie, inquis, aequum est foedus: re apud Achaeos precaria libertas, apud Romanos etiam imperium est. sentio, Appi, et, si non oportet, non indignor: sed oro uos, quantumlibet intersit inter Romanos et Achaeos, modo ne in aequo hostes uestri nostrique apud uos sint ac nos socii, immo ne meliore iure sint. nam ut in aequo essent nos fecimus, cum leges iis nostras dedimus, cum, ut Achaici concilii essent, effecimus parum est uictis, quod uictoribus satis est; plus postulant hostes quam socii habent. quae iureiurando, quae monumentis litterarum in lapide insculptis in aeternam memoriam sancta atque sacrata sunt, ea cum periurio nostro tollere parant. ueremur quidem uos, Romani, et si ita uultis, etiam timemus: sed plus et ueremur et timemus deos immortales.’ cum ad sensu maximae partis est auditus, et locutum omnes pro maiestate magistratus censebant, ut facile appareret molliter agendo dignitatem suam tenere Romanos non posse. tum Appius suadere se magnopere Achaeis dixit, ut, dum liceret uoluntate sua facere, gratiam inirent, ne mox inuiti et coacti facerent. haec uox audita quidem cum omnium gemitu est, sed metum iniecit imperata recusandi. id modo petierunt, ut Romani, quae uiderentur, de Lacedaemoniis mutarent nec Achaeos religione obstringerent irrita ea, quae iureiurando sanxissent, faciendi. damnatio tantum Arei et Alcibiadis, quae nuper facta erat, sublata est.

[38] Romae principio eius anni, cum de prouinciis consulum et praetorum actum est, consulibus Ligures, quia bellum nusquam alibi erat, decreti. praetores C. Decimius Flauus urbanam, P. Cornelius Cethegus inter ciues et peregrinos sortiti sunt, C. Sempronius Blaesus Siciliam, Q. Naeuius Matho Sardiniam et ut idem quaereret de ueneficiis, A. Terentius Uarro Hispaniam citeriorem, P. Sempronius Longus Hispaniam ulteriorem. de iis duabus prouinciis legati per id fere tempus L. Iuuentius Talna et T. Quinctilius Uarus uenerunt, qui, quantum bellum iam profligatum in Hispania esset, senatu edocto postularunt simul, ut pro rebus tam prospere gestis diis immortalibus haberetur honos et ut praetoribus exercitum deportare liceret. supplicatio in biduum decreta est: de legionibus deportandis, cum de consulum praetorumque exercitibus ageretur, rem integram referri iusserunt. paucos post dies consulibus in Ligures binae legiones, quas Ap. Claudius et M. Sempronius habuerant, decretae sunt. de Hispaniensibus exercitibus magna contentio fuit inter novos praetores et amicos absentium, Calpurnii Quinctiique. utraque causa tribunos plebis, utraque consulem habebat. hi se intercessuros senatus consulto, si deportandos censerent exercitus, denuntiabant: illi, si haec intercessio fieret, nullam rem aliam se decerni passuros. uicta postremo absentium gratia est et senatus consultum factum, ut praetores quattuor milia peditum Romanorum scriberent, trecentos equites, et quinque milia peditum sociorum Latini nominis, quingentos equites, quos secum in Hispaniam portarent. cum ea quattuor milia <in> legiones disciprissent, quo plus quam quina milia peditum, treceni equites in singulis legionibus esset, dimitterent, eos primum, qui emerita stipendia haberent, deinde ut cuiusque fortissima opera Calpurnius et Quinctius in proelio usi essent.

[39] Hac sedata contentione alia subinde C. Decimii praetoris morte exorta est. Cn. Sicinius et L. Pupius, qui aediles proximo anno fuerant, et C. Ualerius flamen Dialis et Q. Fuluius Flaccus — is quia aedilis curulis designatus erat, sine toga candida, sed maxima ex omnibus contentione — petebant; certamenque ei cum flamine erat. et postquam primo aequare, mox superare etiam est uisus, pars tribunorum plebis negare rationem eius habendam esse, quod duos simul unus magistratus, praesertim curules, neque capere posset nec gerere; pars legibus eum solui aequum censere, ut quem uellet praetorem creandi populo potestas fieret. L. Porcius consul primo in ea sententia esse, ne nomen eius acciperet; deinde, ut ex auctoritate senatus idem faceret, conuocatis patribus referre se ad eos dixit, quod nec iure ullo nec exemplo tolerabili liberae ciuitati aedilis curulis designatus praeturam peteret; sibi, nisi quid aliud iis uideretur, in animo esse e lege comitia habere. patres censuerunt, uti L. Porcius consul cum Q. Fuluio ageret, ne impedimento esset, quo minus comitia praetoris in locum C. Decimii subrogandi e lege haberentur. agenti consuli ex senatus consulto respondit Flaccus nihil, quod se indignum esset, facturum. medio responso spem ad uoluntatem interpretantibus fecerat cessurum patrum auctoritati esse. comitiis acris etiam quam ante petebat criminando, extorqueri sibi a consule et senatu populi Romani beneficium, et inuidiam fieri geminati honoris, tamquam non appareret, ubi designatus praetor esset, extemplo aedilitate se abdicaturum. consul cum et pertinaciam petentis crescere et fauorem populi magis magisque in eum inclinari cerneret, dimissis comitiis senatum uocauit. censuerunt frequentes, quoniam Flaccum auctoritas patrum nihil mouisset, ad populum cum Flacco agendum. contione aduocata cum egisset consul, ne tum quidem de sententia motus gratias populo Romano egit, quod tanto studio, quotienscumque declarandae uoluntatis potestas facta esset, praetorem se uoluisset facere: ea sibi studia ciuium suorum destituere non esse in animo. haec uero tam obstinata uox tantum ei fauorem accendit, ut haud dubius praetor esset, si consul accipere nomen uellet. ingens certamen tribunis et inter se ipsos et cum consule fuit, donec senatus a consule est habitus decretumque: quoniam praetoris subrogandi comitia ne legibus fierent, pertinacia Q. Flacci et praua studia hominum impedirent, senatum censere satis praetorum esse; P. Cornelius utramque in urbe iurisdictionem haberet, Apollinique ludos faceret.

[40] His comitiis prudentia et uirtute senatus sublatis, alia maioris certaminis, quo et maiore de re et inter plures potentioresque uiros, sunt exorta. censuram summa contentione petebant L. Ualerius Flaccus P. et L. Scipiones Cn. Manlius Uulso L. Furius Purpurio patricii, plebeii autem M. Porcius Cato M. Fuluius Nobilio Ti. et M. Sempronii, Longus et Tuditanus. sed omnes patricos plebeiosque nobilissimarum familiarum M. Porcius longe anteibat. in hoc uiro tanta uis animi ingeniiue fuit, ut quocumque loco natus esset, fortunam sibi ipse facturus fuisse uideretur. nulla ars neque priuatae neque publicae rei gerendae ei defuit; urbanas rusticasque res pariter callebat. ad summos honores alios scientia iuris, alios eloquentia, alios gloria militaris prouexit: huic uersatile ingenium sic pariter ad omnia fuit, ut natum ad id unum diceres, quodcumque ageret: in bello manu fortissimus multisque insignibus clarus pugnis, idem postquam ad magnos honores peruenit, summus imperator, idem in pace, si ius consuleres, peritissimus, si causa oranda esset, eloquentissimus, nec is tantum, cuius lingua uiuo eo uiguerit, monumentum eloquentiae nullum exstet: uiuit immo uigetque eloquentia eius sacrata scriptis omnis generis. orationes et pro se multae et pro aliis et in alios: nam non solum accusando sed etiam causam dicendo fatigauit inimicos. simultates nimio plures et exercuerunt eum et ipse exercuit eas; nec facile dixeris, utrum magis presserit eum nobilitas, an ille agitauerit nobilitatem. asperi procul dubio animi et linguae acerbae et immodice liberae fuit, sed inuicti a cupiditatibus animi, rigidae innocentiae, contemptor gratiae, diuitiarum. in parsimonia, in patientia laboris periculique ferrei prope corporis animique, quem ne senectus quidem, quae soluit omnia, fregerit, qui sextum et octogesimum annum agens causam dixerit, ipse pro se orauerit scripseritque, nonagesimo anno Ser. Galbam ad populi adduxerit iudicium.

[41] Hunc, sicut omni uita, tum petentem premebat nobilitas; coierantque praeter L. Flaccum, qui collega in consulatu fuerat, candidati omnes ad deiciendum honore, non solum ut ipsi potius adipiscerentur, nec quia indignabantur nouum hominem censorem uidere, sed etiam quod tristem censuram periculosamque multorum famae et ab laeso a plerisque et laedendi cupido exspectabant. etenim tum quoque minitabundus petebat, refragari sibi, qui liberam et fortem censuram timerent, criminando. et simul L. Ualerio suffragabatur: illo uno collega castigare se noua flagitia et priscos reuocare mores posse. his accensi homines, aduersa nobilitate, non M. Porcium modo censorem fecerunt, sed collegam ei L. Ualerium Flaccum adiecerunt.

Secundum comitia censorum consules praetoresque in prouincias profecti praeter Q. Naeuium, quem quattuor non minus menses, priusquam in Sardiniam iret, quaestiones ueneficii, quarum magnam partem extra urbem per municipia conciliabulaque habuit, quia ita aptius uisum erat, tenuerunt. si Antiati Ualerio credere libet, ad duo milia hominum damnavit. et L. Postumius praetor, cui Tarentum prouincia euenerat, magnas pastorum coniurationes uindicauit, et reliquias Bacchanalium quaestionis cum cura exsecutus est. multos, qui aut citati non adfuerant aut uades deseruerant, in ea regione Italiae latentes partim noxios iudicauit, partim comprehensos Romam ad senatum misit. in carcerem omnes a P. Cornelio coniecti sunt.

[42] In Hispania ulteriore fractis proximo bello Lusitanis quietae res fuerunt: in citeriore A. Terentius in Suessetanis oppidum Corbionem uineis et operibus expugnauit, captiuos uendidit: queta deinde hiberna et citerior prouincia habuit. ueteres praetores C. Calpurnius Piso et L. Quinctius Romam redierunt. utrique magno patrum consensu triumphus est decretus. prior C. Calpurnius de Lusitanis et Celtiberis triumphauit: coronas aureas tulit octoginta tres et duodecim milia pondo argenti. paucos post dies L. Quinctius Crispinus ex iisdem Lusitanis et Celtiberis triumphauit: tantundem auri atque argenti in eo triumpho praelatum. censores M. Porcius et L. Ualerius metu mixta exspectatione senatum legerunt; septem mouerunt senatu, ex quibus unum insignem et nobilitate et honoribus, L. Quinctium Flamininum consularem. patrum memoria institutum fertur, ut censores motis senatu adscriberent notas. Catonis et aliae quidem acerbae orationes exstant in eos, quos aut senatorio loco mouit aut quibus equos ademit, longe grauissima in L. Quinctium oratio, qua si accusator ante notam, non censor post notam usus esset, retinere L. Quinctium in senatu ne frater quidem T. Quinctius, si tum censor esset, potuisset. inter cetera obiecit ei Philippum Poenum, carum ac nobile scortum, ab Roma in Galliam prouinciam spe ingentium donorum perductum. eum puerum, <per> lascuiam cum cauillaretur, exprobrare consuli [per]saepe solitum, quod sub ipsum spectaculum gladiatorium abductus ab Roma esset, ut obsequium amatori uenditaret. forte epulantibus iis, cum iam uino incaluissent, nuntiatum in conuiuio esse nobilem Boium cum liberis transfugam uenisse; conuenire consulem uelle, ut ab eo fidem praesens acciperet. introductum in tabernaculum per interpretem adloqui consulem coepisse. inter cuius sermonem Quinctius scorto 'uis tu', inquit 'quoniam gladiatorium spectaculum reliquisti, iam hunc Gallum morientem uidere?' et cum is uixdum serio adnuisset, ad nutum scorti consulem stricto gladio, qui super caput pendebat, loquenti Gallo caput primum percussisse, deinde, fugienti fidemque populi Romani atque eorum, qui aderant, imploranti latus transfodisse.

[43] Ualerius Antias, ut qui nec orationem Catonis legisset et fabulae tantum sine auctore editae credidisset, aliud argumentum, simile tamen et libidine et crudelitate peragit. Placentiae famosam mulierem, cuius amore deperiret, in conuiuium arcessitam scribit. ibi iactantem sese scorto inter cetera rettulisse, quam acriter quaestiones exercuisset, et quam multos capitis damnatos in uinculis haberet, quos securi percussurus esset. tum illam infra eum accubantem negasse umquam uidisse quemquam securi ferientem, et peruelle id uidere. hic indulgentem amatorem unum ex illis miseris attrahi iussum securi percussisse. facinus, siue eo modo, quo censor obiecit, siue, ut Ualerius tradit, commissum est, saeuum atque atrox: inter pocula atque epulas, ubi libare diis dapes, ubi bene precari mos esset, ad spectaculum scorti procacis, in sinu consulis recubantis, mactatam humanam uictimam esse et cruore mensam respersam. in extrema oratione Catonis condicio Quinctio fertur, ut si id factum negaret ceteraque, quae obiecisset, sponsione defenderet sese: sin fateretur, ignominiane sua quemquam dolitum censeret, cum ipse uino et uenere amens sanguine hominis in conuiuio lusisset?

[44] In equitatu recognoscendo L. Scipioni Asiatico ademptus equus. in censibus quoque accipiendis tristis et aspera in omnes

ordines censura fuit. ornamenta et uestem muliebrem et uehicula, quae pluris quam quindecim milium aeris essent, <decies tanto pluris quam quanti essent> in censum referre iuratores iussi; item mancipia minora annis uiginti, quae post proximum lustrum decem milibus aeris aut pluris eo uenissent, uti ea quoque decies tanto pluris quam quanti essent aestimarentur, et his rebus omnibus terni in milia aeris attribuerentur. aquam publicam omnem in priuatum aedificium aut agrum fluentem ademerunt; et quae in loca publica inaedificata immolitaue priuati habebant, intra dies triginta demoliti sunt. opera deinde facienda ex decreta in eam rem pecunia, lacus sternendos lapide, detergendasque, qua opus esset, cloacas, in Auentino et in aliis partibus, qua nondum erant, faciendas locauerunt. et separatim Flaccus molem ad Neptunias aquas, ut iter populo esset, et uiam per Formianum montem, Cato atria duo, Maenium et Titium, in lautumiis, et quattuor tabernas in publicum emit basilicamque ibi fecit, quae Porcia appellata est. et uectigalia summis pretiis, ultro tributa infimis locauerunt. quas locationes cum senatus precibus et lacrimis uictus publicanorum induci et de integro locari iussisset, censores, edicto summotis ab hasta qui ludificati priorem locationem erant, omnia eadem paulum imminutis pretiis locauerunt. nobilis censura fuit simultatiumque plena, quae M. Porcium, cui acerbitas ea adsignabatur, per omnem uitam exercuerunt. eodem anno coloniae duae, Potentia in Picenum, Pisaurum in Gallicum agrum, deductae sunt. sena iugera in singulos data. diuiserunt agrum coloniasque deduxerunt iidem tresuiri, Q. Fabius Labeo, et M. et Q. Fuluii, Flaccus et Nobilior. consules eius anni nec domi nec militiae memorabile quicquam egerunt.

peregrinam est sortitus. Sisennae Cornelio urbana, Sp. Postumio Sicilia, L. Pupio Apulia, L. Iulio Gallia, Cn. Sicinio Sardinia euenit. L. Iulius maturare est iussus. Galli Transalpini per saltus ignotae antea uiae, ut ante dictum est, in Italiam transgressi oppidum in agro, qui nunc est Aquileiensis, aedificabant. id eos ut prohiberet, quod eius sine bello posset, praetori mandatum est. si armis prohibendi essent, consules certiores faceret: ex his placere alterum aduersus Gallos ducere legiones.

extremo prioris anni [comitia auguris creandi habita erant]. <augur> in demortui Cn. Cornelii Lentuli locum creatus erat Sp. Postumius Albinus.

[46] Huius principio anni P. Licinius Crassus pontifex maximus mortuus est, in cuius locum M. Sempronius Tuditanus pontifex est cooptatus; pontifex maximus est creatus C. Seruilius Geminus. P. Licinii funeris causa uisceratio data, et gladiatores centum uiginti pugnauerunt, et ludi funebres per triduum facti, post ludos epulum. in quo cum toto foro strata triclinia essent, tempestas cum magnis procellis coorta coegit plerosque tabernacula statuere in foro: eadem paulo post, cum undique disserenasset, sublata; defunctosque uulgo ferebant quod inter fatalia uates cecinissent, necesse esse tabernacula in foro statui. hac religione leuatis altera iniecta, quod sanguine per biduum pluuisset in area Uulcani; et per decemuiros supplicatio indicta erat eius prodigii expiandi causa.

Priusquam consules in prouincias proficiscerentur, legationes transmarinas in senatum introduxerunt. nec umquam ante tantum regionis eius hominum Romae fuerat. nam ex quo fama per gentes, quae Macedoniam accolunt, uulgata est crimina querimoniasque de Philippo non neglegenter ab Romanis audiri, multis operae pretium fuisse queri, pro se quaeque ciuitates gentesque, singuli etiam priuatim — grauis enim accola omnibus erat — Romam aut ad spem leuandae iniuriae aut ad deflendae solacium uenerunt. et ab Eumene rege legatio cum fratre eius Athenaeo uenit ad querendum simul quod non deducerentur ex Thracia praesidia, simul quod in Bithyniam Prusiae bellum aduersus Eumenem gerenti auxilia missa forent.

[47] Respondendum ad omnia iuueni tum admodum Demetrio erat. cum haud facile esset aut ea, quae obicerentur, aut quae aduersus ea

dicenda erant, memoria complecti — nec enim multa solum, sed etiam pleraque oppido quam parua erant, de controuersia finium, de hominibus raptis pecoribusque abactis, de iure aut dicto per libidinem aut non dicto, de rebus per uim aut gratiam iudicatis — , nihil horum neque Demetrium docere dilucide nec se satis liquido discere ab eo senatus cum cerneret posse, simul et tirocinio et perturbatione iuuenis moueretur, quaeri iussit ab eo, ecquem de his rebus commentarium a patre accepisset. cum respondisset accepisse se, nihil prius nec potius uisum est quam regis ipsius de singulis responsa accipere. librum extemplo poposcerunt, deinde ut ipse recitaret permiserunt. erant autem de singulis rebus in breue coactae causae, ut alia fecisse se secundum decreta legatorum diceret, alia non per se stetisse, quo minus faceret, sed per eos ipsos, qui accusarent. interposuerat et querellas de iniquitate decretorum, et quam non ex aequo disceptatum apud Caecilium foret indigneque sibi nec ullo suo merito insultatum ab omnibus esset. has notas irritati eius animi collegit senatus: ceterum alia excusanti iuueni, alia recipienti futura ita, ut maxime uellet senatus, responderi placuit nihil patrem eius neque rectius nec magis quod ex uoluntate senatus esset fecisse, quam quod, utcumque ea gesta essent, per Demetrium filium satisfieri uoluisset Romanis. multa et dissimulare et obliuisci et pati praeterita senatum posse, et credere etiam Demetrio [credendum esse]. obsidem enim se animum eius habere, etsi corpus patri reddiderit, et scire, quantum salua in patrem pietate possit, amicum eum populi Romani esse, honorisque eius causa missuros in Macedoniam legatos, ut si quid minus factum sit quam debuerit, tum quoque sine piaculo rerum praetermissarum fiat. uelle etiam sentire Philippum integra omnia sibi cum populo Romano Demetrii filii beneficio esse.

[48] Haec, quae augendae amplitudinis eius causa facta erant, extemplo in inuidiam, mox etiam in perniciem adulescenti uerterunt. Lacedaemonii deinde introducti sunt. multae et paruae disceptationes iactabantur: sed quae maxime rem continerent, erant, utrum restituerentur, quos Achaei damnauerant, necne; inique an iure occidissent, quos occiderant, [uertebatur] et utrum manerent in Achaico concilio Lacedaemonii, an, ut ante fuerat, secretum eius unius in Peloponneso ciuitatis ius esset. restitui iudiciaque facta tolli placuit, Lacedaemonem manere in Achaico concilio scribique id decretum et consignari a Lacedaemoniis et Achaeis.

Legatus in Macedoniam Q. Marcius est missus, iussus idem in Peloponneso sociorum res aspicere. nam ibi quoque et ex ueteribus discordiis residui motus erant, et Messene descuerat a concilio Achaico. cuius belli et causas et ordinem si expromere uelim, immemor sim propositi, quo statui non ultra attingere externa, nisi qua Romanis cohaerent rebus.

[49] Euentus memorabilis est, quod, cum bello superiores essent, Achaei, Philopoemen praetor eorum capitur, ad praeoccupandam Coronen, quam hostes petebant, in<ita> ualle iniqua cum equitibus paucis oppressus. ipsum potuisse effugere Thracum Cretensiumque auxilio tradunt: sed pudor relinquendi equites, nobilissimos gentis, ab ipso nuper lectos, tenuit. quibus dum locum ad euadendas angustias cogendo ipse agmen praebet, sustinens impetus hostium, prolapso equo et suo ipse casu et onere equi super eum ruentis haud multum auit, quin exanimaretur, septuaginta annos iam natus et diutino morbo, ex quo tum primum reficiebatur, uiribus admodum attenuatis. iacentem hostes superfusi oppresserunt; cognitumque [primum] a uerecundia memoriaque meritorum haud secus quam ducem suum attollunt reficiuntque et ex ualle deuia in uiam portant, uix sibimet ipsi prae necopinato gaudio credentes; pars nuntios Messenen praemittunt debellatum esse, Philopoemenem captum adduci. primum adeo incredibilis uisa res, ut non pro uano modo sed uix pro sano nuntius audiretur. deinde ut super alium alius idem omnes adfirmantes ueniebant, tandem facta fides; et priusquam appropinquare urbi satis scirent, ad spectaculum omnes simul liberi ac serui, pueri quoque cum feminis, effunduntur. itaque clauserat portam turba, dum pro se quisque, nisi ipse oculis suis credidisset, uix pro comperta tantam rem habiturus uidetur. aegre summouentes obuios intrare portam, qui adducebant Philopoemenem, potuerunt. aequae conferta turba iter reliquum clauserat; et cum pars maxima exclusa a spectaculo esset, theatrum repente, quod propinquum uiae erat, compleuerunt, et, ut eo adduceretur in conspectum populi, una uoce omnes exposcebant. magistratus et principes ueriti, ne quem motum misericordia praesentis tanti uiri faceret, cum alios uerecundia pristinae maiestatis collatae praesenti fortunae, alios recordatio ingentium meritorum motura esset, procul in conspectu eum statuerunt, deinde raptim ex oculis hominum abstraxerunt, dicente praetore Dinocrate esse, quae pertinentia ad summam belli percunctari eum magistratus uellent. inde abducto eo in curiam et senatu uocato consultari coeptum.

[50] Iam inuesperascebat, et non modo cetera, sed ne in proximam quidem noctem ubi satis tuto custodiretur, expediebant. obstupuerant ad magnitudinem pristinae eius fortunae uirtutisque, et neque ipsi domum recipere custodiendum audebant, nec cuiquam uni custodiam eius satis credebant. admonent deinde quidam esse thesaurum publicum sub terra, saxo quadrato saeptum. eo uinctus demittitur, et saxum ingens, quo operitur, machina superimpositum est. ita loco potius quam homini cuiquam credendam custodiam rati, lucem insequentem exspectauerunt. postero die multitudo quidem integra, memor pristinorum eius in ciuitatem meritorum, parcendum ac per eum remedia quaerenda esse praesentium malorum censebant: defectionis auctores, quorum in manu res publica erat, in secreto consultantes omnes ad necem eius consentiebant. sed utrum maturarent an differrent, ambigebatur. uicit pars audior poenae, missusque qui uenenum ferret. accepto poculo nihil aliud locutum ferunt quam quaesisse, si incolumis Lycortas — is alter imperator Achaeorum erat — equitesque euasissent. postquam dictum est incolumes esse, ‘bene habet’ inquit et poculo impauide exhausto haud ita multo post exspirauit. non diuturnum mortis eius gaudium auctoribus crudelitatis fuit. uicta namque Messene bello exposcentibus Achaeis deditit noxios, ossaque reddita Philopoemenis sunt, et sepultus ab uniuerso Achaico est concilio, adeo omnibus humanis congestis honoribus, ut ne diuinis quidem abstineretur. ab scriptoribus rerum Graecis Latinisque tantum huic uiro tribuitur, ut a quibusdam eorum, uelut ad insignem notam huius anni, memoriae mandatum sit tres claros imperatores eo anno decessisse, Philopoemenem, Hannibalem, P. Scipionem: adeo in aequo eum duarum potentissimarum gentium summis imperatoribus posuerunt.

[51] Ad Prusiam regem legatus T. Quinctius Flamininus uenit, quem suspectum Romanis et receptus post fugam Antiochi Hannibal et bellum aduersus Eumenem motum faciebat. ibi seu quia a Flaminino inter cetera obiectum Prusiae erat hominem omnium, qui uiuerent, infestissimum populo Romano apud eum esse, qui patriae suae primum, deinde fractis eius opibus Antiocho regi auctor belli aduersus populum Romanum fuisset; seu quia ipse Prusias, ut gratificaretur praesenti Flaminino Romanisque, per se necandi aut tradendi eius in potestatem consilium cepit; a primo colloquio Flaminini milites extemplo ad domum Hannibalis custodiendam missi sunt. semper talem exitum uitae suae Hannibal prospexerat animo et Romanorum inexpiabile odium in se cernens, et fidei regum nihil sane confisus: Prusiae uero leuitatem etiam expertus erat; Flaminini quoque aduentum uelut fatalem sibi horruerat. ad omnia undique infesta ut iter semper aliquod praeparatum fugae haberet, septem exitus e domo fecerat, et ex iis quosdam occultos, ne custodia saepirentur. sed graue imperium regum nihil inexploratum, quod uestigari uolunt, efficit. totius circuitum domus ita custodiis complexi sunt, ut nemo inde elabi posset. Hannibal, postquam est nuntiatum milites regios in uestibulo esse, postico, quod deuium maxime atque occultissimi exitus erat, fugere conatus, ut id quoque occursu militum obsaeptum sensit et omnia circa clausa custodiis dispositis esse uenenum, quod multo ante praeparatum ad tales habebat casus, poposcit. ‘liberemus’ inquit ‘diuturna cura populum Romanum, quando mortem senis exspectare longum censent. nec magnam nec memorabilem ex inermi proditoque Flamininus uictoriam feret. mores quidem populi Romani quantum mutauerint, uel hic dies argumento erit. horum patres Pyrrho regi, hosti armato, exercitum in Italia habenti, ut a ueneno caueret praedixerunt: hi legatum consularem, qui auctor esset Prusiae per scelus occidendi hospitis, miserunt.’ exsecratus deinde in caput regnumque Prusiae, et hospitales deos uiolatae ab eo fidei testes inuocans, poculum exhaustit. hic uitae exitus fuit Hannibalis.

inscripta P. Africani est. hic Naeuius in magistratum libris est tribunus plebis P. Claudio L. Porcio consulibus, sed iniit tribunatum Ap. Claudio M. Sempronio consulibus ante diem quartum idus Decembres. inde tres menses ad idus Martias sunt, quibus P. Claudius L. Porcius consulatum inierunt. ita uixisse in tribunatu Naeui uidetur, diesque ei dici ab eo potuisse, decessisse autem ante L. Ualerii et M. Porcii censuram. trium clarissimorum suae cuiusque gentis uirorum non tempore magis congruente comparabilis mors uidetur esse, quam quod nemo eorum satis dignum splendore uitae exitum habuit. iam primum omnes non in patrio solo mortui nec sepulti sunt. ueneno absumpti Hannibal et Philopoemen; exsul Hannibal, proditus ab hospite, captus Philopoemen in carcere et in uinculis exspirauit: Scipio etsi non exsul neque damnatus, die tamen dicta, ad quam non adfuerat reus, absens citatus, uoluntarium non sibimet ipse solum sed etiam funeri suo exsilium indixit.

[53] Dum ea in Peloponneso, a quibus deuertit oratio, geruntur, reditus in Macedoniam Demetrii legatorumque aliter aliorum adfecerat animos. uulgus Macedonum, quos belli ab Romanis imminenti metus terruerat, Demetrium ut pacis auctorem cum ingenti fauore conspiciebant, simul et spe haud dubia regnum ei post mortem patris destinabant. nam etsi minor aetate quam Perseus esset, hunc iusta matre familiae, illum paelice ortum esse; illum ut ex uulgato corpore genitum nullam certi patris notam habere, hunc insignem Philippi similitudinem prae se ferre. ad hoc Romanos Demetrium in paterno solio locaturos, Persei nullam apud eos gratiam esse. haec uulgo loquebantur. itaque et Persea cura angebat, ne parum pro se una aetas ualeret, cum aliis omnibus rebus frater superior esset; et Philippus ipse, uix sui arbitrii fore, quem heredem regni relinqueret credens, sibi quoque grauiorem esse quam uellet minorem filium aiebat. offendebar inter dum concursu Macedonum ad eum, et alteram iam se uiuo regiam esse indignabatur. et ipse iuuenis haud dubie inflatior redierat, subnisiis erga se iudiciis senatus, concessisque sibi, quae patri negata essent; et omnis mentio Romanorum quantam dignitatem ei apud ceteros Macedonas, tantam inuidiam non apud fratrem modo sed etiam apud patrem conciliabat, utique postquam legati [alii] Romani uenerunt, et cogebar decedere Thracia praesidiaque deducere et alia aut ex decreto priorum legatorum aut ex noua constitutione senatus facere. sed omnia maerens quidem et gemens, eo magis quod filium frequentiore prope cum illis quam secum cernebat, oboedienter tamen aduersus Romanos faciebat, ne quam mouendi extemplo belli causam praeberet. auertendos etiam animos a suspitione talium consiliorum ratus, mediam per Thraciam exercitum in Odrysas et Dentheletos et Bessos duxit: Philippopolin urbem fuga desertam oppidanorum, qui in proxima montium iuga cum familiis receperant sese, cepit, campestresque barbaros, depopulatus agros eorum, in deditionem accepit. relicto inde ad Philippopolin praesidio, quod haud multo post ab Odrysis expulsum est, oppidum in Deuriopo condere instituit — Paeoniae ea regio est — , prope Erigonum fluuium, qui ex Illyrico per Pe<lag>oniam fluens in Axium amnem editur, haud procul Stobis, uetere urbe: nouam urbem Perseida, ut is filio maiori haberetur honos, appellari iussit.

[54] Dum haec in Macedonia geruntur, consules in prouincias profecti. Marcellus nuntium praemisit ad L. Porcium proconsulem, ut ad nouum Gallorum oppidum legiones admoueret. aduenienti consuli Galli sese dediderunt. duodecim milia armatorum erant: plerique arma ex agris rapta habebant: ea aegre patientibus iis adempta, quaeque alia aut populates agros rapuerant aut secum attulerant. de his rebus qui quererentur, legatos Romam miserunt. introducti in senatum a C. Ualerio praetore exposuerunt se superante in Gallia multitudine inopia coactos agri et egestate ad quaerendam sedem Alpes transgressos, quae inculta per solitudines uiderent, ibi sine ullius iniuria consedissee. oppidum quoque aedificare coepisse, quod indicium esset nec agro nec urbi ulli uim adlaturos uenisse. nuper M. Claudium ad se nuntium misisse bellum se cum iis, ni dederentur, gesturum. se certam, etsi non speciosam pacem quam incerta belli praeoptantes dedidisse se prius in fidem quam in potestatem populi Romani. post paucos dies iussos et urbe et agro decedere sese tacitos abire, quo terrarum possent, in animo habuisse. arma deinde sibi, et postremo omnia alia, quae ferrent agerentque, adempta. orare se senatum populumque Romanum, ne in se innoxios deditos acerbius quam in hostes saeuirent. huic orationi senatus ita responderi iussit, neque illos recte fecisse, cum in Italiam uenerint oppidumque in alieno agro, nullius Romani magistratus, qui ei prouinciae praeesset, permissu aedificare conati sint; neque senatui placere deditos spoliari. itaque se cum iis legatos ad consulem missuros, qui, si redeant, unde uenerint, omnia iis sua reddi iubeant, quique protinus eant trans Alpes, et denuntient Gallicis populis, multitudinem suam domi contineant: Alpes prope inexcuperabilem finem in medio esse: non utique iis melius fore <quam> qui eas primi peruias fecissent. legati missi L. Furius Purpurio Q. Minucius L. Manlius Acidinus. Galli, redditis omnibus, quae sine cuiusquam iniuria habebant, Italia excesserunt.

[55] Legatis Romanis Transalpini populi benigne responderunt. seniores eorum nimiam lenitatem populi Romani castigarunt, quod eos homines, qui gentis iniussu profecti occupare agrum imperii Romani et in alieno solo aedificare oppidum conati sint, impunitos dimiserint: debuisse grauem temeritatis mercedem statui. quod uero etiam sua reddiderint, uereri ne tanta indulgentia plures ad talia audenda impellantur. et exceperunt et prosecuti cum donis legatos sunt.

M. Claudius consul Gallis ex prouincia exactis Histricum bellum moliri coepit litteris ad senatum missis, ut sibi in Histriam traducere legiones liceret. id senatui <non> placuit. illud agitabant, uti colonia Aquileia deduceretur, nec satis constabat, utrum Latinam an ciuium Romanorum deduci placeret. postremo Latinam potius coloniam deducendam patres censuerunt. triumuiroi creati sunt P. Scipio Nasica C. Flaminius L. Manlius Acidinus. eodem anno Mutina et Parma coloniae ciuium Romanorum sunt deductae. bina milia hominum in agro, qui proxime Boiorum, ante Tuscorum fuerat, octona iugera Parmae, quina Mutinae acceperunt. deduxerunt triumuiroi M. Aemilius Lepidus T. Aebutius Parrus L. Quinctius Crispinus. et Saturnia colonia ciuium Romanorum in agrum Caletranum est deducta. deduxerunt triumuiroi Q. Fabius Labeo C. Afranius Stellio Ti. Sempronius Gracchus. in singulos iugera data dena.

[56] Eodem anno A. Terentius proconsul haud procul flumine Hiberno, in agro Ausetano, et proelia secunda cum Celtiberis fecit, et oppida, quae ibi communierant, aliquot expugnauit. ulterior Hispania eo anno in pace fuit, quia et P. Sempronius proconsul diutino morbo est implicitus, et nullo lacescente peropportune quieuerunt Lusitani. nec in Liguribus memorabile quicquam a Q. Fabio consule gestum.

Ex Histria reuocatus M. Marcellus exercitu dimisso Romam comitiorum causa rediit. creauit consules Cn. Baebium Tamphilum et L. Aemilium Paulum. cum M. Aemilio Lepido hic aedilis curulis fuerat; a quo consule quintus annus erat, cum is ipse Lepidus post duas repulsas consul factus esset. praetores inde facti Q. Fuluius Flaccus M. Ualerius Laeuinus P. Manlius iterum M. Ogulnius Gallus L. Caecilius Denter C. Terentius Istra.

Supplicatio extremo anno fuit prodigiorum causa, quod sanguine per biduum pluuisse in area Concordiae satis credebant, nuntiatumque erat haud procul Sicilia insulam, quae non ante fuerat, nouam editam e mari esse. Hannibalem hoc anno Antias Ualerius decessisse est auctor legatis ad eam rem ad Prusiam missis praeter T. Quinctium Flamininum, cuius in ea re celebre est nomen, L. Scipione Asiatico et P. Scipione Nasica.

LIBER XL

[1] Principio insequentis anni consules praetoresque sortiti prouincias sunt. consulibus nulla praeter Ligures, quae decerneretur, erat. iurisdictio urbana M. Ogulnio Gallo, inter peregrinos M. Ualerio euenit; Hispaniarum Q. Fuluius Flacco citerior, P. Manlius ultior, L. Caecilio Dentri Sicilia, C. Terentio Istrae Sardinia. dilectus habere consules iussi. Q. Fabius ex Liguribus scripserat Apuanos ad rebellionem spectare, periculumque esse, ne impetum in agrum Pisanum facerent. et ex Hispaniis citeriorem in armis esse et cum Celtiberis bellari sciebant; in ulteriore, quia diu aeger esset praetor, luxuria et otio solutam disciplinam militarem esse. ob ea novos exercitus conscribi placuit, quattuor legiones in Ligures, uti singulae quina milia et ducenos pedites, trecenos haberent equites, sociorum iisdem Latini nominis quindecim milia peditum addita et octingenti equites. hi duo consulares exercitus essent. scribere praeterea iussi septem milia peditum sociorum ac Latini nominis et quadringentos equites et mittere ad M. Marcellum in Galliam, cui ex consulatu prorogatum imperium erat. in Hispaniam utramque quae ducerentur, quattuor milia peditum ciuium Romanorum et ducenti equites, et sociorum septem milia peditum cum trecentis equitibus scribi iussa. et Q. Fabio Labeoni cum exercitu, quem habebat, in Liguribus prorogatum in annum imperium est.

[2] Ver procellosum eo anno fuit. pridie Parilia, medio ferme die, atrox cum uento tempestas coorta multis sacris profanisque locis stragem fecit, signa aenea in Capitolio deiecit, forem ex aede Lunae, quae in Auentino est, raptam tulit et in posticis parietibus Cereris templi adfixit, signa alia in circo maximo cum columnis quibus superstabant euertit, fastigia aliquot templorum a culminibus abrupta foede dissipauit. itaque in prodigium uersa ea tempestas, procurarique haruspices iusserunt. simul procuratum est quod tripedem mulum Reate natum nuntiatum erat, et a Formiis * * aedem Apollinis Caietae de caelo tactam. ob ea prodigia uiginti hostiis maioribus sacrificatum est et diem unum supplicatio fuit.

Per eos dies ex litteris A. Terentii propraetoris cognitum P. Sempronium in ulteriore prouincia, cum plus annum aeger fuisset, mortuum esse. eo maturius in Hispaniam praetores iussi proficisci.

Legationes deinde transmarinae in senatum introductae sunt, primae Eumenis et Pharnacis regum et Rhodiorum querentium de Sinopensium clade. Philippi quoque legati et Achaeorum et Lacedaemoniorum sub idem tempus uenerunt. iis prius Marcio audito, qui ad res Graeciae Macedoniaeque uisendas missus erat, responsa data sunt. Asiae regibus ac Rhodiis responsum est legatos ad eas res uisendas senatum missurum.

[3] De Philippo auxerat curam Marcius: nam ita fecisse eum, quae senatui placuissent, fatebatur, ut facile appareret non diutius quam necesse esset facturum. neque obscurum erat rebellaturum, omniaque, quae tunc ageret diceretque, eo spectare. iam primum omnem fere multitudinem ciuium ex maritimis ciuitatibus cum familiis suis in Emathiam, quae nunc dicitur, quondam appellata Paeonia est, traduxit, Thracibusque et aliis barbaris urbes tradidit habitandas, fidiora haec genera hominum fore ratus in Romano bello. ingentem ea res fremitum Macedonia tota fecit, relinquentesque penates suos cum coniugibus ac liberis pauci tacitum dolorem continebant; exsecrationesque in agminibus proficiscentium in regem uincente odio metum exaudiebantur. his ferox animus omnes homines, omnia loca temporaque suspecta habebat. postremo negare propalam coepit satis tutum sibi quicquam esse, nisi liberos eorum, quos interfecisset, comprehensos in custodia haberet et tempore alium alio tolleret.

[4] Eam crudelitatem, foedam per se, foediorum unius domus clades fecit. Herodicum principem Thessalorum multis ante annis occiderat; generos quoque eius postea interfecit. in uiduitate relictas filias singulos filios paruos habentes. Theoxena et Archo nomina iis erant mulieribus. Theoxena multis petentibus aspernata nuptias est: Archo Poridi cuidam, longe principi gentis Aenianum, nupsit et apud eum plures enixa partus, paruus admodum relictis omnibus, decessit. Theoxena, ut in suis manibus liberi sororis educarentur, Poridi nupsit; et tamquam omnes ipsa enixa foret, suum sororisque filios in eadem habebat cura. postquam regis edictum de comprehendendis liberis eorum, qui interfecti essent, accepit, ludibrio futuros non regis modo sed custodum etiam libidini rata ad rem atrocem animum adiecit ausaque est dicere se sua manu potius omnes interfecturam quam in potestatem Philippi uenirent. Poris abominatus mentionem tam foedi facinoris Athenas deportaturum eos ad fidos hospites dixit, comitemque ipsum fugae futurum esse. proficiscuntur ab Thessalonica Aeneam ad statum sacrificium, quod Aeneae conditori cum magna caerimonia quotannis faciunt. ibi die per sollemnes epulas consumpto nauem praeparatam a Poride sopitis omnibus de tertia uigilia conscendunt tamquam redituri [in] Thessalonicam: sed traicere in Euboeam erat propositum. ceterum in aduersum uentum nequiquam eos tendentes prope terram lux oppressit, et regii, qui praeerant custodiae portus, lembum armatum ad retrahendam eam nauem miserunt cum graui edicto, ne reuerterentur sine ea. cum iam appropinquabant, Poris quidem ad hortationem remigum nautarumque intentus erat; interdum manus ad caelum tendens deos, ut ferrent opem, orabat. ferox interim femina, ad multo ante praecogitatum reuoluta facinus, uenenum diluit ferrumque promit et posito in conspectu poculo strictisque gladiis ‘mors’ inquit ‘una uindicta est. uiae ad mortem hae sunt: qua quemque animus fert, effugite superbiam regiam. agite, iuuenes mei, primum, qui maiores estis, capite ferrum aut haurite poculum, si segnior mors iuuat.’ et hostes aderant et auctor mortis instabat. alii alio leto absumpti semianimes e naue praecipitantur. ipsa deinde uirum comitem mortis complexa in mare sese deiecit. naue uacua dominis regii potiti sunt.

quaeque tempus agenda differunt: in praesentia placet omni ope in Romanos accendi regem impellique ad consilia belli, ad quae iam sua sponte animum inclinasset. simul ut Demetrius in dies suspectior esset, ex composito sermones ad res Romanorum trahebant. ibi cum alii mores et instituta eorum, alii res gestas, alii speciem ipsius urbis nondum exornatae neque publicis neque priuatis locis, alii singulos principum eluderent, iuuenis incautus et amore nominis Romani et certamine aduersus fratrem omnia tuendo suspectum se patri et opportunum criminibus faciebat. itaque expertem eum pater omnium de rebus Romanis consiliorum habebat: totus in Persea uersus cum eo cogitationes eius rei dies ac noctes agitabat. redierant forte, quos miserat in Bastarnas ad arcessenda auxilia, adduxerantque inde nobiles iuuenes et regii quosdam generis, quorum unus sororem suam in matrimonium Philippi filio pollicebatur; erexeratque consociatio gentis eius animum regis. tum Perseus ‘quid ista prosunt?’ inquit. ‘nequaquam tantum in externis auxiliis est praesidii, quantum periculi <in> fraude domestica. proditorem nolo dicere, certe speculatorem habemus in sinu, cuius, ex quo obses Romae fuit, corpus nobis reddiderunt Romani, animum ipsi habent. omnium paene Macedonum in eum ora conuersa sunt, nec regem se alium habituros aiunt quam quem Romani dedissent’. his per se aegra mens senis stimulabatur, et animo magis quam uultu ea crimina accipiebat.

quae sub Demetrio erat, longe superior fuit. id aegre patiente Perseo laetari prudentes amici eius, eamque rem ipsam dicere praebituram causam criminandi iuuenis.

[7] Conuiuium eo die sodalium, qui simul decurrerant, uterque habuit, cum uocatus ad cenam ab Demetrio Perseus negasset. festo die benigna inuitatio et hilaritas iuuenalis utrosque in uinum traxit. commemoratio ibi certaminis ludicri et iocosa dicta in aduersarios, ita ut ne ipsis quidem ducibus abstineretur, iactabantur. ad has excipiendas uoces speculator ex conuiuiis Persei missus cum incautior obuersaretur, exceptus a iuuenibus forte triclinio egressis male mulcatur. huius rei ignarus Demetrius ‘quin comisatum’ inquit ‘ad fratrem imus et iram eius, si qua ex certamine residet, simplicitate et hilaritate nostra lenimus?’ omnes ire se conclamarunt praeter eos, qui speculatoris ab se pulsati praesentem ultionem metuebant. cum eos quoque Demetrius traheret, ferrum ueste abdiderunt, quo se tutari, si qua uis fieret, possent. nihil occulti esse in intestina discordia potest. utraque domus speculatorum et proditorum plena erat. praecucurrit index ad Persea, ferro succinctos nuntians cum Demetrio quattuor adulescentes uenire. etsi causa apparebat — nam ab iis pulsatum conuiuiam suum audierat — , infamandae rei causa ianuam obserari iubet, et ex parte superiore aedium uersisque in uiam fenestris comisatores, tamquam ad caedem suam uenientes, aditu ianae arcet. Demetrius per uinum, quod excluderetur, paulisper uociferatus in conuiuium redit, totius rei ignarus.

[8] Postero die Perseus, cum primum conueniendi potestas patris fuit, regiam ingressus perturbato uultu in conspectu patris tacitus procul constitit. cui cum pater ‘satin salue?’ et, quaenam ea maestitia esset, interrogaret eum, ‘de lucro tibi’ inquit ‘uiuere me scito. iam non occultis a fratre petimur insidiis; nocte cum armatis domum ad interficiendum me uenit, clausisque foribus parietum praesidio me a furore eius sum tutatus.’ cum pauorem mixtum admiratione patri iniecisset, ‘atqui si aures praeberere potes’ inquit, ‘manifestam rem teneas faciam.’ enimuero se Philippus dicere auditurum, uocarique extemplo Demetrium iussit; et seniores amicos duos, expertes iuuenalium inter fratres certaminum, infrequentes iam in regia, Lysimachum et Onomastum arcessit, quos in consilio haberet. dum

ueniunt amici, solus filio procul stante multa secum animo uolutans inambulauit. postquam uenisse eos nuntiatum est, secessit in partem internam cum duobus amicis et totidem custodibus corporis; filiis, ut ternos inermes secum introducerent, permisit. ibi cum consedisset, 'sedeo' inquit 'miserrimus pater iudex inter duos filios, accusatorem parricidii et reum, aut conficti aut admissi criminis labem apud meos inuenturus. iam pridem quidem hanc procellam imminensem timebam, cum uultus inter uos minime fraternos cernerem, cum uoces quasdam exaudirem. sed interdum spes animum subibat deflagrare iras uestras, purgari suspiciones posse. etiam hostes armis positis foedus icisse, et priuatas multorum simultates finitas: subituram uobis aliquando germanitatis memoriam, puerilis quondam simplicitatis consuetudinisque inter uos, meorum denique praeceptorum, quae uereor ne uana surdis auribus cecinerim. quotiens ego audientibus uobis detestatus exempla discordiarum fraternarum horrendos euentus eorum rettuli, qui se stirpemque suam, domos, regna funditus euertissent. meliora quoque exempla parte altera posui: sociabilem consortionem inter binos Lacedaemoniorum reges, salutarem per multa saecula ipsis patriaeque: eandem ciuitatem, postquam mos sibi cuique rapiendi tyrannidem exortus sit, euersam. iam hos Eumenem Attalumque fratres, ab tam exiguis rebus, prope ut puderet regii nominis, mihi Antiocho, cuilibet regum huius aetatis, nulla re magis quam fraterna unanimitate, regnum aequasse. ne Romanis quidem exemplis abstinui, quae aut uisa aut audita habebam, T. et L. Quinctiorum, qui bellum mecum gesserunt, P. et L. Scipionum, qui Antiochum deuicerunt, patris patrique eorum, quorum perpetuam uitae concordiam mors quoque miscuit. neque uos illorum scelus similisque sceleri euentus detertere a uecordi discordia potuit, neque horum bona mens, bona fortuna ad sanitatem flectere. uiuo et spirante me hereditatem meam ambo et spe et cupiditate improba creuistis. eo usque me uiuere uultis, donec alterius uestrum superstes haud ambiguum regem alterum mea morte faciam. nec fratrem nec patrem potestis pati. nihil cari, nihil sancti est. in omnium uicem regni unius insatiabilis amor successit. agite, conscelerate aures paternas, decernite criminibus, mox ferro decreturi, dicite palam quidquid aut ueri potestis aut libet comminisci: reseratae aures sunt, quae posthac secretis alterius ab altero criminibus claudentur.’ haec furens ira cum dixisset, lacrimae omnibus abortae, et diu maestum silentium tenuit.

[9] Tum Perseus ‘aperienda nimirum nocte ianua fuit et armati comisatores accipiendi praebendumque ferro iugulum, quando non creditur nisi perpetratum facinus, et eadem petitus insidiis audio, quae latro atque insidiator. non nequiquam isti unum Demetrium filium te habere, me subditum et paelice genitum appellant. nam si gradum, si caritatem filii apud te haberem, non in me querentem deprehensas insidias, sed in eum, qui fecisset, saeuire, nec adeo uilis tibi uita esset nostra, ut nec praeterito periculo meo mouereris, neque futuro, si insidiantibus <sit> impune. itaque si mori tacitum oportet, taceamus, precati tantum deos, ut a me coeptum scelus in me finem habeat, nec per meum latus tu petaris: sin autem, quod circumuentis in solitudine natura ipsa subicit, ut hominum, quos numquam uiderint, fidem tamen implorent, mihi quoque ferrum in me strictum cernenti uocem mittere licet, per te patriumque nomen, quod utri nostrum sanctius sit iam pridem sentis, ita me audias precor, tamquam si uoce et comploratione nocturna excitus mihi quiritanti interuenisses, Demetrium cum armatis nocte intempesta in uestibulo meo deprehendisses. quod tum uociferarer in re praesenti pavidus, hoc nunc postero die queror. frater, non comisantium in uicem <animis> iam diu uiuimus inter nos. regnare utique uis. huic spei tuae obstat aetas mea, obstat gentium ius, obstat uetustus Macedoniae mos, obstat uero etiam patris iudicium. haec transcendere nisi per meum sanguinem non potes. omnia moliris et temptas. adhuc seu cura mea seu fortuna restitit parricidio tuo. hesterno die in lustratione et decursu et simulacro ludicro pugnae funestum prope proelium fecisti, nec me aliud a morte uindicauit, quam quod me ac meos uinci passus sum. ab hostili proelio, tamquam fraterno lusu, pertrahere me ad cenam uoluisti. credis me, pater, inter inermes conuiuas cenaturum fuisse, ad quem armati comisatum uenerunt? credis nihil a gladiis nocte periculum fuisse, quem rudibus te inspectante prope occiderunt? quid hoc noctis, quid inimicus ad iratum, quid cum ferro succinctis iuuenibus uenis? conuiuam me tibi committere ausus non sum: comisatorem te cum armatis uenientem recipiam? si aperta ianua fuisset, funus meum parares hoc tempore, pater, quo querentem audis. nihil ego, tamquam accusator, criminose nec dubia argumentis colligendo ago. quid enim? negat uenisse se cum multitudine ad ianuam meam, an ferro succinctos secum fuisse? quos nominauero, arcesse. possunt quidem omnia audere, qui hoc ausi sunt: non tamen audebunt negare. si deprehensos intra limen meum cum ferro ad te deducerem, [rem] pro manifesto haberes: fatentes pro deprehensis habe.

[10] Exsecrare nunc cupiditatem regni, et furias fraternas concita. sed ne sint caecae, pater, execrationes tuae, discerne, dispice insidiatorem et petatum insidiis: noxium incesse caput. qui occisurus fratrem fuit, habeat etiam iratos paternos deos: qui periturus fraterno scelere fuit, perfugium in patris misericordia et iustitia habeat. quo enim alio confugiam, cui non sollemne lustrale exercitus tui, non decursus militum, non domus, non epulae, non nox ad quietem data naturae beneficio mortalibus tuta est? si iero ad fratrem inuitatus, moriendum est; si recepero intra ianuam comisatum fratrem, moriendum est: nec eundo nec manendo insidias euito. quo me conferam? nihil praeter deos, pater, et te colui. non Romanos habeo, ad quos confugiam: perisse expetunt, quia tuis iniuriis doleo, quia tibi ademptas tot urbes, tot gentes, modo Thraciae maritimam oram, indignor. nec me nec te incolumi Macedoniam suam futuram sperant. si me scelus fratris, te senectus absumpserit, aut ne ea quidem exspectata fuerit, regem regnumque Macedoniae sua futura sciunt. si quid extra Macedoniam tibi Romani reliquissent, mihi quoque id relictum crederem receptaculum. at in Macedonibus satis praesidii est. uidisti hesterno die impetum militum in me. quid illis defuit nisi ferrum? quod illis defuit interdium, conuiuiae fratris noctu sumpserunt. quid de magna parte principum loquar, qui in Romanis spem omnem dignitatis et fortunae posuerunt et in eo, qui omnia apud Romanos potest? neque hercule istum mihi tantum, fratri maiori, sed prope est, ut tibi quoque ipsi, regi et patri, praeferant. iste enim est, cuius beneficio poenam tibi senatus remisit, qui nunc te ab armis Romanis protegit, qui tuam senectutem obligatam et obnoxiam adulescentiae suae esse aequum censet. pro isto Romani stant, pro isto omnes urbes tuo imperio liberatae, pro isto Macedones qui pace Romana gaudent. mihi praeter te, pater, quid usquam aut spei aut praesidii est?

[11] Quo spectare illas litteras ad te nunc missas T. Quinctii credis, quibus et bene te consuluisse rebus tuis ait, quod Demetrium Romam miseris, et hortatur, ut iterum et cum pluribus legatis et primoribus eum remittas Macedonum? T. Quinctius nunc est auctor omnium rerum isti et magister. eum sibi te abdicato patre in locum tuum substituit. illic ante omnia clandestina cocta sunt consilia. quaeruntur adiutores consiliis, cum te plures et principes Macedonum cum isto mittere iubet. qui hinc integri et sinceri Romam eunt, Philippum regem se habere credentes, imbuti illinc et infecti Romanis delenimentis redeunt. Demetrius iis unus omnia est, eum iam regem uiuo patre appellant. haec si indignor, audiendum est statim non ab aliis solum sed etiam a te, pater, cupiditatis regni crimen. ego uero, si in medio ponitur, non agnosco. quem enim suo loco moueo, ut ipse in eius locum succedam? unus ante me pater est, et ut diu sit, deos rogo. superstes — et ita sim, si merebor, ut ipse me esse uelit — hereditatem regni, si pater tradet, accipiam. cupit regnum, et quidem scelerate cupit, qui transcendere festinat ordinem aetatis, naturae, moris Macedonum, iuris gentium. obstat frater maior, ad quem iure, uoluntate etiam patris, regnum pertinet. tollatur: non primus regnum fraterna caede petiero. pater senex et [filio] solus [orbatus] de se magis timebit, quam ut filii necem ulciscatur. Romani laetabuntur, probabunt, defendent factum. hae spes incertae, pater, sed non inanes sunt. ita enim se res habet: periculum uitae propellere a me potes, puniendo eos, qui ad me interficiendum ferrum sumpserunt; si facinori eorum successerit, mortem meam idem tu persequi non poteris.’

[12] Postquam dicendi finem Perseus fecit, coniecti eorum, qui aderant, oculi in Demetrium sunt, uelut confestim responsurus esset. deinde diu silentium fuit, cum perfusum fletu appareret omnibus loqui non posse. tandem uicit dolorem ipsa necessitas, cum dicere iuberent, atque ita orsus est. ‘omnia, quae reorum antea fuerant auxilia, pater, praeoccupauit accusator. simulatis lacrimis in alterius perniciem ueras meas lacrimas suspectas tibi fecit. cum ipse, ex quo ab Roma redii, per occulta cum suis colloquia dies noctesque insidiatur, ultro mihi non insidiatoris modo sed latronis manifesti et percussoris speciem induit. periculo suo te exterret, ut innoxio fratri per eundem te maturet perniciem. perfugium sibi nusquam gentium esse ait, ut ego ne apud te quidem spei quicquam reliqui habeam. circumuentum, solum, inopem inuidia gratiae externae, quae obest potius quam prodest, onerat. iam illud quam accusatorie, quod noctis huius crimen miscuit cum cetera insectatione uitae meae, ut et hoc, quod iam quale sit scies, suspectum alio uitae nostrae tenore faceret, et illam uanam criminationem spei uoluntatis consiliorum meorum nocturno hoc ficto et composito argumento fulciret? simul et illud quaesiuit, ut repentina et minime praeparata accusatio uideretur, quippe ex noctis huius metu et tumultu repentino exorta. oportuit autem, Perseu, si proditor ego patris regnique eram, si cum Romanis, si cum aliis inimicis patris inieram consilia, non expectatam fabulam esse noctis huius, sed prodicionis me ante accusatum: si illa, separata hac, uana accusatio erat inuidiamque tuam aduersus me magis quam crimen meum indicatura, hodie quoque eam aut praetermitti aut in aliud tempus differri, ut per se quae<re>retur, utrum ego tibi an tu mihi, nouo quidem et singulari genere odii, insidias fecisses. ego tamen, quantum in hac subita perturbatione potero, separabo ea, quae tu confudisti, et noctis huius insidias aut tuas aut meas detegam. occidendi sui consilium inisse me uideri uult, ut scilicet maiore fratre sublato, cuius iure gentium, more Macedonum, tuo etiam, ut ait, iudicio regnum est futurum, ego minor in eius, quem occidissem, succederem locum. quid ergo illa sibi uult pars altera orationis, qua Romanos a me cultos ait atque eorum fiducia in spem regni me uenisse? nam si et in Romanis tantum momenti credebam esse, ut quem uellent imponderent Macedoniae regem, et meae tantum apud eos gratiae confidebam, quid opus parricidio fuit? an ut cruentum diadema fraterna caede gererem? ut illis ipsis, apud quos aut uera aut certe simulata probitate partam gratiam habeo, si quam forte habeo, execrabilis et inuisus essem? nisi T. Quinctium credis, cuius nutu et consiliis me nunc arguis regi, cum et ipse tali pietate uiuat cum fratre, mihi fraternae caedis fuisse auctorem. idem non Romanorum gratiam solum, sed Macedonum iudicia ac paene omnium deorum hominumque consensum collegit, per quae omnia se mihi parem in certamine non futurum crediderit: idem, tamquam [in] aliis omnibus rebus inferior essem, ad sceleris ultimam spem confugisse me insimulat. uis hanc formulam cognitionis esse, ut, uter timuerit, ne alter dignior uideretur regno, is consilium opprimendi fratris iudicetur cepisse?

[13] Exsequamur tamen quocumque modo conficti ordinem criminis. pluribus modis se petitem criminatus est, et omnes insidiarum vias in unum diem contulit. uolui interdum eum post lustrationem, cum concurrimus, et quidem, si diis placet, lustrationum die occidere; uolui, cum ad cenam inuitavi, ueneno scilicet tollere; uolui, cum comisatum gladiis succincti me secuti sunt, ferro interficere. tempora quidem qualia sint ad parricidium electa, uides: lusus, conuiuii, comisationis. quid? dies qualis? quo lustratus exercitus, quo inter diuisam uictimam, praelatis omnium, qui umquam fuere, Macedoniae regum armis regiis, duo soli tua tegentes latera, pater, praeuecti sumus, et secutum est Macedonum agmen: hoc ego, etiam si quid antea admissem piaculo dignum, lustratus et expiatus sacro, tum cum maxime in hostiam itineri nostro circumdatam intuens, parricidium uenena gladios in comisationem praeparatos uolutabam in animo, ut quibus aliis deinde sacris contaminatam omni scelere mentem expiarem? sed caecus criminandi cupiditate animus, dum omnia suspecta efficere uult, aliud alio confundit. nam si ueneno te inter cenam tollere uolui, quid minus aptum fuit quam pertinaci certamine et concursu iratum te efficere, ut merito, sicut fecisti, inuitatus ad cenam abnueres? cum autem iratus negasses, utrum, ut placarem te, danda opera fuit, ut aliam quaererem occasionem, quoniam semel uenenum paraueram, an ab illo consilio uelut transiliendum ad aliud fuit, ut ferro te, et quidem eo<dem> die, per speciem comisationis occiderem? quo deinde modo, si te metu mortis credebam cenam uitasse meam, non ab eodem metu comisationem quoque uitaturum existimabam?

[14] Non est res, qua erubescam, pater, si die festo inter aequales largiore uino sum usus. tu quoque uelim inquiras, qua laetitia, quo lusu apud me celebratum hesternum conuiuium sit, illo etiam — prauo forsitan — gaudio prouehente, quod in iuuenali armorum certamine pars nostra non inferior fuerat. miseria haec et metus crapulam facile excusserunt; quae si non interuenissent, insidiatores nos sopiti iaceremus. si domum tuam expugnaturus, capta domo dominum interfectorus eram, non temperassem uino in unum diem, non milites meos abstinuisssem? et ne ego me solus nimia simplicitate tuear, ipse quoque minime malus ac suspicax frater ‘nihil aliud scio’, inquit ‘nihil arguo, nisi quod cum ferro comisatum uenerunt.’ si quaeram, unde id ipsum scias, necesse erit te fateri aut speculatorum tuorum plenam domum fuisse meam, aut illos ita aperte sumpsisse ferrum, ut omnes uiderent. et ne quid ipse aut prius inquisisse aut nunc criminose argumentari uideretur, te quaerere ex iis, quos nominasset, iubebat, an ferrum habuissent, ut tamquam in re dubia, cum id quaesisses, quod ipsi fatentur, pro conuictis haberentur. quin tu illud quaeri iubes, num tui occidendi causa ferrum sumpserint, num me auctore et sciente? hoc enim uideri uis, non illud quod fatentur et palam est. ei sui se tuendi causa sumpsisse dicunt. recte an perperam fecerint, ipsi sui facti rationem reddent: meam causam, quae nihil eo facto contingitur, ne miscueris. aut explica, utrum aperte an clam te aggressuri fuerimus. si aperte, cur non omnes ferrum habuimus? cur nemo praeter eos, qui tuum speculatorem pulsauerunt? si clam, quis ordo consilii fuit? conuiuio soluto cum comisator ego discessissem, quattuor substitissent, ut sopitum te adgrederentur? quomodo fefellissent et alieni et mei et maxime suspecti, quia paulo ante in rixa fuerant? quomodo autem trucidato te ipsi euasuri fuerunt? quattuor gladiis domus tua capi et expugnari potuit?

coeperit, qui obses, qui legatus pro patre non inutilis fui, idem hostis illis acerrimus ero. nec hodie ut prosit mihi gratia Romanorum, postulo: ne obsit, tantum deprecor. nec in bello coepit nec ad bellum reseruatur: pacis pignus fui, ad pacem retinendam legatus missus sum: neutra res mihi nec gloriae nec crimini sit. ego si quid impie in te, pater, si quid scelerate in fratrem admisi, nullam deprecor poenam: si innocens sum, ne inuidia conflagrem, cum crimine non possim, deprecor. non hodie me primum frater accusat, sed hodie primum aperte, nullo meo in se merito. si mihi pater suscenseret, te maiorem fratrem pro minore deprecari oportebat, te adulescentiae, te errori ueniam impetrare meo. ubi praesidium esse oportebat, ibi exitium est. e conuiuio et comisatione prope semisomnus raptus sum ad causam parricidii dicendam. sine aduocatis, sine patronis ipse pro me dicere cogor. si pro alio dicendum esset, tempus ad meditandum et componendam orationem sumpsissem, cum quid aliud quam ingenii fama periclitarer? ignarus, quid arcessitus essem, te iratum et iubentem dicere causam, fratrem accusantem audiui. ille diu ante praeparata ac meditata in me oratione est usus: ego id tantum temporis, quo accusatus sum, ad cognoscendum, quid ageretur, habui. utrum momento illo horae accusatorem audirem an defensionem meditarer? attonitus repentino atque inopinato malo, uix, quid obiceretur, intellegere potui, nedum satis sciam, quo modo me tuear. quid mihi spei esset, nisi patrem iudicem haberem? apud quem etiam si caritate a fratre maiore uincor, misericordia certe reus uinci non debeo. ego enim ut me mihi tibiue serues, precor; ille ut me in securitatem suam occidas, postulat. quid eum, cum regnum ei tradideris, facturum credis in me esse, qui iam nunc sanguinem meum sibi indulgeri aequum censet?"

[16] Dicenti haec lacrimae simul spiritum et uocem intercluserunt. Philippus summotis iis paulisper collocutus cum amicis pronuntiauit, non uerbis se nec unius horae disceptatione causam eorum diiudicaturum, sed inquirendo in utriusque uitam <ac> mores, et dicta factaque in magnis paruisque rebus obseruando, ut omnibus appareret noctis proximae crimen facile reuictum, suspectam nimiam cum Romanis Demetrii gratiam esse. haec maxime uiuo Philippo uelut semina iacta sunt Macedonici belli, quod cum Perseo gerendum erat.

Consules ambo in Ligures, quae tum una consularis prouincia erat, proficiscuntur. et quia prospere ibi res gesserunt, supplicatio in unum diem decreta est. Ligurum duo milia fere ad extremum finem prouinciae Galliae, ubi castra Marcellus habebat, uenerunt, uti reciperentur, orantes. Marcellus opperiri eodem loco Liguribus iussis senatum per litteras consuluit. senatus rescribere M. Ogulnium praetorem Marcello iussit uerius fuisse consules, quorum prouincia esset, quam se, quid e re publica esset, decernere; tum quoque non placere nisi per deditionem Ligures recipi, et receptis arma adimi atque eos ad consules mitti senatum aequum censere.

Praetores eodem tempore, P. Manlius in ulteriorem Hispaniam, quam et priore praetura prouinciam obtinuerat, Q. Fuluius Flaccus in citeriorem peruenit, exercitumque <ab> A. Terentio accepit: nam ulterior morte P. Sempronii proconsulis sine imperio fuerat. Fuluium Flaccum oppidum Hispanum Urbicnam nomine oppugnantem Celtiberi adorti sunt. dura ibi proelia aliquot facta, multi Romani milites et uulnerati et interfecti sunt. uicit perseuerantia Fuluius, quod nulla ui abstrahi ab obsidione potuit: Celtiberi fessi proeliis uariis abscesserunt. urbs amoto auxilio eorum intra paucos dies capta et direpta est: praedam militibus praetor concessit. Fuluius hoc oppido capto, Manlius exercitu tantum in unum coacto, qui dissipatus fuerat, nulla alia memorabili gesta re, exercitus in hiberna deduxerunt. haec ea aestate in Hispania gesta. Terentius, qui ex ea prouincia decesserat, ouans urbem iniit. translatum argenti pondo nouem milia trecenta uiginti, auri octoginta pondo et duo, coronae aureae [pondo] sexaginta septem.

[17] Eodem anno inter populum Carthaginiensem et regem Masinissam in re praesenti disceptatores Romani de agro fuerunt. ceperat eum ab Carthaginiensibus pater Masinissae Gala; Galam Syphax inde expulerat, postea in gratiam soceri Hasdrubalis Carthaginiensibus dono dederat; Carthaginienses eo anno Masinissa expulerat. haud minore certamine animorum, quam cum ferro et acie dimicarunt, res acta apud Romanos. Carthaginienses, quod maiorum suorum fuisset, deinde ab Syphace ad se peruenisset, repetebant. Masinissa paterni regni agrum se et recepisce et habere gentium iure aiebat; et causa et possessione superiorem esse; nihil aliud se in ea disceptatione metuere, quam ne pudor Romanorum, dum uereantur, ne quid socio atque amico regi aduersus communes suos atque illius hostes indulsisse uideantur, damno sit. legati possessionis ius non mutarunt, causam integram Romam ad senatum reiecerunt.

In Liguribus nihil postea gestum. recesserant primum in deuios saltus, deinde dimisso exercitu passim in uicos castellaque sua dilapsi sunt. consules quoque dimittere exercitum uoluerunt, ac de ea re patres consuluerunt. alterum ex iis dimisso exercitu ad magistratus in annum creandos uenire Romam iusserunt, alterum cum legionibus suis Pisis hiemare. fama erat Gallos Transalpinos iuuentutem armare, nec, in quam regionem Italiae effusura se multitudo esset, sciebatur. ita inter se consules compararunt, ut Cn. Baebius ad comitia iret, quia M. Baebius frater eius consulatum petebat.

[18] Comitia consulibus rogandis fuere: creati P. Cornelius Lentulus M. Baebius Tamphilus. praetores inde facti duo Q. Fabii, Maximus et Buteo, Ti. Claudius Nero Q. Petilius Spurius M. Pinarius Rusca L. Duronius. his inito magistratu prouinciae ita sorte euenerunt: Ligures consulibus, praetoribus Q. Petilio urbana, Q. Fabio Maximo peregrina, Q. Fabio Buteoni Gallia, Ti. Claudio Neroni Sicilia, M. Pinario Sardinia, L. Duronio Apulia; et Histri adiecti, quod Tarentini Brundisinique nuntiabant maritimos agros infestos transmarinarum nauium latrociniis esse. eadem Massilienses de Ligurum nauibus querebantur. exercitus inde decreti, quattuor legiones consulibus, quae quina milia ducenos Romanos pedites, trecenos haberent equites, et quindecim milia socium ac Latini nominis, octingenti equites. in Hispaniis prorogatum ueteribus praetoribus imperium est cum exercitibus, quos haberent, et in supplementum decreta tria milia ciuium Romanorum, ducenti equites, et socium Latini nominis sex milia peditum, trecenti equites. nec rei naualis cura omissa. duumuiros in eam rem consules creare iussi, per quos naues uiginti deductae naualibus sociis ciuibus Romanis, qui seruitutem seruissent, complerentur, ingenui tantum ut iis praeessent. inter duumuiros ita diuisa tuenda denis nauibus maritima ora, ut promunturium iis Mineruae uelut cardo in medio esset; alter in<de> dextram partem usque ad Massiliam, laeuam alter usque ad Barium tueretur.

[19] Prodigia multa foeda et Romae eo anno uisa et nuntiata peregre. in area Uulcani et Concordiae sanguine pluuit; et pontifices hastas motas nuntiauere, et Lanuuii simulacrum Iunonis Sospitae lacrimasse. pestilentia in agris forisque et conciliabulis et in urbe tanta erat, ut Libitina fune<ribus> uix sufficeret. his prodigiis cladibusque anxii patres decreuerunt, ut et consules, quibus diis uideretur, hostiis maioribus sacrificarent, et decemuiri libros adirent. eorum decreto supplicatio circa omnia puluinaria Romae in diem unum indicta est. iisdem auctoribus et senatus censuit et consules edixerunt, ut per totam Italiam triduum supplicatio et feriae essent. pestilentiae tanta uis erat, ut, cum propter defectionem Corsorum bellumque ab Iliensibus concitatum in Sardinia octo milia peditum ex sociis Latini nominis placuisset scribi et trecentos equites, quos M. Pinarius praetor secum in Sardiniam traiceret, tantum hominum demortuum esse, tantum ubique aegrorum consules renuntiauerint, ut is numerus effici militum non potuerit. quod deerat militum, sumere a Cn. Baebio proconsule, qui Pisis hibernabat, iussus praetor atque inde in Sardiniam traicere.

L. Duronio praetori, cui prouincia Apulia euenerat, adiecta de Bacchanalibus quaestio est, cuius residua quaedam uelut semina ex prioribus malis iam priore anno apparuerant; sed magis inchoatae apud L. Pupium praetorem quaestiones erant quam ad exitum ullum perductae. id persecare nouum praetorem, ne serperet iterum latius, patres iusserunt. et legem de ambitu consules ex auctoritate senatus ad populum tulerunt.

[20] Legationes deinde in senatum introduxerunt, regum primas Eumenis et Ariarathis Cappadocis et Pharnacis Pontici. nec ultra quicquam eis responsum est quam missuros, qui de controuersiis eorum cognoscerent statuerentque. Lacedaemoniorum deinde exsulum et Achaeorum legati introducti sunt, et spes data exsulibus est scripturum senatum Achaeis, ut restituerentur. Achaei de Messene recepta compositisque ibi rebus cum adsensu patrum exposuerunt. et a Philippo rege Macedonum duo legati uenerunt, Philocles et Apelles, nulla super re, quae petenda ab senatu esset, speculatum magis inquisitumque missi de iis, quorum Perseus Demetrium insimulasset sermonum cum Romanis, maxime cum T. Quinctio, aduersus fratrem de regno habitorum. hos tamquam medios nec in alterius fauorem inclinatos miserat rex: erant autem et hi Persei fraudis in fratrem ministri et participes. Demetrius omnium praeterquam fraterno scelere, quod nuper eruperat, ignarus primo neque magnam neque nullam spem habebat patrem sibi placari posse; minus deinde in dies patris animo fidebat, cum obsideri aures a fratre cerneret. itaque circumspiciens dicta factaque sua, ne cuius suspensiones augetet, maxime ab omni mentione et contagione Romanorum abstinebat, ut neque scribi sibi uellet, quia hoc praecipue criminum genere exasperari patris animum sentiebat.

[21] Philippus, simul ne otio miles deterior fieret, simul auertendae suspicionis causa quicquam a se agitari de Romano bello, Stobos Paeoniae exercitu indicto in Maedicam ducere pergit. cupido eum ceperat in uerticem Haemi montis ascendendi, quia uulgatae opinioni crediderat Ponticum simul et Hadriaticum mare et Histrum amnem et Alpes conspici posse: subiecta oculis ea haud parui sibi momenti futura ad cogitationem Romani belli. percunctatus regionis peritos de ascensu Haemi, cum satis inter omnes constaret uiam exercitui nullam esse, paucis et expeditis per difficillimum aditum, ut sermone familiari minorem filium permulceret, quem statuerat non ducere secum, primum quaerit ab eo, cum tanta difficultas itineris proponatur, utrum perseuerandum sit in incepto an abstinendum. si pergat tamen ire, non posse obliuisci se in talibus rebus Antigoni, qui saeua tempestate iactatus, cum in eadem naue secum suos omnes habuisset, praecepisse liberis diceretur, ut et ipsi meminissent et ita posteris proderent, ne quis cum tota gente simul in rebus dubiis periclitari auderet. memorem ergo se praecepti eius duos simul filios non commissurum in aleam eius, qui proponeretur, casus; et quoniam maiorem filium secum duceret, minorem ad subsidia spei et custodiam regni remissurum in Macedoniam esse. non fallebat Demetrium ablegari se, ne adesset consilio, cum in conspectu locorum consultarent, quae proxime itinera ad mare Hadriaticum atque Italiam ducerent, quaeque ratio belli esset futura. sed non solum parendum patri [tutum], sed etiam adsentiendum erat, ne inuitum parere suspicionem faceret. ut tamen iter ei tutum in Macedoniam esset, Didas ex praetoribus regiis unus, qui Paeoniae praeerat, iussus est prosequi eum cum modico praesidio. hunc quoque Perseus, sicut plerosque patris amicorum, ex quo haud cuiquam dubium esse coeperat, ad quem regis animo ita inclinato hereditas regni pertineret, inter coniuratos in fratris perniciem habuit.

in praesentia dat ei mandata, ut per omne obsequium insinuaret se in quam maxime familiarem usum, ut elicere omnia arcana specularique abditos eius sensus posset. ita digreditur Demetrius cum infestioribus, quam si solus iret, praesidiis.

[22] Philippus Maedicam primum, deinde solitudines interiacentes Maedicae atque Haemo transgressus septimis demum castris ad radices montis peruenit. ibi unum moratus diem ad deligendos, quos duceret secum, tertio die iter est ingressus. modicus primo labor in imis collibus fuit. quantum in altitudinem egrediebantur, magis magisque siluestria et pleraque inuia loca excipiebant: peruenere deinde in tam opacum iter, ut prae densitate arborum immissorumque aliorum in alios ramorum perspici caelum uix posset. ut uero iugis appropinquabant, quod rarum in altis locis est, adeo omnia contexta nebula <erant>, ut haud secus quam nocturno itinere impedirentur. tertio demum die ad uerticem peruentum. nihil uulgatae opinioni degressi inde detraxerunt, magis credo, ne uanitas itineris ludibrio esset, quam quod diuersa inter se maria montesque et amnes ex uno loco conspici potuerint. uexati omnes, et ante alios rex ipse, quo grauior aetate erat, difficultate uiae est. duabus aris ibi Ioui et Soli sacratis cum immolasset, qua triduo ascenderat, biduo est degressus, frigora nocturna maxime metuens, quae caniculae ortu similia brumalibus erant. multis per eos dies difficultatibus conflictatus nihilo laetiora in castris inuenit, ubi summa penuria erat, ut in regione, quam ab omni parte solitudines clauderent. itaque unum tantum moratus diem, quietis eorum causa, quos habuerat secum, itinere inde simili fugae in Dentheletos transcurrit. socii erant, sed propter inopiam haud secus quam hostium fines Macedones populati sunt: rapiendo enim passim uillas primum, dein quosdam etiam uicos euastarunt, non sine magno pudore regis, cum sociorum uoces nequiquam deos sociales nomenque suum implorantes audiret. frumento inde sublato in Maedicam regressus, urbem, quam Petram appellant, oppugnare est adortus. ipse a campestri aditu castra posuit, Perseum filium cum modica manu circummisit, ut a superioribus locis urbem adgrederetur. oppidani, cum terror undique instaret, obsidibus datis in praesentia dediderunt sese: iidem, postquam exercitus recessit, obliti obsidum relicta urbe in loca munita et montes refugerunt. Philippus omni genere laboris sine ullo effectu fatigatis militibus et fraude Didae praetoris auctis in filium suspicionibus in Macedoniam rediit.

[23] Missus hic comes, ut ante dictum est, cum simplicitatem iuuenis incauti et suis haud immerito suscensentis adsentando indignandoque et ipse uicem eius captaret, in omnia ultro suam offerens operam, fide data arcana eius elicuit. fugam ad Romanos Demetrius meditabatur; cui consilio adiutor deum beneficio oblatus uidebatur Paeoniae praetor, per cuius prouinciam spem ceperat elabi tuto posse. hoc consilium extemplo et fratri proditur et auctore eo indicatur patri. litterae primum ad obsidentem Petram adlatae sunt. inde Herodorus — princeps hic amicorum Demetrii erat — in custodiam est coniectus et Demetrius dissimulanter adseruari iussus. haec super cetera tristem aduentum in Macedoniam regi fecerunt. mouebant eum et praesentia crimina: expectandos tamen, quos ad exploranda omnia Romam miserat, censebat. his anxius curis cum aliquot menses egisset, tandem legati, iam ante praemeditati in Macedonia, quae ab Roma renuntiarent, uenerunt; qui super cetera scelera falsas etiam litteras, signo adulterino T. Quintii signatas, reddiderunt regi. deprecatio in litteris erat, si quid adulescens cupiditate regni prolapsus secum egisset: nihil eum aduersus suorum quemquam facturum neque eum se esse, qui ullius impii consilii auctor futurus uideri possit. hae litterae fidem Persei criminibus fecerunt. itaque Herodorus extemplo diu excruciatum sine indicio rei ullius in tormentis moritur.

[24] Demetrium iterum ad patrem accusauit Perseus. fuga per Paeoniam praeparata arguebatur et corrupti quidam, ut comites itineris essent; maxime falsae litterae T. Quintii urgebant. nihil tamen palam grauius pronuntiatum de eo est, ut dolo potius interficeretur, nec id cura ipsius, sed ne poena eius consilia aduersus Romanos nudaret. ab Thessalonice Demetriadem ipsi cum iter esset, Astraeum Paeoniae Demetrium mittit cum eodem comite Dida, Perseum Amphipolin ad obsides Thracum accipiendos. digredienti ab se Didae mandata dedisse dicitur de filio occidendo. sacrificium ab Dida seu institutum seu simulatum est, ad quod celebrandum inuitatus Demetrius ab Astraeo Heracleam uenit. in ea cena dicitur uenenum datum. poculo epoto extemplo sensit, et mox coortis doloribus, relicto conuiuio cum in cubiculum recepisset sese, crudelitatem patris conquerens, parricidium fratris ac Didae scelus incusans torquebatur. intromissi deinde Thyrsis quidam Stuberraeus et Beroeaeus Alexander iniectis tapetibus in caput faucesque spiritum intercluserunt. ita innoxius adulescens, cum in eo ne simplici quidem genere mortis contenti inimici fuissent, interficitur.

[25] Dum haec in Macedonia geruntur, L. Aemilius Paulus, prorogato ex consulatu imperio, principio ueris in Ligures Ingaunos <exercitum> introduxit. ubi primum in hostium finibus castra posuit, legati ad eum per speciem pacis petendae speculatum uenerunt. neganti Paulo nisi cum deditis pacisci se pacem, non tam id recusabant, quam tempore aiebant opus esse, ut generi agresti hominum persuaderetur. ad hoc decem dierum indutiae cum darentur, petierunt deinde, ne trans montes proximos castris pabulatum lignatumque milites irent: culta ea loca suorum finium esse. id ubi impetrare, post eos ipsos montes, unde auerterant hostem, exercitu omni coacto, repente multitudine ingenti castra Romanorum oppugnare simul omnibus portis adgressi sunt. summa ui totum diem oppugnarunt, ita ut ne efferendi quidem signa Romanis spatium nec ad explicandam aciem locus esset. conferti in portis obstando magis quam pugnando castra tutabantur. sub occasum solis cum recessissent hostes, duos equites ad Cn. Baebium <pro>consulem cum litteris Pisas mittit, ut obsesso per indutias sibi quam primum subsidio ueniret. Baebius exercitum M. Pinario praetori eunti in Sardiniam tradiderat: ceterum et senatum litteris certiores fecit obsideri a Liguribus L. Aemilium, et M. Claudio Marcello, cuius proxima inde prouincia erat, scripsit, ut, si uideretur ei, exercitum e Gallia traduceret in Ligures et L. Aemilium liberaret obsidione. haec sera futura auxilia erant. Ligures ad castra postero die redeunt. Aemilius cum et uenturos scisset et educere in aciem potuisset, intra uallum suos tenuit, ut extraheret rem in id tempus, quo Baebius cum exercitu uenire a Pisis posset.

[26] Romae magnam trepidationem litterae Baebii fecerunt, eo maiorem, quod paucos post dies Marcellus, tradito exercitu Fabio Romam cum uenisset, spem ademit eum, qui in Gallia esset, exercitum in Ligures posse traduci, quia bellum cum Histris esset prohibentibus coloniam Aquileiam deduci: eo profectum Fabium, neque inde regredi bello inchoato posse. una, et ea ipsa tardior quam tempus postulabat, subsidii spes erat, si consules maturassent in prouinciam ire. id ut facerent, pro se quisque patrum uociferari. consules nisi confecto dilectu negare se ituros, nec suam segnitiam sed uim morbi in causa esse, quo serius perficeretur. non tamen potuerunt sustinere consensum senatus, quin paludati exirent et militibus, quos conscriptos haberent, diem edicerent, quo Pisas conuenirent. permissum, ut, qua irent, protinus subitarios milites scriberent ducerentque secum. et praetoribus Q. Petilio et Q. Fabio imperatum est, ut Petilius duas legiones ciuium Romanorum tumultuarias scriberet et omnes minores quinquaginta annis sacramento rogaret, Fabio, ut sociis Latini nominis quindecim milia peditum, octingentos equites imperaret. duumuii nauales creati C. Matienus et C. Lucretius, nauesque iis ornatae sunt, Matienoque, cuius ad Gallicum sinum prouincia erat, imperatum est, ut classem primo quoque tempore duceret in Ligurum oram, si quo usui esse L. Aemilio atque exercitui eius posset.

[27] Aemilius, postquam nihil usquam auxilii ostendebatur, interceptos credens equites, non ultra differendum ratus, quin per se fortunam temptaret, priusquam hostes uenirent, qui segnius socordiusque oppugnabant, ad quattuor portas exercitum instruxit, ut signo dato simul ex omnibus partibus eruptionem facerent. quattuor extraordinariis cohortibus duas adiunxit praeposito M. Ualerio legato, erumpere praetoria porta iussit. ad dexteram principalem hastatos legionis primae instruxit; principes ex eadem legione in subsidiis posuit: M. Seruilius et L. Sulpicius tribuni militum his praepositi. tertia legio aduersus sinistram principalem portam instructa est. id tantum mutatum: principes primi et hastati in subsidiis locati; Sex. Iulius Caesar et L. Aurelius Cotta tribuni militum huic legioni praepositi sunt. Q. Fuluius Flaccus legatus cum dextera ala ad quaestoriam portam positus; duae cohortes et triarii duarum legionum in praesidio castrorum manere iussi. omnes portas contionabundus ipse imperator circumiit, et, quibuscumque irritamentis poterat, iras militum acuebat, nunc fraudem hostium incusans, qui pace petita, indutiis datis, per ipsum indutiarum tempus contra ius gentium ad castra oppugnanda uenissent: nunc, quantus pudor esset, edocens ab Liguribus, latronibus uerius quam hostibus iustis, Romanum exercitum obsideri. 'quo ore quisquam uestrum, si hinc alieno praesidio, non uestra uirtute euaseritis, occurret, non dico eis militibus, qui Hannibalem, qui Philippum, qui Antiochum, maximos aetatis nostrae reges ducesque, uicerunt, sed iis, qui hos ipsos Ligures aliquotiens pecorum modo fugientes per saltus inuios consecrati ceciderunt? quod Hispani, quod Galli, quod Macedones Poeniae non audeant, Ligustinus hostis uallum Romanum subit, obsidet ultro et oppugnat, quem scrutantes ante deuos saltus abditum et latentem uix inueniebamus.’ ad haec consentiens reddebatur militum clamor, nullam militum culpam esse, quibus nemo ad erumpendum signum dedisset, daret signum: intellecturum eosdem, qui antea fuerint, et Romanos et Ligures esse.

[28] Bina cis montes castra Ligurum erant. ex iis primis diebus sole orto pariter omnes compositi et instructi procedebant; tum nisi exsatiati cibo uinoque arma non capiebant, dispersi inordinati exhibant, ut quibus prope certum esset hostes extra uallum non elaturos signa. aduersus ita incompositos eos uenientes clamore pariter omnium, qui in castris erant, calorum quoque et lixarum sublato simul omnibus portis Romani eruperunt. Liguribus adeo improuisa res fuit, ut perinde ac si insidiis circumuenti forent trepidarent. exiguum temporis aliqua forma pugnae fuit: fuga deinde effusa et fugientium passim caedes erat, equitibus dato signo, ut conscenderent equos nec effugere quemquam sinerent. in castra omnes trepida fuga compulsi sunt, deinde ipsis exuti castris. supra quindecim milia Ligurum eo die occisa, capti duo milia et trecenti. triduo post Ligurum Ingaunorum nomen omne obsidibus datis in dicionem uenit. gubernatores nautaeque conquisiti, qui <in> praedatoriis fuissent nauibus, atque omnes in custodiam coniecti. et a C. Matieno duumuiro naues eius generis in Ligustina ora triginta duae captae sunt. haec qui nuntiarent litterasque ad senatum ferrent, L. Aurelius Cotta C. Sulpicius Gallus Romam missi, simulque peterent, ut L. Aemilio confecta prouincia decedere et deducere secum milites liceret atque dimittere. utrumque permissum ab senatu et supplicatio ad omnia puluina per triduum decreta, iussique praetores Petilius urbanas dimittere legiones, Fabius sociis atque nomini Latino remittere dilectum; et uti praetor urbanus consulibus scriberet senatum aequum censere subitarios milites, tumultus causa conscriptos, primo quoque tempore dimitti.

[29] Colonia Grauiscae eo anno deducta est in agrum Etruscum, de Tarquiniensibus quondam captum. quina iugera agri data; tresuiri deduxerunt C. Calpurnius Piso P. Claudius Pulcher C. Terentius Istra. siccitate et inopia frugum insignis annus fuit. sex menses numquam pluuisse memoriae proditum. eodem anno in agro L. Petilii scribae sub Ianiculo, dum cultores [agri] altius moliuntur terram, duae lapideae arcae, octonos ferme pedes longae, quaternos latae, inuentae sunt, operculis plumbo deuinctis. litteris Latinis Graecisque utraque arca inscripta erat, in altera Numam Pompilium Pomponis filium, regem Romanorum, sepultum esse, in altera libros Numae Pompilii inesse. eas arcas cum ex amicorum sententia dominus aperuisset, quae titulum sepulti regis habuerat, inanis inuenta, sine uestigio ullo corporis humani aut ullius rei, per tabem tot annorum omnibus absumptis. in altera duo fascēs candelis inuoluti septenos habuere libros, non integros modo sed recentissima specie. septem Latini de iure pontificum erant, septem Graeci de disciplina sapientiae, quae illius aetatis esse potuit. adicit Antias Ualerius Pythagoricos fuisse, uulgatae opinioni, qua creditur Pythagorae auditorem fuisse Numam, mendacio probabili accommodata fide. primo ab amicis, qui in re praesenti fuerunt, libri lecti; mox pluribus legentibus cum uulgarentur, Q. Petilius praetor urbanus studiosus legendi libros eos a L. Petilio sumpsit: et erat familiaris usus, quod scribam eum quaestor Q. Petilius in decuriam legerat. lectis rerum summis cum animaduertisset pleraque dissoluendarum religionum esse, L. Petilio dixit sese libros eos in ignem coniecturum esse; priusquam id faceret, se ei permittere, uti, si quod seu ius seu auxilium se habere ad eos libros repetendos existimaret, experiretur: <id> integra sua gratia eum facturum. scriba tribunos plebis adit, ab tribunis ad senatum res est reiecta. praetor se iusiurandum dare paratum esse aiebat, libros eos legi seruarique non oportere. senatus censuit satis habendum quod praetor iusiurandum polliceretur; libros primo quoque tempore in comitio cremandos esse; pretium pro libris, quantum Q. Petilio praetori maioriq̃ue parti tribunorum plebis uideretur, domino soluendum esse. id scriba non accepit. libri in comitio igne a uictimariis facto in conspectu populi cremati sunt.

[30] Magnum bellum ea aestate coortum in Hispania citeriore. ad

quinque et triginta milia hominum, quantum numquam ferme antea, Celtiberi comparauerant. Q. Fuluius Flaccus eam obtinebat prouinciam. is quia armare iuuentutem Celtiberos audierat, et ipse quanta poterat a sociis auxilia contraxerat, sed nequaquam numero militum hostem aequabat. principio ueris exercitum in Carpetaniam duxit, et castra locauit ad oppidum Aeburam, modico praesidio in urbe posito. paucis post diebus Celtiberi milia duo fere inde sub colle posuerunt castra. quos ubi adesse praetor Romanus sensit, M. Fuluium fratrem cum duabus turmis sociorum equitum ad castra hostium speculatum misit, quam proxime succedere ad uallum iussum, ut uiseret, quanta essent; pugna abstineret, reciperetque sese, si hostium equitatum exeuntem uidisset. ita ut praeceptum erat fecit. per dies aliquot nihil ultra motum, quam ut hae duae turmae ostenderentur, deinde subducerentur, ubi equitatus hostium castris procucurrisset. postremo Celtiberi, simul omnibus copiis peditum equitumque castris egressi, acie directa medio fere spatio inter bina castra constiterunt. campus erat planus omnis et aptus pugnae. ibi stetere Hispani hostes expectantes. Romanus suos intra uallum continuit. per quadriduum continuum et illi eodem loco aciem instructam tenuerunt <et> ab Romanis nihil motum. inde quieuerunt in castris Celtiberi, quia pugnae copia non fiebat: equites tantum in stationem egrediebantur, ut parati essent, si quid ab hoste moueretur. pone castra utrique pabulatum et lignatum ibant, neutri alteros impediētes.

aberant. itaque Flaccus ubi satis abstractos eos a praesidio castrorum suorum ratus est, intra uallum exercitu instructo tribus partibus simul erumpit, clamore non tantum ad ardorem pugnae excitandum sublato, sed etiam ut, qui in montibus erant, exaudirent. nec morati sunt, quin decurrerent, sicut imperatum erat, ad castra; ubi quinque milium armatorum non amplius relictum erat praesidium. quos cum et paucitas sua et multitudo hostium et improuisa res terruisset, prope sine certamine capiuntur castra. captis, quae pars maxime  pugnantis conspici poterat, iniecit Acilius ignem.

[32] Postremi Celtiberorum qui in acie erant, primi flammam conspexere, deinde per totam aciem uulgatum est castra amissa esse et tum cum maxime ardere. unde illis terror, inde Romanis animus creuit. iam clamor suorum uincientium accidebat, iam ardentia hostium castra apparebant. Celtiberi parumper incertis animis fluctuati sunt: ceterum postquam receptus pulsus nullus erat nec usquam nisi in certamine spes, pertinacius de integro capessunt pugnam. acie media urgebantur acriter a quinta legione: aduersus laeuum cornu, in quo sui generis prouincialia auxilia instruxisse Romanos cernebant, cum maiore fiducia intulerunt signa. iam prope erat, ut sinistrum cornu pelleretur Romanis, ni septima legio successisset. simul ab oppido Aebura, qui in praesidio relictis erant, in medio ardore pugnae aduenerunt, et Acilius ab tergo erat. diu in medio caesi Celtiberi: qui supererant in omnes passim partes capessunt fugam. equites bipartito in eos emissi magnam caedem edidere. ad uiginti tria milia hostium eo die occisa, capta quattuor milia septingenti cum equis plus quingentis, et signa militaria octoginta octo. magna uictoria, non tamen incruenta fuit: Romani milites de duabus legionibus paulo plus ducenti, socium Latini nominis octingenti triginta, externorum auxilium ferme duo milia et quadringenti ceciderunt. praetor in castra uictorem exercitum reduxit, Acilius manere in captis ab se castris iussus. postero die spolia de hostibus lecta, et pro contione donati, quorum uirtus insignis fuerat.

[33] Sauciis deinde in oppidum Aeburam deuectis per Carpetaniam ad Contrebian ductae legiones. ea urbs circumsessa cum a Celtiberis auxilia arcessisset, morantibus iis, non quia ipsi cunctati sunt, sed quia profectos domo inexplicabiles continuis imbribus uiae et inflati

amnes tenebant, desperato auxilio suorum in deditionem uenit. Flaccus quoque tempestatibus foedis coactus exercitum omnem in urbem introduxit. Celtiberi, qui profecti erant [a domo] deditionis ignari, cum tandem superatis, ubi primum remiserunt imbres, omnibus Contrebiis uenissent, postquam nulla castra extra moenia uiderunt, aut in alteram partem translata rati aut recessisse hostes, per negligentiam effusi ad oppidum accesserunt. in eos duabus portis Romani eruptionem fecerunt et incompósitos adorti fuderunt. quae res ad resistendum eos et ad capessendam pugnam impediit, quod non uno agmine nec ad signa frequentes ueniebant, eadem magnae parti ad fugam salutis fuit: sparsi enim toto passim campo se diffuderunt, nec usquam confertos eos hostis circumuenit. tamen ad duodecim milia sunt caesa, capta plus quinque milia hominum, equi quadringenti, signa militaria sexaginta duo. qui palati et fuga domum se recipiebant, alterum agmen uenientium Celtiberorum deditionem Contrebiae et suam cladem narrando auerterunt. extemplo in uicos castellaque sua omnes dilapsi. Flaccus a Contrebia profectus per Celtiberiam populabundus ducit legiones multa castella expugnando, donec maxima pars Celtiberorum in deditionem uenit.

[34] Haec in citeriore Hispania eo anno gesta. in ulteriore Manlius praetor secunda aliquot proelia cum Lusitanis fecit.

Aquileia colonia Latina eodem anno in agrum Gallorum est deducta. tria milia peditum quinquagena iugera, centuriones centena, centena quadragena equites acceperunt. tresuiri deduxerunt P. Cornelius Scipio Nasica C. Flaminius L. Manlius Acidinus. aedes duae eo anno dedicatae sunt, una Ueneris Erycinae ad portam Collinam: dedicauit L. Porcius L. f. Licinus duumuir, uota erat a consule L. Porcio Ligustino bello, altera in foro holitorio Pietatis. eam aedem dedicauit M'. Acilius Glabrio duumuir; statuamque auratam, quae prima omnium in Italia est statuta aurata, patris Glabrionis posuit. is erat, qui ipse eam aedem uouerat, quo die cum rege Antiocho ad Thermopylas depugnasset, locaueratque idem ex senatus consulto. per eosdem dies, quibus aedes hae dedicatae sunt, L. Aemilius Paulus proconsul ex Liguribus Ingaunis triumphauit. transtulit coronas aureas quinque et uiginti, nec praeterea quicquam auri argentique in eo triumpho latum. captiui multi principes Ligurum antea currum ducti. aeris trecenos militibus diuisit. auxerunt eius triumphi famam legati Ligurum pacem perpetuam orantes: ita in animum induxisse Ligurum gentem, nulla umquam arma nisi imperata a populo Romano sumere. responsum a Q. Fabio praetore est Liguribus iussu senatus orationem eam non nouam Liguribus esse: mens uero ut noua et orationi conueniens esset, ipsorum id plurimum referre. ad consules irent, et, quae ab iis imperata essent, facerent. nulli alii quam consulibus senatum crediturum esse sincera fide in pace Ligures esse. pax in Liguribus fuit. in Corsica pugnatum cum Corsis: ad duo milia eorum M. Pinarius praetor in acie occidit. qua clade compulsi obsides dederunt et cerae centum milia pondo. inde in Sardiniam exercitus ductus, et cum Iliensibus, gente ne nunc quidem omni parte pacata, secunda proelia facta. Carthaginiensibus eodem anno centum obsides redditi, pacemque [cum] iis populus Romanus non ab se tantum sed ab rege etiam Masinissa praestitit, qui cum praesidio armato agrum, qui in controuersia erat, obtinebat.

[35] Otiosam prouinciam consules habuerunt. M. Baebius comitiorum causa Romam reuocatus consules creauit A. Postumium Albinum Luscum et C. Calpurnium Pisonem. praetores exinde facti Ti. Sempronius Gracchus L. Postumius Albinus P. Cornelius Mammula, Ti. Minucius Molliculus A. Hostilius Mancinus C. Maenius. ii omnes magistratum idibus Martiis inierunt.

Principio eius anni, quo A. Postumius Albinus et C. Calpurnius Piso consules fuerunt, ab A. Postumio consule in senatum introducti, qui ex Hispania citeriore uenerant a Q. <Fuluio> Flacco, L. Minucius legatus et duo tribuni militum, T. Maenius et L. Terentius Massaliota. hi cum duo secunda proelia, deditionem Celtiberiae, confectam prouinciam nuntiassent, nec stipendio, quod mitti soleret, nec frumento portato ad exercitum in eum annum opus esse, petierunt ab senatu primum, ut ob res prospere gestas diis immortalibus honos haberetur, deinde ut Q. Fuluius decedenti de prouincia deportare inde exercitum, cuius forti opera et ipse et multi ante eum praetores usi essent, liceret. quod fieri, praeterquam quod ita deberet, etiam prope necessarium esse: ita enim obstinatos esse milites, ut non ultra retineri posse in prouincia uiderentur, iniussuque abituri inde essent, si non dimitterentur, aut in perniciosam, si quis impense retineret, seditionem exarsuri. consulibus ambobus prouinciam Ligures esse senatus iussit. praetores inde sortiti sunt: A.

Hostilio urbana, Ti. Minucio peregrina obuenerit, P. Cornelio Sicilia, C. Maenio Sardinia. Hispanias sortiti L. Postumius ulteriorem, Ti. Sempronius citeriorem. is quia successurus Q. Fuluius erat, ne uetere exercitu prouincia spoliaretur, 'quaero' inquit 'de te, L. Minuci, cum confectam prouinciam nunties, existimesne Celtiberos perpetuo in fide mansuros, ita ut sine exercitu ea prouincia obtineri possit. si neque de fide barbarorum quicquam recipere aut adfirmare nobis potes, et habendum illic utique exercitum censes, utrum tandem auctor senatui sis supplementum in Hispaniam mittendi, ut ii modo, quibus emerita stipendia sint, milites dimittantur, ueteribus militibus tirones immisceantur, an deductis de prouincia ueteribus legionibus nouas conscribendi et mittendi, cum contemptum tirocinium etiam mitiores barbaros excitare ad rebellandum possit? dictu quam re facilius est prouinciam ingenio ferocem, rebellatricem confecisse. paucae ciuitates, ut quidem ego audio, quas uicina maxime hiberna premebant, in ius dicionemque uenerunt; ultiores in armis sunt. quae cum ita sint, ego iam hinc praedico, patres conscripti, me exercitu eo, qui nunc est, rem publicam administraturum: si deducat secum Flaccus legiones, loca pacata me ad hibernacula lecturum neque nouum militem ferocissimo hosti obiecturum.'

inferrent, mandatum est. P. Cornelio et M. Baebio prorogatum imperium iussique prouincias obtinere, donec consules uenissent; tum imperatum, ut dimisso, quem haberent, exercitu reuerterentur Romam. de Ti. Sempronii deinde exercitu actum est. nouam legionem ei quinque milium et ducentorum peditum cum equitibus quadringentis consules scribere iussi, et mille praeterea peditum Romanorum, quinquaginta equites, et sociis nominis Latini imperare septem milia peditum, trecentos equites. cum hoc exercitu placuit ire in Hispaniam citeriorem Ti. Sempronium. Q. Fuluius permissum, ut, qui milites ante Sp. Postumium Q. Marcium consules ciues Romani sociiue in Hispaniam transportati essent, et praeterea supplemento adducto, quo amplius <in> duabus legionibus quam decem milia et quadringenti pedites, sescenti equites essent, et socium Latini nominis duodecim milia, sescenti equites, quorum forti opera duobus aduersus Celtiberos proeliis usus Q. Fuluius esset, eos, si uideretur, secum deportaret. et supplicationes decretae, quod is prospere rem publicam gessisset. et ceteri praetores in prouincias missi. Q. Fabio Buteoni prorogatum in Gallia imperium est. octo legiones praeter exercitum ueterem, qui in Liguribus in spe propinqua missionis erat, eo anno esse placuit. et is ipse exercitus aegre explebatur propter pestilentiam, quae tertium iam annum urbem Romanam atque Italiam uastabat.

[37] Praetor Ti. Minucius et haud ita multo post consul C. Calpurnius moritur, multique alii omnium ordinum illustres uiri. postremo prodigii loco ea clades haberi coepta est. C. Seruilius pontifex maximus piacula irae deum conquirere iussus, decemuiri libros inspicere, consul Apollini Aesculapio Saluti dona uouere et dare signa inaurata: quae uouit deditque. decemuiri supplicationem in biduum ualetudinis causa in urbe et per omnia fora conciliabulaque edixerunt: maiores duodecim annis omnes coronati et lauream in manu tenentes supplicauerunt. fraudis quoque humanae insinuauerat suspicio animis; et ueneficii quaestio ex senatus consulto, quod in urbe propiusue urbem decem milibus passuum esset commissum, C. Claudio praetori, qui in locum Ti. Minucii erat suffectus, ultra decimum lapidem per fora conciliabulaque C. Maenio, priusquam in Sardiniam prouinciam traiceret, decreta. suspecta consulis erat mors maxime. necatus a Quarta Hostilia uxore dicebatur. ut quidem filius eius Q. Fuluius Flaccus in locum uitrici consul est declaratus, aliquanto magis infamis mors Pisonis coepit esse; et testes exsistebant, qui post declaratos consules Albinum et Pisonem, quibus comitiis Flaccus tulerat repulsam, et exprobratum ei a matre dicerent, quod iam ei tertium negatus consulatus petenti esset, et adiecisse, pararet se ad petendum: intra duos menses effecturam, ut consul fieret. inter multa alia testimonia ad causam pertinentia haec quoque uox, nimis uero euentu comprobata, ualuit, cur Hostilia damnaretur. ueris principio huius, dum consules novos dilectus Romae tenet, mors deinde alterius et creandi comitia consulis in locum eius omnia tardiora fecerunt, interim P. Cornelius et M. Baebius, qui in consulatu nihil memorabile gesserant, in Apuanos Ligures exercitum induxerunt.

[38] Ligures, qui ante aduentum in prouinciam consulum non exspectassent bellum, improviso oppressi ad duodecim milia hominum dederunt se. eos consulto per litteras prius senatu deducere ex montibus in agros campestres procul ab domo, ne reditus spes esset, Cornelius et Baebius statuerunt, nullum alium ante finem rati fore Ligustini belli.

Ager publicus populi Romani erat in Samnitibus, qui Taurasinorum <fuerat. eo cum> traducere Ligures Apuanos uellent, edixerunt, <ut> Ligures Apuani de montibus descenderent cum liberis coniugibusque, sua omnia secum portarent. Ligures saepe per legatos deprecati, ne penates, sedem in qua geniti essent, sepulcra maiorum cogerentur relinquere, arma obsides pollicebantur. postquam nihil impetrabant neque uires ad bellandum erant, edicto paruerunt. traducti sunt publico sumptu ad quadraginta milia liberorum capitum cum feminis puerisque. argenti data centum et quinquaginta milia, unde in nouas sedes compararent, quae opus essent. agro diuidendo dandoque iidem, qui traduxerant, Cornelius et Baebius praepositi. postulantibus tamen ipsis quinqueuiri ab senatu dati, quorum ex consilio agerent. transacta re cum ueterem exercitum Romam deduxissent, triumphus ab senatu est decretus. hi omnium primi nullo bello gesto triumpharunt. tantum hostiae ductae ante currum, quia nec quod ferretur neque quod duceretur captum neque quod militibus daretur, quicquam in triumphis eorum fuerat.

[39] Eodem anno in Hispania Fuluius Flaccus proconsul, quia successor in prouinciam tardius ueniebat, educto exercitu ex hibernis ulteriorem Celtiberiae agrum, unde ad deditionem non uenerant, institit uastare. qua re irritauit magis quam conterruit animos barbarorum; et clam comparatis copiis saltum Manlianum, per quem transiturum exercitum Romanum satis sciebant, obsederunt. in Hispaniam ulteriorem eunti L. Postumio Albino collegae Gracchus mandauerat, ut Q. Fuluium certiores faceret, Tarraconem exercitum adduceret: ibi dimittere ueteranos supplementaque distribuere et ordinare omnem exercitum sese uelle. dies quoque, et ea propinqua, edita Flacco est, qua successor esset uenturus. haec noua adlata res, omissis quae agere instituerat, Flaccum raptim deducere exercitum ex Celtiberia cum coegisset, barbari causae ignari, suam defectionem et clam comparata arma sensisse eum et pertimuisse rati, eo ferocius saltum insederunt. ubi eum saltum prima luce agmen Romanum intrauit, repente ex duabus partibus simul exorti hostes Romanos inuaserunt. quod ubi uidit Flaccus, primos tumultus in agmine per centuriones stare omnes, suo quemque loco, et arma expedire iubendo sedauit, et sarcinis iumentisque in unum locum coactis copias omnes partim ipse partim per legatos tribunosque militum, ut tempus, ut locus postulabat, sine ulla trepidatione instruxit, cum bis deditis rem esse admonens, scelus et perfidiam illis, non uirtutem nec animum accessisse, reditum ignobilem in patriam clarum ac memorabilem eos sibi fecisse: cruentos ex recenti caede hostium gladios et manantia sanguine spolia Romam ad triumphum delaturos. plura dici tempus non patiebatur: inuehebant se hostes, et in partibus extremis iam pugnabatur. deinde acies concurrerunt.

[40] Atrox ubique proelium, sed uaria fortuna erat. egregie legiones, nec segnius duae alae pugnabant: externa auxilia ab simili armatura, meliore aliquantum militum genere urgebantur, nec locum tueri poterant. Celtiberi ubi ordinata acie et signis collatis se non esse pares legionibus senserunt, cuneo impressionem fecerunt, quo tantum ualent genere pugnae, ut quamcumque [in] partem perculere impetu suo, sustineri nequeant. tunc quoque turbatae legiones sunt, prope interrupta acies. quam trepidationem ubi Flaccus conspexit, equo aduehitur ad legionarios equites, et ‘ni quid auxilii in uobis est, actum iam de hoc exercitu erit.’ cum undique acclamassent, quin ederet, quid fieri uellet: non segniter imperium exsecuturos;

‘duplicate turmas’ inquit, ‘duarum legionum equites, et permittite equos in cuneum hostium, quo nostros urgent. id cum maiore ui [equorum] facietis, si effrenatos in eos equos immittitis; quod saepe Romanos equites cum magna laude fecisse sua memoriae proditum est.’ dicto paruerunt detractisque frenis bis ultro citroque cum magna strage hostium, infractis omnibus hastis, transcurrerunt. dissipato cuneo, in quo omnis spes fuerat, Celtiberi trepidare et prope ommissa pugna locum fugae circumspicere. et alarii equites postquam Romanorum equitum tam memorabile facinus uidere, et ipsi uirtute eorum accensi sine ullius imperio in perturbatos iam hostes equos immittunt. tunc uero Celtiberi omnes in fugam effunduntur, et imperator Romanus auersos hostes contemplatus aedem Fortunae equestri Iouique optimo maximo ludos uouit. caeduntur Celtiberi per totum saltum dissipati fuga. decem et septem milia hostium caesa eo die traduntur, uiui capti plus tria milia septingenti, cum signis militaribus septuaginta septem, equis prope sescentis. in suis castris eo die uictor exercitus mansit. uictoria non sine iactura militum fuit: quadringenti septuaginta duo milites Romani, socium ac Latini nominis mille decem et nouem, cum his tria milia militum auxiliariorum perierunt. ita uictor exercitus renouata priore gloria Tarraconem est perductus. uenienti Fuluius Ti. Sempronius praetor, qui biduo ante uenerat, obuiam processit gratulatusque est, quod rem publicam egregie gessisset. cum summa concordia, quos dimitterent quosque retinerent milites, composuerunt. inde Fuluius exauctoratis militibus in naues impositis Romam est profectus, Sempronius in Celtiberiam legiones duxit.

[41] Consules ambo in Ligures exercitus induxerunt diuersis partibus. Postumius prima et tertia legione Ballistam Letumque montes obsedit, et premendo praesidiis angustos saltus eorum commeatus interclusit, inopiaque omnium rerum eos perdomuit. Fuluius secunda et quarta legione adortus a Pisis Apuanos Ligures, qui eorum circa Macram fluuium incolebant, in deditionem acceptos, ad septem milia hominum, in naues impositos praeter oram Etrusci maris Neapolim transmisit. inde in Samnium traducti, agerque iis inter populares datus est. montanorum Ligurum ab A. Postumio uineae caesae frumentaue deusta, donec cladibus omnibus belli coacti in deditionem uenerunt armaque tradiderunt. nauibus inde

Postumius ad uisendam oram Ingaunorum Intemeliorumque Ligurum processit. priusquam hi consules uenirent ad exercitum, qui Pisas indictus erat, praeerat A. Postumius. frater Q. Fuluii M. Fuluius Nobilior — secundae legionis [Fuluius] tribunus militum is erat — mensibus suis dimisit legionem, iureiurando adactis centurionibus aes in aerarium ad quaestores esse delaturos. hoc ubi Placentiam — nam eo forte erat profectus — Aulo nuntiatum est, cum equitibus expeditis secutus dimissos, quos eorum potuit adsequi, reduxit castigatos Pisas; de ceteris consulem certiore fecit. eo referente senatus consultum factum est, ut M. Fuluius in Hispaniam relegaretur ultra nouam Carthaginem; litteraeque ei datae sunt a consule ad P. Manlium in Hispaniam ulteriorem deferendae: milites iussi ad signa redire. ignominiae causa uti semestre stipendium in eum annum esset ei legioni, decretum: qui miles ad exercitum non redisset, eum ipsum bonaque eius uendere consul iussus.

[42] Eodem anno L. Duronius, qui praetor anno superiore <fuerat>, ex Illyrico cum decem nauibus Brundisium rediit. inde in portu relictis nauibus cum uenisset Romam, inter exponendas res, quas ibi gessisset, haud dubie in regem Illyriorum Gentium latrocinii omnis maritimi causam auertit: ex regno eius omnes naues esse, quae superi maris oram depopolatae essent; de his rebus se legatos misisse, nec conueniendi regis potestatem factam. uenerant Romam legati a Gentio, qui, quo tempore Romani conueniendi regis causa uenissent, aegrum forte eum in ultimis partibus fuisse regni dicerent: petere Gentium ab senatu, ne crederent confictis criminibus in se, quae inimici detulissent. ad ea Duronius adiecit multis ciuibus Romanis et sociis Latini nominis iniurias factas in regno eius, et ciues Romanos dici Corcyrae retineri. eos omnes Romam adduci placuit, C. Claudium praetorem cognoscere, neque ante Gentio regi legatisue eius responsum reddi.

Inter multos alios, quos pestilentia eius anni absumpsit, sacerdotes quoque aliquot mortui sunt. L. Ualerius Flaccus pontifex mortuus est: in eius locum suffectus est Q. Fabius Labeo. P. Manlius, qui nuper ex ulteriore Hispania redierat, triumphum epulo: Q. Fuluius M. f. in locum eius triumphum cooptatus, tum praetextatus erat. de rege sacrifico sufficiendo in locum Cn. Cornelii Dolabellae contentio inter C. Seruilium pontificem maximum fuit et L. Cornelium Dolabellam duumvirum naualem, quem ut inauguraret pontifex magistratu sese abdicare iubebat. recusantique id facere ob eam rem multa duumviro dicta a pontifice, deque ea, cum prouocasset, certatum ad populum. cum plures iam tribus intro uocatae dicto esse audientem pontifici duumvirum iuberent, multamque remitti, si magistratu se abdicasset, uitium de caelo, quod comitia turbaret, interuenit. religio inde fuit pontificibus inaugurandi Dolabellae. P. Cloelium Siculum inaugurarunt, qui secundo loco nominatus erat. exitu anni et C. Seruilius Geminus pontifex maximus decessit: idem decemuir sacrorum fuit. pontifex in locum eius a collegio cooptatus est Q. Fuluius Flaccus: <creatus> inde pontifex maximus M. Aemilius Lepidus, cum multi clari uiri petissent; et decemuir sacrorum Q. Marcius Philippus in eiusdem locum est cooptatus. et augur Sp. Postumius Albinus decessit: in locum eius P. Scipionem, filium Africani, augures cooptarunt.

Cumanis eo anno petentibus permissum, ut publice Latine loquerentur et praeconibus Latine uendendi ius esset.

[43] Pisanis agrum pollicentibus, quo Latina colonia deduceretur, gratiae ab senatu actae; triumviri creati ad eam rem Q. Fabius Buteo M. et P. Popilii Laenates. a C. Maenio praetore, cui prouincia Sardinia cum euenisset, additum erat, ut quaereret de ueneficiis longius ab urbe decem milibus passuum, litterae adlatae, se iam tria milia hominum damnasse, et crescere sibi quaestionem indiciiis: aut eam sibi esse deserendam aut prouinciam dimittendam.

Q. Fuluius Flaccus ex Hispania rediit Romam cum magna fama gestarum rerum; qui cum extra urbem triumphi causa esset, consul est creatus cum L. Manlio Acidino, et post paucos dies cum militibus, quos secum deduxerat, triumphans urbem est inuectus. tulit in triumpho coronas aureas centum uiginti quattuor: praeterea auri pondo triginta unum, <argenti infecti> * * * et signati Oscensis nummum centum septuaginta tria milia ducentos. militibus de praeda quinquagenos denarios dedit, duplex centurionibus, triplex equiti, tantundem sociis Latini nominis, et stipendium omnibus duplex.

quaternos iubebat creari. hi facti Cn. Cornelius Scipio C. Ualerius Laeuinus Q. et P. Mucii Q. f. Scaeuolae. Q. Fuluius et L. Manlio consulibus eadem prouincia, quae superioribus, pari numero copiae peditum equitum, ciuium sociorum decretae. in Hispaniis duabus Ti. Sempronio et L. Postumio cum iisdem exercitibus, quos haberent, prorogatum imperium est; et in supplementum consules scribere iussi ad tria milia peditum Romanorum, trecentos equites, quinque milia sociorum Latini nominis et quadringentos equites. P. Mucius Scaeuola urbanam sortitus prouinciam est, et ut idem quaereret de ueneficiis in urbe et propius urbem decem milia passuum, Cn. Cornelius Scipio peregrinam, Q. Mucius Scaeuola Siciliam, C. Ualerius Laeuinus Sardiniam.

Q. Fuluius consul priusquam ullam rem publicam ageret, liberare et se et rem publicam religione uotis soluendis dixit uelle. uouisse, quo die postremum cum Celtiberis pugnasset, ludos Ioui optimo maximo et aedem equestri Fortunae sese facturum: in eam rem sibi pecuniam collatam esse ab Hispanis. ludi decreti, et ut duumiri ad aedem locandam crearentur. de pecunia finitum, ne maior ludorum causa consumeretur, quam quanta Fuluius Nobiliori post Aetolicum bellum ludos facienti decreta esset; neque quid ad eos ludos arcesseret cogeret acciperet faceret aduersus id senatus consultum, quod L. Aemilio Cn. Baebio consulibus de ludis factum esset. decreuerat id senatus propter effusos sumptus factos in ludos Ti. Sempronii aedilis, qui graues non modo Italiae ac sociis Latini nominis, sed etiam prouinciis externis fuerant.

[45] Hiems eo anno niue saeua et omni tempestatum genere fuit: arbores, quae obnoxiae frigoribus sunt, deusserat cunctas; et eadem aliquanto quam alias longior fuit. itaque Latinas nox subito coorta et intolerabilis tempestas in monte turbauit, instaurataeque sunt ex decreto pontificum. eadem tempestas et in Capitolio aliquot signa prostrauit fulminibusque complura loca deformauit, aedem Iouis Tarracinae, aedem Albam Capuae portamque Romanam; muri pinnae aliquot locis decussae erant. haec inter prodigia nuntiatum et ab Reate tripedem natum mulum. ob ea decemiri iussi adire libros edidere, quibus diis et quot hostiis sacrificaretur, et [fulminibus complura loca deformata aedem Iouis] ut supplicatio diem unum esset. ludi deinde uotiui Q. Fuluii consulis per dies decem magno

Censorum inde comitia habita: creati M. Aemilius Lepidus pontifex maximus et M. Fulvius Nobilior, qui ex Aetolis triumphauerat. inter hos uiros nobiles inimicitiae erant, saepe multis et in senatu et ad populum atrocibus celebratae certaminibus. comitiis confectis, ut traditum antiquitus est, censores in Campo ad aram Martis sellis curulibus consederunt; quo repente principes senatorum cum agmine uenerunt ciuitatis, inter quos Q. Caecilius Metellus uerba fecit.

[46] 'Non obliti sumus, censores, uos paulo ante ab uniuerso populo Romano moribus nostris praepositos esse, et nos a uobis et admoneri et regi, non uos a nobis debere. indicandum tamen est, quid omnes bonos in uobis aut offendat aut certe mutatum malint. singulos cum intuemur, M. Aemili, M. Fului, neminem hodie in ciuitate habemus, quem, si reuocemur in suffragium, uelimus uobis praelatum esse. ambo cum simul aspicimus, non possumus <non> uereri, ne male comparati sitis, nec tantum rei publicae prosit, quod omnibus nobis egregie placetis, quam, quod alter alteri displicetis, noceat. inimicitias per annos multos uobis ipsis graues et atroces geritis, quae periculum est ne ex hac die nobis et rei publicae quam uobis grauiores fiant. de quibus causis hoc timeamus, multa succurrunt, quae dicerentur, * * * nisi forte implacabiles ~fueritis implicauerint animos uestros. has ut hodie, ut in isto templo finiatis simultates, quaesumus uos uniuersi, et quos coniunxit suffragiis suis populus Romanus, hos etiam reconciliatione gratiae coniungi a nobis sinatis; uno animo, uno consilio legatis senatum, equites recenseatis, agatis census, lustrum condatis; quod in omnibus fere precationibus nuncupabitis uerbis "ut ea res mihi collegaeque meo bene et feliciter eueniat," id ita ut uere, ut ex animo uelit is euenire, efficiatisque, ut, quod deos precati eritis, id uos uelle etiam homines credamus. T. Tatius et Romulus, in cuius urbis medio foro acie hostes concurrerant, ibi concordēs regnarunt. non modo simultates, sed bella quoque finiuntur: ex infestis hostibus plerumque socii fideles, interdum etiam ciues fiunt. Albani diruta Alba Romam traducti sunt, Latini, Sabini in ciuitatem accepti. uulgatum illud, quia uerum erat, in prouerbum uenit, amicitias immortales, <mortales> inimicitias debere esse.' fremitus ortus cum adsensu, deinde uniuersorum uoces idem petentium confusae in unum orationem interpellarunt. inde Aemilius questus cum alia, tum bis a M. Fulvio se certo consulatu deiectum: Fulvius contra queri se ab eo semper lacessitum et in probum suum sponsonem factam. tamen ambo significare, si alter uellet, se in potestate tot principum ciuitatis futuros. omnibus instantibus, qui aderant, dexteras fidemque dedere remittere [uere] ac finire odium. deinde collaudantibus cunctis deducti sunt in Capitolium. et cura super tali re principum et facilitas censorum egregie comprobata ab senatu et laudata est. censoribus deinde postulantis, ut pecuniae summa sibi, qua in opera publica uterentur, <attribueretur,> uectigal annuum decretum est.

[47] Eodem anno in Hispania L. Postumius et Ti. Sempronius propraetores comparauerunt ita inter se, ut in Uaccaeos per Lusitaniam iret Albinus, in Celtiberiam inde reuerteretur; Gracchus, si maius ibi bellum esset, in ultima Celtiberiae penetraret. * * * Mundam urbem primum ui cepit, nocte ex improviso adgressus. acceptis deinde obsidibus praesidioque imposito castella oppugnare, [deinde] agros urere, donec ad praeualidam aliam urbem — Certimam appellant Celtiberi — peruenit. ubi cum iam opera admoueret, ueniunt legati ex oppido, quorum sermo antiquae simplicitatis fuit, non dissimulantium bellaturos, si uires essent. petierunt enim, ut sibi in castra Celtiberorum ire liceret ad auxilia accienda: si non impetrassent, tum separatim [eos] ab illis se consulturos. permittente Graccho ierunt et post paucis diebus alios decem legatos secum adduxerunt. meridianum tempus erat. nihil prius petierunt a praetore, quam ut bibere sibi iuberet dari. epotis primis poculis iterum poposcerunt, magno risu circumstantium in tam rudibus et moris omnis ignaris ingeniis. tum maximus natu ex iis ‘missi sumus’ inquit ‘a gente nostra, qui sciscitaremur, qua tandem re fretus arma nobis inferres.’ ad hanc percuntationem Gracchus exercitu se egregio fidentem uenisse respondit; quem si ipsi uisere uelint, quo certiora ad suos referant, potestatem se eis facturum esse. tribunisque militum imperat, ut ornari omnes copias peditum equitumque et decurrere iubeant armatas. ab hoc spectaculo legati <di>missi deterruerunt suos ab auxilio circumsessae urbi ferendo. oppidani cum ignes nocte <e> turribus nequiquam, quod signum conuenerat, sustulissent, destituti ab unica spe auxilii in deditionem uenerunt. nummum quater et uiciens ab iis est exactum, quadraginta nobilissimi equites, nec obsidum nomine — nam militare iussi sunt — , et tamen re ipsa ut pignus fidei essent.

[48] Inde iam duxit ad Alcen urbem, ubi castra Celtiberorum erant, a quibus uenerant nuper legati. eos cum per aliquot dies, armaturam leuem immittendo in stationes, lacesisset paruīs proeliis, in dies maiora certamina serebat, ut omnes extra munitiones eliceret. ubi, quod petebat, <sat>is sensit effectum, auxiliorum praefectis imperat, ut contracto certamine, tamquam multitudine superarentur, repente tergis datis ad castra effuse fugerent: ipse intra uallum ad omnes portas instruxit copias. haud multum temporis intercessit, cum ex composito refugientium suorum agmen, post effuse sequentes barbaros conspexit. instructam ad hoc ipsum intra uallum habebat aciem. itaque tantum moratus, ut suos refugere in castra libero introitu sineret, clamore sublato simul omnibus portis erupit. non sustinere impetum necopinatum hostes. qui ad castra oppugnanda uenerant, ne sua quidem tueri potuerunt: nam extemplo fusi fugati, mox intra uallum pauentes compulsi, postremo exuuntur castris. eo die nouem milia hostium caesa; capti uiui trecenti uiginti, equi centum duodecim, signa militaria triginta septem. de exercitu Romano centum nouem ceciderunt.

[49] Ab hoc proelio Gracchus duxit ad depopulandam Celtiberiam legiones. et cum ferret passim cuncta atque ageret, populique alii uoluntate alii metu iugum acciperent, centum tria oppida intra paucos dies in deditionem accepit, praeda potitus ingenti est. conuertit inde agmen retro, unde uenerat, ad Alcen, atque eam urbem oppugnare institit. oppidani primum impetum hostium sustinuerunt; deinde cum iam non armis modo sed etiam operibus oppugnarentur, diffisi praesidio urbis in arcem uniuersi concesserunt: postremo et inde praemissis oratoribus in dicionem se suaque omnia Romanis permiserunt. magna inde praeda facta est. multi captiui nobiles in potestatem uenerunt, inter quos et Thurri filii duo et filia. regulus hic earum gentium erat, longe potentissimus omnium Hispanorum. audita suorum clade, missis qui fidem uenienti in castra ad Gracchum peterent, uenit. et primum quaesiuit ab eo, liceretne sibi ac suis uiuere. cum praetor uicturum respondisset, quaesiuit iterum, si cum Romanis militare liceret. id quoque Graccho permittente, ‘sequar’ inquit 'uos aduersus ueteres socios meos, quoniam illos ~ad me propiunt suspicere.' secutus est inde Romanos, fortique ac fideli opera multis locis rem Romanam adiuuit.

[50] Ergauica inde, nobilis et potens ciuitas, aliorum circa populorum cladibus territa portas aperuit Romanis. eam deditionem oppidorum haud cum fide factam quidam auctores sunt: e qua regione abduxisset legiones, extemplo inde rebellatum, magnoque eum postea proelio ad montem Chaunum cum Celtiberis a prima luce ad sextam horam diei signis collatis pugnasse, multos utrimque cecidisse; nec aliud magnopere, cur uicisse crederes, fecisse Romanos, nisi quod postero die lacessierint proelio manentes intra uallum: spolia per totum diem legisse; tertio die proelio maiore iterum pugnatum, et tum demum haud dubie uictos Celtiberos castraque eorum capta et direpta esse. uiginti duo milia hostium eo die esse caesa, plus trecentos captos, parem fere equorum numerum, et signa militaria septuaginta duo. inde <de>bellatum, ueramque pacem, non fluxa, ut ante, fide Celtiberos fecisse. eadem aestate et L. Postumium in Hispania ulteriore bis cum Uaccaeis egregie pugnasse scribunt: ad triginta et quinque milia hostium occidisse et castra expugnasse. propius uero est serius in prouinciam peruenisse, quam ut ea aestate potuerit res gerere.

[51] Censores fideli concordia senatum legerunt. princeps lectus est ipse censor M. Aemilius Lepidus pontifex maximus: tres eiecti de senatu; retinuit quosdam Lepidus a collega praeteritos. opera ex pecunia attributa diuisaque inter se haec [con]fecerunt. Lepidus molem ad Tarracinam, ingratum opus, quod praedia habebat ibi priuatamque publicae rei impensam ins<er>uerat; theatrum et proscaenium ad Apollinis, aedem Iouis in Capitolio, columnasque circa poliendas albo locauit; et ab his columnis, quae incommode opposita uidebantur, signa amouit clipeaque de columnis et signa militaria adfixa omnis generis dempsit. M. Fuluius plura et maioris locauit usus: portum et pilas pontis in Tiberi, quibus pilis fornices post aliquot annos P. Scipio Africanus et L. Mummius censores locauerunt imponendos; basilicam post argentarias nouas et forum piscatorium circumdatis tabernis quas uendidit in priuatum; [et forum] et porticum extra portam Trigeminam, et aliam post naualia et ad fanum Herculis et post Spei ad Tiberim <et ad> aedem

Apollinis medici. habuere et in promiscuo praeterea pecuniam: ex ea communiter locarunt aquam adducendam fornicesque faciendos. impedimento operi fuit M. Licinius Crassus, qui per fundum suum duci non est passus. portoria quoque et uectigalia iidem multa instituerunt. complura sacella publicaue loca, occupata a priuatis, publica sacraue ut essent paterentque populo curarunt. mutarunt suffragia, regionatimque generibus hominum causisque et quaestibus tribus discripserunt.

[52] Et alter ex censoribus M. Aemilius petiit ab senatu, ut sibi dedicationis <causa> templorum reginae Iunonis et Dianae, quae bello Ligustino annis octo ante uouisset, pecunia ad ludos decerneretur. uiginti milia aeris decreuerunt. dedicauit eas aedes, utramque in circo Flaminio, ludosque scaenicos triduum post dedicationem templi Iunonis, biduum post Dianae, et singulos dies fecit in circo. idem dedicauit aedem Larum permarinum in Campo. uouerat eam annis undecim ante L. Aemilius Regillus nauali proelio aduersus praefectos regis Antiochi. supra ualuas templi tabula cum titulo hoc fixa est: ‘duello magno dirimendo, regibus subigendis, ~caput patrandae pacis haec pugna exeunti L. Aemilio M. Aemilii filio * * auspicio imperio felicitate ductuque eius inter Ephesum Samum Chiumque, inspectante eopse Antiocho, exercitu omni, equitatu elephantisque, classis regis Antiochi antehac inuicta fusa contusa fugataque est, ibique eo die naues longae cum omnibus sociis captae quadraginta duae. ea pugna pugnata rex Antiochus regnumque * * *. eius rei ergo aedem Laribus permarinis uouit.’ eodem exemplo tabula in aede Iouis in Capitolio supra ualuas fixa est.

[53] Biduo, quo senatum legerunt censores, Q. Fuluius consul profectus in Ligures, per inuios montes Ballistae saltus cum exercitu transgressus, signis collatis cum hoste pugnavit; neque tantum acie uicit, sed castra quoque eodem die cepit. tria milia ducenti hostium <caesi sunt>, omnisque ea regio Ligurum in deditionem uenit. consul deditos in campestres agros deduxit, praesidiaque montibus imposuit. celeriter <et Roma consul ad hostes> et ex prouincia litterae Romam uenerunt: supplicationes ob eas res gestas in triduum decretae sunt; praetores quadraginta hostiis maioribus per supplicationes rem diuinam fecerunt. ab altero consule L. Manlio nihil memoria dignum in Liguribus est gestum. Galli Transalpini, tria milia hominum, in Italiam transgressi, neminem bello lacessentes agrum a consulibus et senatu petebant, ut pacati sub imperio populi Romani essent. eos senatus excedere Italia iussit, et consulem Q. Fuluium quaerere et animaduvertere in eos, qui principes et auctores transcendendi Alpes fuissent.

[54] Eodem anno Philippus rex Macedonum, senio et maerore consumptus post mortem filii, decessit. Demetriade hibernabat, cum desiderio anxius filii, tum paenitentia crudelitatis suae. stimulabat animum et alter filius haud dubie et sua et aliorum opinione rex, conuersique in eum omnium oculi, et destituta senectus aliis exspectantibus suam mortem, aliis ne exspectantibus quidem. quo magisangebatur, et cum eo Antigonus Echecratis filius, nomen patruī Antigoni ferens, qui tutor Philippi fuerat, regiae uir maiestatis, nobili etiam pugna aduersus Cleomenem Lacedaemonium clarus. tutorem eum Graeci, ut cognomine a ceteris regibus distinguerent, appellarunt. huius fratris filius Antigonus ex honoratis Philippi amicis unus incorruptus permanserat, eique ea fides nequaquam amicum Persea inimicissimum fecerat is prospiciens animo, quanto cum periculo suo hereditas regni uentura esset ad Persea, ut primum labare animum regis et ingemiscere interdum filii desiderio sensit, nunc praebendo aures, nunc lacessendo etiam mentionem rei temere actae, saepe querenti querens et ipse aderat. et cum multa, <ut> adsolet, ueritas praeberet uestigia sui, omni ope adiuuabat, quo maturius omnia emanarent. suspecti ut ministri facinoris Apelles maxime et Philocles erant, qui Romam legati fuerant litterasque exitiales Demetrio sub nomine Flaminini attulerant.

conspectum tortoris uerberumque non sustinuit, ordinemque omnem facinoris legatorum ministeriique sui exposuit. extemplo missi, qui legatos comprehenderent, Philoclem, qui praesens erat, oppresserunt: Apelles missus ad Chaeream quendam persequendum indicio Xychi audito in Italiam traiecit. de Philocle nihil certi uulgatum est: alii primo audaciter negantem, postquam in conspectum adductus sit Xychus, non ultra tetendisse, alii tormenta etiam infitiantem perpersum adfirmant. Philippo redintegratus est luctus geminatusque; et infelicitatem suam in liberis grauiorem, quod alter <su>peresset, censebat.

[56] Perseus certior factus omnia detecta esse, potentior quidem erat, quam ut fugam necessariam duceret: tantum ut procul abesset, curabat, interim uelut ab incendio flagrantis irae, dum Philippus uiueret, se defensurus. <is> spe potiundi ad poenam corporis eius amissa, quod reliquum erat, id studere, ne super impunitatem etiam praemio sceleris frueretur. Antigonum igitur appellat, cui et palam facti parricidii gratia obnoxius erat, et nequa<quam> pudendum aut paenitendum eum regem Macedonibus propter recentem patruī Antigoni gloriam fore censebat. ‘quando in eam fortunam ueni,’ inquit ‘Antigone, ut orbitas mihi, quam alii detestantur parentes, optabilis esse debeat, regnum, quod a patruo tuo forti, non solum fideli, tutela eius custoditum et auctum etiam accepi, id tibi tradere in animo est. te unum habeo, quem dignum regno iudicem. si neminem haberem, perire et exstingui id mallem quam Perseo scelestae fraudis praemium esse. Demetrium excitatum ab inferis restitutumque credam mihi, si te, qui morti innocentis, qui meo infelici errori unus illacrimasti, in locum eius substitutum relinquam.’ ab hoc sermone omni genere honoris producere eum non destitit. cum in Thracia Perseus abesset, circumire Macedoniae urbes principibusque Antigonum commendare; et si uita longior suppetisset, haud dubium fuit, quin eum in possessione regni relicturus fuerit. ab Demetriade profectus Thessalonicae plurimum temporis moratus fuerat. inde cum Amphipolim uenisset, graui morbo est implicitus. sed animo tamen aegrum magis fuisse quam corpore constat; curisque et uigiliis, cum identidem species et umbrae insontis interempti filii agitent, exstinctum esse cum diris exsecrationibus alterius. tamen * * * admoueri potuisset Antigonus, si aut <affuisset aut> statim palam facta esset mors regis. medicus Calligenes, qui curationi praeerat, non exspectata morte regis, a primis desperationis notis nuntios per dispositos <equos>, ita ut conuenerat, misit ad Perseum, et mortem regis in aduentum eius omnes, qui extra regiam erant, celauit.

[57] Oppressit igitur necopinantes ignarosque omnes Perseus et regnum scelere partum inuasit. peropportuna mors Philippi fuit ad dilationem et ad uires bello subtrahendas. nam post paucis diebus gens Bastarnarum, diu sollicitata, ab suis sedibus magna peditum equitumque manu Histrum traiecit. inde praegressi, qui nuntiarent regi, Antigonus et Cotto: <Cotto> nobilis erat Bastarna, Antigonus e regiis unus, saepe cum ipso Cottone legatus ad concitandos Bastarnas missus. haud procul Amphipoli fama, in<de> certi nuntii occurrerunt mortuum esse regem. quae res omnem ordinem consilii turbauit. compositum autem sic fuerat, transitum per Thraciam tutum et commeatus Bastarnis ut Philippus praestaret. id ut facere posset, regionum principes donis coluerat, fide sua obligata pacato agmine transituros Bastarnas. Dardanorum gentem delere propositum erat inque eorum agro sedes dare Bastarnis. duplex inde erat commodum futurum, si et Dardani, gens semper infestissima Macedoniae temporibusque iniquis regum imminens, tolleretur, et Bastarnae relictis in Dardania coniugibus liberisque ad populandam Italiam possent mitti. per Scordiscos iter esse ad mare Hadriaticum Italiamque; alia uia traduci exercitum non posse. facile Bastarnis Scordiscos iter daturus: nec enim aut lingua aut moribus [aequales] abhorreere; et ipsos adiuncturos se, cum ad praedam opulentissimae gentis ire uidissent. inde in omnem euentum consilia <ac>commodabantur: siue caesi ab Romanis forent Bastarnae, Dardanos tamen sublatos praedamque ex reliquiis Bastarnarum et possessionem liberam Dardaniae solacio fore; siue prospere <rem> gessissent, Romanis auersis in Bastarnarum bellum recuperaturum se in Graecia, quae amisisset. haec Philippi consilia fuerant.

[58] <Primum> ingressi sunt pacato agmine. <digressu> deinde Cottonis et Antigoni et haud multo post fama mortis Philippi neque Thraces commercio faciles erant, <neque> Bastarnae empto contenti esse poterant aut in agmine contineri, ne decederent uia. inde iniuriae ultro citroque fieri, quarum in dies incremento bellum exarsit. postremo Thraces cum uim ac multitudinem sustinere hostium non possent, relictis campestribus uicis in montem ingentis altitudinis — Donucam uocant — concesserunt. quo <cum> subire Bastarnae uellent, quali tempestate Gallos spoliantes Delphos fama est peremptos esse, talis tum Bastarnas nequiquam ad iuga montium appropinquantes oppressit. neque enim imbre tantum effuso, dein creberrima grandine obruti sunt cum ingenti fragore caeli tonitribusque et fulguribus praestringentibus aciem oculorum, sed fulmina etiam sic undique micabant, ut peti uiderentur corpora, nec solum milites sed etiam principes icti caderent. itaque cum praecipiti fuga per rupes praealtas improuidi sternerentur ruerentque, instabant quidem percussis Thraces, sed ipsi deos auctores fugae esse caelumque in se ruere aiebant. dissipati procella cum tamquam ex naufragio plerique semermes in castra, unde profecti erant, redissent, consultari, quid agerent, coeptum. inde orta dissensio, aliis redeundum aliis penetrandum in Dardaniam censentibus: triginta ferme milia hominum Clondico duce, <quo> profecti erant, peruenerunt, cetera multitudo retro, qua uenerat, Apolloniam Mesembriamque repetit. Perseus potitus regno interfici Antigoni iussit; et dum firmaret res, legatos Romam ad amicitiam paternam renouandam petendumque, ut rex ab senatu appellaretur, misit. haec eo anno in Macedonia gesta.

[59] Alter consulum Q. Fuluius ex Liguribus triumphauit; quem triumphum magis gratiae quam rerum gestarum magnitudini datum constabat. armorum hostilium magnam uim transtulit, nullam pecuniam admodum. diuisit tamen in singulos milites trecenos aeris, duplex centurionibus, triplex equiti. nihil in eo triumpho magis insigne fuit, quam quod forte euenit, ut eodem die triumpharet, quo priore anno ex praetura triumphauerat. secundum triumphum comitia edixit, quibus creati consules sunt M. LIBER XLI

[1] * * a patre in pace habitam armasse eoque iuuentuti praedandi cupidae pergratus esse dicebatur. consilium de Histrico bello cum haberet consul, alii gerendum extemplo, antequam contrahere copias hostes possent, alii consulendum prius senatum censebant. uicit sententia, quae diem non proferebat. profectus ab Aquileia consul castra ad lacum Timaui posuit; imminet mari is lacus. eodem decem nauibus C. Furius duumuir naualis uenit. aduersus Illyriorum classem creati duumiri nauales erant, qui tuendae uiginti nauibus maris superi orae Anconam uelut cardinem haberent; inde L. Cornelius dextra litora usque ad Tarentum, C. Furius laeua usque ad Aquileiam tueretur. eae naues ad proximum portum in Histriae fines cum onerariis et magno commeatu missae, secutusque cum legionibus consul quinque ferme milia a mari posuit castra. in portu emporium breui perfrequens factum, omniaque hinc in castra supportabantur. et, quo id tutius fieret, stationes ab omnibus castrorum partibus circumdatae sunt: in Histriam uersum praesidium statuum, repentina cohors Placentina opposita; inter mare et castra et, ut idem aquatoribus ad fluuium esset praesidium, M. Aebutius tribunus militum secundae legionis duos manipulos militum ducere iussus est; T. et C. Aelii tribuni militum legionem tertiam, quae pabulatores et lignatores tueretur, uia, quae Aquileiam fert, duxerant. ab eadem regione mille ferme passuum castra erant Gallorum: Catmelus regulus praeerat tribus haud amplius milibus armatorum.

[2] Histri, ut primum ad lacum Timaui castra Romana sunt mota, ipsi post collem occulto loco consederunt, et inde obliquis itineribus agmen sequebantur, in omnem occasionem intenti; nec quicquam eos, quae terra marique agerentur, fallebat. postquam stationes inualidas esse pro castris, forum turba inermi frequens inter castra et mare mercantium sine ullo terrestri aut maritimo munimento uiderunt, duo simul praesidia, Placentinae cohortis et manipulorum secundae legionis, adgrediuntur. nebula matutina texerat inceptum; qua dilabente ad primum teporem solis perlucens iam aliquid, incerta tamen, ut solet, lux speciem omnium multiplicem intuenti reddens, tum quoque frustrata Romanos, multo maiorem iis, quam erat, hostium aciem ostendit. qua territi utriusque stationis milites ingenti tumultu cum in castra confugissent, haud paulo ibi plus, quam quod secum ipsi attulerant, terroris fecerunt. nam neque dicere, quid fugissent, nec percunctantibus reddere responsum poterant; et clamor in portis, ut ubi nulla esset statio, quae sustineret impetum, audiebatur; et concursatio in obscuro incidentium aliorum in alios incertum fecerat, an hostis intra uallum esset. una uox audiebatur ad mare uocantium; id forte temere ab uno exclamatum totis passim personabat castris. itaque primo, uelut iussi id facere, pauci, armati <alii>, maior pars inermes, ad mare decurrunt, dein plures, postremo prope omnes, et ipse consul, cum frustra reuocare fugientes conatus nec imperio nec auctoritate nec precibus ad extremum ualuisset. unus remansit M. Licinius Strabo, tribunus militum secundae legionis, cum tribus signis ab legione sua relictus. hunc in uacua castra impetu facto Histri, cum alius armatus iis nemo obuiam isset, in praetorio instruentem atque adhortantem suos oppresserunt. proelium atrocius quam pro paucitate resistentium fuit, nec ante finitum est, quam tribunus militum quique circa eum constiterant interfecti sunt. praetorio deiecto direptis<que>, quae ibi fuerunt, ad quaestorium, forum quintanamque hostes peruenerunt. ibi cum omnium rerum paratam expositamque copiam et stratos lectos in quaestorio inuenissent, regulus accubans epulari coepit. mox idem ceteri omnes, armorum hostiumque obliti, faciunt; et, ut quibus insuetus liberalior uictus esset, audius uino ciboque corpora onerant.

[3] nequaquam eadem est tum rei forma apud Romanos; terra mari trepidatur; nautici tabernacula detendunt commeatumque in litore expositum in naues rapiunt; milites in scaphas et mare territi ruunt; nautae metu, ne compleantur nauigia, alii turbae obsistunt, alii ab litore naues in altum expellunt. inde certamen, mox etiam pugna cum uulneribus et caede in uicem militum nautarumque oritur, donec iussu consulis procul a terra classis submota est. discernere inde inermes ab armatis coepit. uix mille ducenti ex tanta multitudine, qui arma haberent, perpauci equites, qui equos secum eduxissent, inuenti sunt; cetera deformis turba uelut lixarum calonumque, praeda fere futura, si belli hostes meminissent. tunc demum nuntius <missus> ad tertiam legionem reuocandam et Gallorum praesidium; et simul ex omnibus locis ad castra recipienda demendamque ignominiam rediri

coeptum est. tribuni militum tertiae legionis pabulum lignaque proicere iubent, centurionibus imperant, ut grauiore aetate milites binos in ea iumenta, ex quibus onera deiecta erant, imponant; equites ut singulos e iuuenibus pedites secum in equos tollant: egregiam gloriam legionis fore, si castra metu secundanorum amissa sua uirtute recipiant. et recipi facile esse, si in praeda occupati barbari subito opprimantur; sicut ceperint, posse capi. summa militum alacritate adhortatio audita est. ferunt citati signa, nec signiferos armati morantur. priores tamen consul copiaeque, quae a mari reducebantur, ad uallum accesserunt. L. Atilius, tribunus primus secundae legionis, non hortabatur modo milites, sed docebat etiam, si uictores Histri, quibus armis cepissent castra, iisdem capta retinere in animo haberent, primum exutum castris hostem ad mare persecuturos fuisse, deinde stationes certe pro uallo habituros: uino somnoque ueri simile esse mersos iacere.

[4] sub haec A. Baeculonium, signiferum suum, notae fortitudinis uirum, inferre signum iussit. ille, si [unum] se sequerentur, quo celerius fieret, facturum dixit; conisusque cum trans uallum signum traiecisset, primus omnium portam intrauit. et parte alia T. et C. Aelii, tribuni militum tertiae legionis, cum equitatu adueniunt. confestim et quos binos oneraria in iumenta imposuerant secuti, et consul cum toto agmine. at Histrorum pauci, qui modice uino usi erant, memores fuerant fugae, aliis somno mors continuata est; integraque sua omnia Romani, praeterquam quod uini cibique absumptum erat, receperunt. aegri quoque milites, qui in castris relictis fuerant, postquam intra uallum suos senserunt, armis arreptis caedem ingentem fecerunt. ante omnes insignis opera fuit C. Popili equitis; Sabello cognomen erat. is pede saucio relictus longe plurimos hostium occidit. ad octo milia Histrorum sunt caesa, captus nemo, quia ira et indignatio immemores praedae fecit. rex tamen Histrorum temulentus ex conuiuio, raptim a suis in equum impositus, fugit. ex uictoribus ducenti triginta septem milites perierunt, plures in matutina fuga quam in recipiendis castris.

[5] forte ita euenit, ut Cn. et L. Gaullii Nouelli, Aquileienses, cum comitatu uenientes, ignari prope in capta castra ab Histris inciderent. ii cum Aquileiam relictis impedimentis refugissent, omnia terrore ac tumultu non Aquileiae modo, sed Romae quoque post paucos dies inpleuerunt; quo non capta tantum castra ab hostibus nec fuga, quae uera erant, sed perditas res deletumque exercitum omnem allatum est. itaque, quod in tumultu fieri solet, dilectus extra ordinem non in urbe tantum, sed tota Italia indicti. duae legiones ciuium Romanorum conscriptae, et decem milia peditum cum equitibus quingentis sociis nominis Latini imperata. M. Iunius consul transire in Galliam et ab ciuitatibus prouinciae eius, quantum quaeque posset, militum exigere iussus. simul decretum, ut Ti. Claudius praetor militibus legionis quartae et socium Latini nominis quinque milibus, equitibus ducentis quinquaginta, Pisas ut conuenirent, ediceret, eamque prouinciam, dum consul inde abesset, tutaretur; M. Titinius praetor legionem primam, parem numerum sociorum peditum equitumque, Ariminum conuenire iuberet. Nero paludatus Pisas in prouinciam est profectus; Titinius C. Cassio tribuno militum Ariminum, qui praeesset legioni, misso dilectum Romae habuit. M. Iunius consul ex Liguribus in prouinciam Galliam transgressus, auxiliis protinus per ciuitates Galliae militibusque coloniis imperatis, Aquileiam peruenit. ibi certior factus exercitum incolumem esse, scriptis litteris Romam, ne tumultuarentur, ipse remissis auxiliis, quae Gallis imperauerat, ad collegam est profectus. Romae magna ex necopinato laetitia fuit: dilectus omissus est, exauctorati, qui sacramento dixerant, et exercitus, qui Arimini pestilentia adfectus erat, domum dimissus. Histri magnis copiis cum castra haud procul consulis castris haberent, postquam alterum consulem cum exercitu nouo aduenisse audierunt, passim in ciuitates dilapsi sunt. consules Aquileiam in hiberna legiones reduxerunt.

[6] sedato tandem Histrico tumultu senatus consultum factum est, ut consules inter se compararent, uter eorum ad comitia habenda Romam rediret. cum absentem Manlium tribuni plebis <A.> Licinius Nerua et C. Papirius Turdus in contionibus lacerarent rogationemque promulgarent, ne Manlius post idus Martias++ prorogatae namque consulibus iam in annum prouinciae erant++imperium retineret, uti causam extemplo dicere, cum abisset magistratu, posset, huic rogationi Q. Aelius collega intercessit magnisque contentionibus obtinuit, ne perferretur. per eos dies Ti. Sempronius Gracchus et L. Postumius Albinus ex Hispania Romam cum reuertissent, senatus iis a M. Aebutii praetoris cognitum est, quas filius eius ad senatum attulerat. Ilienses adiunctis Balarorum auxiliis pacatam prouinciam inuaserant, nec eis inualido exercitu et magna parte pestilentia absumpto resisti poterat. eadem et Sardorum legati nuntiabant orantes, ut urbibus saltem++iam enim agros deploratos esse++opem senatus ferret. haec legatio totumque, quod ad Sardiniam pertinebat, ad nouos magistratus reiectum est. aequae miserabilis legatio Lyciorum, qui crudelitatem Rhodiorum, quibus ab L. [7] triumphus deinde ex Hispania duo continui acti. prior Sempronius Gracchus de Celtiberis sociisque eorum, postero die L. Postumius de Lusitanis aliisque eiusdem regionis Hispanis triumphauit. quadraginta milia pondo argenti [Ti.] Gracchus transtulit, uiginti milia Albinus. militibus denarios quinos uicenos, duplex centurioni, triplex equiti ambo diuiserunt; sociis tantumdem quantum Romanis. per eosdem forte dies M. Iunius consul ex Histria comitiorum causa Romam uenit. eum cum in senatu fatigassent interrogationibus tribuni plebis Papirius et Licinius de iis, quae in Histria essent acta, in contionem quoque produxerunt. ad quae cum consul se dies non plus undecim in ea prouincia fuisse responderet, quae se absente acta essent, se quoque, ut illos, fama comperta habere, exsequebantur deinde quaerentes, quid ita non potius A. Manlius Romam uenisset, ut rationem redderet populo Romano, cur ex Gallia prouincia, quam sortitus esset, in Histriam transisset?

quando id bellum senatus decreuisset, quando [id bellum] populus Romanus iussisset? at hercule priuato quidem consilio bellum susceptum esse, sed gestum prudenter fortiterque. immo, utrum susceptum sit nequius an inconsultius gestum, dici non posse. stationes duas necopinantes ab Histris oppressas, castra Romana capta, quod peditum, quod equitum in castris fuerit <caesum;> ceteros inermes fusosque, ante omnes consulem ipsum, ad mare ac naues fugisse. priuatum rationem redditurum earum rerum esse, quoniam consul noluisset.

[8] comitia deinde habita. consules creati C. Claudius Pulcher Ti. Sempronius Gracchus. et postero die praetores facti P. Aelius Tubero iterum C. Quinctius Flaminius C. Numisius L. Mummius Cn. Cornelius Scipio C. Ualerius Laeuinus. Tuberoni urbana iurisdictio, Quinctio peregrina euenit, Numisio Sicilia, Mummio Sardinia; sed ea propter belli magnitudinem prouincia consularis facta. [Gracchus eam sortitur, Histriam Claudius.] Scipio et Laeuinus Galliam in duas diuisam prouincias sortiti sunt. idibus Martiis, quo die Sempronius Claudiusque consulatum inierunt, mentio tantum de prouinciis Sardinia Histriaque et utriusque hostibus fuit, qui in his prouinciis bellum conciuissent. postero die legati Sardorum, qui ad nouos magistratus dilati erant, <et> L. Minucius Thermus, qui legatus Manli consulis in Histria fuerat, in senatum uenit. ab his edoctus est senatus, quantum belli eae prouinciae haberent. mouerunt senatum et legationes socium nominis Latini, quae et censores et priores consules fatigauerant, tandem in senatum introductae. summa querellarum erat, ciues suos Romae censos plerosque Romam commigrasse; quod si permittatur, perpaucis lustris futurum, ut deserta oppida, deserti agri nullum militem dare possint. Fregellas quoque milia quattuor familiarum transisse ab se Samnites Paelignique querebantur, neque eo minus aut hos aut illos in dilectu militum dare. genera autem fraudis duo mutandae uiritim ciuitatis inducta erant. lex sociis [ac] nominis Latini, qui stirpem ex sese domi relinquerent, dabat, ut ciues Romani fierent. ea lege male utendo alii sociis, alii populo Romano iniuriam faciebant. nam et ne stirpem domi relinquerent, liberos suos quibuslibet Romanis in eam condicionem, ut manu mitterentur, mancipio dabant, libertinique ciues essent; et quibus stirps deesset, quam relinquerent, ut ciues

Romani * * fiebant. postea his quoque imaginibus iuris spretis, promiscue sine lege, sine stirpe in ciuitatem Romanam per migrationem et censum transibant. haec ne postea fierent, petebant legati, et ut redire in ciuitates iuberent socios; deinde ut lege cauerent, ne quis quem ciuitatis mutandae causa suum faceret neuē alienaret; et si quis ita ciuis Romanus factus esset, <ciuis ne esset>. haec impetrata ab senatu.

[9] prouinciae deinde, quae in bello erant, Sardinia atque Histria <consulibus> decretae. in Sardiniam duae legiones scribi iussae, quina milia in singulas et duceni pedites, treceni equites, et duodecim milia peditum sociorum ac Latini nominis et sescenti equites et decem quinqueres naues, si deducere ex naualibus uellet. tantumdem peditum equitumque in Histriam, quantum in Sardiniam, decretum. et legionem unam cum equitibus trecentis, et quinque milia peditum sociorum et ducentos quinquaginta mittere equites in Hispaniam consules ad M. Titinium iussi. priusquam consules prouincias sortirentur, prodigia nuntiata sunt: lapidem in agro Crustumino in lucum Martis de caelo cecidisse; puerum trunci corporis in agro Romano natum et quadrupedem anguem uisum; et Capuae multa in foro aedificia de caelo tacta; et Puteolis duas naues fulminis ictu concrematas esse. inter haec, quae nuntiabantur, lupus etiam Romae interdum agitat, cum Collina porta intrasset, per Esquilinam magno consecrantium tumultu euasit. eorum prodigiorum causa consules maiores hostias immolarunt, et diem unum circa omnia puluinaria supplicatio fuit. sacrificiis rite perfectis prouincias sortiti sunt; Claudio Histria, Sempronio Sardinia obuēnit. legem dein de sociis C. Claudius tulit <ex> senatus consulto et edixit, qui socii [ac] nominis Latini, ipsi maioresue eorum, M. Claudio T. Quinctio censoribus postea ea apud socios nominis Latini censi essent, ut omnes in suam quisque ciuitatem ante kal. Nouembres redirent. quaestio, qui ita non redissent, L. Mummio praetori decreta est. ad legem et edictum consulis senatus consultum adiectum est, ut dictator, consul, interrex, censor, praetor, qui nunc esset <quiue postea futurus esset>, apud eorum quem <qui> manu mitteretur, in libertatem uindicaretur, ut ius iurandum daret, qui eum manu mitteret, ciuitatis mutandae causa manu non mittere; in quo id non iuraret, eum manu mittendum non censuerunt. haec in posterum cauta iussique edicto C. Claudii cons. * * * Claudio decreta est.

[10] dum haec Romae geruntur, M. Iunius et A. Manlius, qui priore anno consules fuerant, cum Aquileiae hibernassent, principio ueris in finis Histrorum exercitum introduxerunt; ubi cum effuse popularentur, dolor magis et indignatio diripi res suas cernentis Histros, quam certa spes, satis sibi uirium aduersus duos exercitus <esse>, exciuit. concursu ex omnibus populis iuuentutis facto repentinus et tumultuarius exercitus acius primo impetu quam perseuerantius pugnauit. ad quattuor milia eorum in acie caesa; ceteri omisso bello in ciuitates passim diffugerunt. inde legatos primum ad pacem petendam in castra Romana, deinde obsides imperatos miserunt. haec cum Romae cognita litteris proconsulum essent, C. Claudius consul ueritus, ne forte eae res prouinciam <et> exercitum sibi adimerent, non uotis nuncupatis, non paludatis lictoribus, uno omnium certiore facto collega, nocte profectus, praeceps in prouinciam abiit; ubi inconsultius quam uenerat se gessit. nam cum contione aduocata fugam e castris A. Manlio aduersis auribus militum, quippe qui primi ipsi fugissent, obiectasset <et> ingessisset probra M. Iunio, quod se dedecoris socium collegae fecisset, ad extremum utrumque decedere prouincia iussit. <ad> quod cum illi tum consulis imperio dicto audientes futuros esse dicerent, cum is more maiorum, secundum uota in Capitolio nuncupata, lictoribus paludatis profectus ab urbe esset, furens ira uocatum, qui pro quaestore Manli erat, catenas poposcit, uinctos se Iunium Manliumque minitans Romam missurum. ab eo quoque spretum consulis imperium est; et circumfusus exercitus, fauens imperatorum causae et consuli infestus, animos ad non parendum addebat. postremo fatigatus consul et contumeliis singulorum et multitudinis+ +nam insuper inridebant++ludibriis, naue eadem, qua uenerat, Aquileiam redit. inde collegae scripsit, ut militum nouorum ei parti, quae scripta in Histriam prouinciam esset, ediceret, Aquileiam ut conueniret, ne quid se Romae teneret, quo minus uotis nuncupatis paludatus ab urbe exiret. haec a collega obsequenter facta, brevisque dies ad conueniendum edicta est. Claudius prope consecutus est litteras suas. contione adueniens de Manlio et Iunio habita, non ultra triduum moratus Romae, paludatis lictoribus uotisque in Capitolio nuncupatis, in prouinciam aequae ac prius praecipiti celeritate abijt.

[11] paucis ante diebus Iunius Manliusque oppidum Nesattium, quo se principes Histrorum et regulus ipse Aepulo receperat, summa ui oppugnare coeperant. eo Claudius duabus legionibus nouis adductis, uetere exercitu cum suis ducibus dimisso, ipse oppidum circumsedit et uineis oppugnare intendit, amnemque praeterfluentem moenia, qui et impedimento oppugnantibus erat et aquationem Histris praebebat, multorum dierum opere exceptum nouo alueo auertit. ea res barbaros miraculo terruit abscisae aquae: et ne tum quidem memores pacis, in caedem coniugum ac liberorum uersi, etiam ut spectaculo hostibus tam foedum facinus esset, palam in muris trucidatos praecipitabant. inter simul complorationem feminarum puerorumque, simul nefandam caedem, milites transgressi murum oppidum intrarunt. cuius capti tumultum ubi ex pauido clamore fugientium accepit rex, traiecit ferro pectus, ne uiuus caperetur; ceteri capti aut occisi. duo deinde oppida, Mutila et Faueria, ui capta et deleta. praeda, ut in gente inopi, spe maior fuit, et omnis militibus concessa est. quinque milia capitum sescenta triginta duo sub corona uenierunt. auctores belli uirgis caesi et securi percussi. Histria tota trium oppidorum excidio et morte regis pacata est; omnesque undique populi obsidibus datis in dicionem uenerunt. sub Histrici finem belli apud Ligures concilia de bello haberi coepta.

[12] Ti. Claudius proconsul, qui praetor priore anno fuerat, cum praesidio legionis unius Pisis praeerat. cuius litteris senatus certior factus, eas ipsas litteras ad C. Claudium++nam alter consul iam in Sardiniam traiecerat++deferendas censet et adicit decretum, quoniam Histria prouincia confecta esset, si ei uideretur, exercitum traduceret in Ligures. simul ex litteris consulis, quas de rebus in Histria gestis scripserat, in biduum supplicatio decreta. et <ab> altero consule Ti. Sempronio in Sardinia prospere res gesta. exercitum in agrum Sardorum Iliensium induxit. Balarorum magna auxilia Iliensibus uenerant; cum utraque gente signis conlatis confligit. fusi fugatique hostes castrisque exuti, duodecim milia armatorum caesa. postero die arma lecta conici in acruum iussit consul sacrumque id Uulcano cremauit. uictorem exercitum in hiberna sociarum urbium reduxit. et C. Claudius litteris Ti. Claudi et senatus consulto accepto ex Histria legiones in Ligures transduxit. ad Scultennam flumen in campos progressi castra habebant hostes, ibi cum iis acie dimicatum.

quindecim milia caesa, plus septingenti aut in proelio aut in castris++ nam ea quoque expugnata sunt++capti, et signa militaria unum et quinquaginta capta. Ligures, reliquiae caedis, in montes refugerunt, passimque populanti campestris agros consuli nulla usquam apparuerunt arma. Claudius duarum gentium uno anno uictor, duabus, quod raro alius, in consulatu pacatis prouinciis Romam reuertit.

[13] prodigia eo anno nuntiata: in Crustumino auem sanqualem, quam uocant, sacrum lapidem rostro cecidisse, bouem in Campania locutam, uaccam aeneam Syracusis ab agresti tauro, qui a pecore aberrasset, initam ac semine adpersam. in Crustumino diem unum in ipso loco supplicatio fuit, et in Campania bos alenda publice data, Syracusanumque prodigium expiatum editis ab haruspicibus dis, quibus supplicaretur. pontifex eo anno mortuus est M. Claudius Marcellus, qui consul censorque fuerat. in eius locum suffectus est pontifex filius eius M. Marcellus. et Lunam colonia eodem anno duo milia ciuium Romanorum sunt deducta. triumphum deduxerunt P. Aelius <M. Aemilius> Lepidus Cn. Sicinius; quinquagena et singula iugera et semisses agri in singulos dati sunt. de Liguribus captus ager erat; Etruscorum ante quam Ligurum fuerat. C. Claudius consul ad urbem uenit; cui, cum in senatu de rebus in Histria Liguribusque prospere gestis <disseruisset>, postulanti triumphus est decretus. triumphauit in magistratu de duabus simul gentibus. tulit in eo triumpho denarium trecenta septem milia et uictoriatum octoginta quinque milia septingentos duos. militibus in singulos quini denarii dati, duplex centurioni, triplex equiti. sociis dimidio minus quam ciuibus datum. itaque taciti, ut iratos esse sentires, secuti sunt currum.

[14] <cum is> triumphus de Liguribus agebatur, Ligures postquam senserunt non consularem tantum exercitum Romam abductum, sed legionem ab Ti. Claudio Pisis dimissam, soluti metu, clam exercitu indicto, per transuersos limites superatis montibus in campos degressi, agrum Mutinensem populati, repentino impetu coloniam ipsam ceperunt. id ubi Romam allatum est, senatus C. Claudium consulem comitia primo quoque tempore habere iussit creatisque in annum magistratibus in prouinciam redire et coloniam ex hostibus eripere. ita, uti censuit senatus, comitia habita. consules creati Cn.

Cornelius Scipio Hispallus Q. Petilius Spurius. praetores inde facti M. Popilius Laenas P. Licinius Crassus M. Cornelius Scipio L. Papirius Maso M. Aburius L. Aquilius Gallus. C. Claudio consuli prorogatum in annum imperium et Gallia prouincia; et ne Histri idem, quod et Ligures, facerent, socios nominis Latini in Histriam mitteret, quos triumphus causa de prouincia deduxisset. Cn. Cornelio et Q. Petilio consulibus, quo die magistratum inierunt, immolantibus Ioui singulis bubus, uti solet, in ea hostia, qua Q. Petilius sacrificauit, in iocinere caput non inuentum. id cum ad senatum rettulisset, boue perlitare iussus. de prouinciis deinde consultus senatus Pisas et Ligures prouincias consulibus decreuit; cui Pisae prouincia obuenerat, cum magistratum creandorum tempus esset, ad comitia reuerti iussit. additum decreto, ut binas legiones nouas scriberent et trecenos equites; et dena milia peditum sociis nominique Latino et sescenos imperarent equites. Ti. Claudio prorogatum est imperium in id tempus, quo in prouinciam consul uenisset.

[15] dum de iis rebus <in> senatu agitur, Cn. Cornelius euocatus a uiatore, cum templo egressus esset, paulo post redit confuso uultu et exposuit patribus conscriptis bouis sescenaris, quem immolauisset, iocur diffluxisse. id se uictimario nuntianti parum credentem ipsum aquam effundi ex olla, ubi exta coquerentur, iussisse et uidisse ceteram integram partem extorum, iecur omne inenarrabili tabe absumptum. territis eo prodigio patribus et alter consul curam adiecit, qui se, quod caput iocineri defuisset, tribus bubus perlitasse negauit. senatus maioribus hostiis usque ad litationem sacrificari iussit. ceteris diis perlitatum ferunt; Saluti Petilium perlitasse negant. inde consules praetoresque prouincias sortiti. Pisae Cn. Cornelio, Ligures <Q.> Petilio obuenerunt. praetores L. Papirius Maso urbanam, M. Aburius inter peregrinos sortiti sunt. M. Cornelius Scipio Maluginensis Hispaniam ulteriorem, L. Aquilius Gallus Siciliam habuit. duo deprecati sunt, ne in prouincias irent, M. Popilius in Sardiniam: Gracchum eam prouinciam pacare; ei T. Aebutium praetorem adiutorem ab senatu datum esse. interrumpi tenorem rerum, in quibus peragendis continuatio ipsa efficacissima esset, minime conuenire; inter traditionem imperii nouitatemque successoris, quae noscendis prius quam agendis rebus inuenda sit, saepe bene gerendae rei occasiones intercidere. probata Popilii excusatio est. P. Licinius Crassus sacrificiis se impediri sollemnibus excusabat, ne in prouinciam iret; <ei> citerior Hispania obuenerat. ceterum aut ire iussus aut iurare pro contione sollemni sacrificio se prohiberi. id ubi in P. Licinio ita statutum est, et ab se uti iusiurandum acciperent M. Cornelius postulauit, ne in Hispaniam ulteriorem iret. praetores ambo in eadem uerba iurarunt. M. Titinius et <T.> Fonteius proconsules manere cum eodem imperii iure in Hispania iussi; et ut in supplementum his tria milia ciuium Romanorum cum equitibus ducentis, quinque milia socium Latini nominis et trecenti equites mitterentur.

Petilius cum primum per auspicia posset, collegae subrogando comitia habere iussus et Latinas edicere, comitia in <ante> diem tertium nonas Sextiles, <Latinas> in ante diem tertium idus Sextiles edixit. plenis religionum animis prodigia insuper nuntiata: Tusculi facem in caelo uisam, Gabiis aedem Apollinis et priuata aedificia conplura, Grauisus murum portamque de caelo tacta. ea patres procurari, uti pontifices censuissent, iusserunt. dum consules primum religiones, deinde alterum alterius mors et comitia et Latinarum instauratio inpediunt, interim C. Semproni prospere gestas diis immortalibus honos haberetur ipsique decedenti de prouincia exercitum secum deportare liceret. senatus in aede Apollinis legatorum uerbis auditis supplicationem in biduum decreuit, et quadraginta maioribus hostiis consules sacrificare iussit, Ti. Sempronium proconsulem exercitumque eo anno in prouincia manere. comitia deinde consulis unius subrogandi, <quae in> ante diem tertium nonas Sextiles edicta erant, eo ipso die sunt confecta. Q. Petilius consul collegam, qui extemplo magistratum occiperet, creauit C. Cn. Seruilio Caepioni in Hispaniam ulteriorem et P. Caepio pontifex, pater praetoris, et Ti. Sempronius Ti. filius Longus decemuir sacrorum et P. Aelius Paetus augur et Ti. Sempronius Gracchus et C. Mamilius Atellus curio maximus <et> M. Sempronius Tuditanus <pontifex>. pontifices suffecti sunt C. Sulpicius Galba * * * in locum Tuditani. augures suffecti sunt in Gracchi locum T. Ueturius Gracchus Sempronianus, in P. Aeli Q. Aelius Paetus. decemuir sacrorum C. Sempronius Longus, curio maximus C. Scribonius Curio sufficitur. cum pestilentiae finis non fieret, senatus decreuit, uti decemuiros libros Sibyllinos adirent. ex decreto eorum diem unum supplicatio fuit, et Q. Marcio Philippo uerba praeunte populus in foro uotum concepit, si morbus pestilentiaque ex agro Romano emota esset, biduum ferias ac supplicationem se habiturum. in Ueienti agro biceps natus puer, et Sinuessae unimanus, et Auximi puella cum dentibus, et arcus interdiu sereno caelo super aedem Saturni in foro Romano intentus, et tres simul soles effulserunt, et faces eadem nocte plures per caelum lapsae sunt, et Lanuuii Caeritesque anguem in oppido suo iubatum, aureis maculis sparsum, apparuisse adfirmabant, et in agro Campano bouem locutum esse satis constabat.

[22] legati nonis Iuniis ex Africa redierunt, qui conuento prius Masinissa rege Carthaginem ierant; ceterum certius aliquanto, quae Carthagine acta essent, ab rege scierant quam ab ipsis Carthaginensibus. conpertum tamen adfirmauerunt legatos ab rege Perseo uenisse, iisque noctu senatum in aede Aesculapi datum esse. ab Carthagine legatos in Macedoniam missos et rex adfirmauerat et ipsi parum constanter negauerant. in Macedoniam quoque mittendos legatos senatus censuit. tres missi sunt, C. Laelius M. Ualerius Messalla Sex. Digitius. Perseus per id tempus, quia quidam Dolopum non parebant et, de quibus ambigebatur rebus, disceptionem ab rege ad Romanos reuocabant, cum exercitu profectus sub ius iudiciumque suum totam coegit gentem. inde per Oetaeos montes transgressus, religionibus quibusdam animo obiectis, oraculum aditurus Delphos escendit. cum in media repente Graecia apparuisset, magnum non finitimis modo urbibus terrorem praebuit, sed in Asiam quoque ad regem Eumenen nuntios tumultuosos misit. triduum non plus Delphis moratus, per Pthiotidem Achaia Thessaliaque sine damno iniuriaque eorum, per quorum <fines> iter fecit, in regnum rediit. nec earum tantum ciuitatum, per quas iturus erat, satis habuit animos sibi conciliare; aut legatos aut litteras dimisit, petens, ne diutius simultatum, quae cum patre suo fuissent, meminissent; nec enim tam atroces fuisse eas, ut non cum ipso potuerint ac debuerint finiri; secum quidem omnia illis integra esse <ad> instituendam fideliter amicitiam; cum Achaeorum maxime gente reconciliandae gratiae uiam quaerebat.

[23] haec una ex omni Graecia gens et Atheniensium ciuitas eo processerat irarum, ut finibus interdiceret Macedonibus. itaque seruitiis ex Achaia fugientibus receptaculum Macedonia erat, quia, cum finibus suis <iis> interdixissent, intrare regni terminos ipsi non audebant. id cum Perseus animaduertisset, comprehensis omnibus litterae * * . ceterum ne similis fuga seruorum postea fieret, cogitandum et illis esse. recitatis his litteris per Xenarchum praetorem, qui priuatae gratiae aditum apud regem quaerebat, et plerisque moderate et benigne scriptas esse censentibus litteras, atque iis maxime, qui praeter spem recepturi essent amissa mancipia, Callicrates ex iis, qui in eo uerti salutem gentis crederent, si cum Romanis inuiolatum foedus seruaretur, ‘parua’ inquit ‘aut mediocris res, Achaei, quibusdam uidetur agi: ego maxumam grauissimamque omnium non agi tantum arbitror, sed quodam modo actam esse. nam qui regibus Macedonum Macedonibusque ipsis finibus interdixissemus manereque id decretum <sciremus, quo caueramus>, scilicet ne legatos, ne nuntiosmitteremus regum, per quos aliquorum ex nobis animi sollicitarentur, ii contionantem quodam modo absentem audimus regem, et, si dis placet, orationem eius probamus. et cum ferae bestiae cibum ad fraudem suam positum plerumque aspernentur et refugiant, nos caeci specie parui beneficii inescamur et seruulorum minimi pretii recipiendorum spe nostram ipsorum libertatem subruere et temptari patimur. quis enim non uidet uiam regiae societatis quaeri, qua Romanum foedus, quo nostra omnia continentur, uioletur? nisi hoc dubium alicui est, bellandum Romanis cum Perseo esse et, quod uiuo Philippo expectatum, morte eius interpellatum est, id post mortem Philippi futurum. duos, ut scitis, habuit filios Philippus, Demetrium et Persea. genere materno, uirtute, ingenio, fauore Macedonum longe praestitit Demetrius. sed quia in Romanos odii regnum posuerat praemium, Demetrium nullo alio crimine quam Romanae amicitiae initae occidit; Persea, quem <belli cum> populo Romano prius paene quam regni heredem futurum sciebat, regem fecit. itaque quid hic post mortem patris egit aliud quam bellum parauit? Bastarnas primum ad terrorem omnium <in> Dardaniam inmisit; qui si sedem eam tenuissent, grauiore eos accolae Graecia habuisset, quam Asia Gallos habebat. ea spe depulsus non tamen belli consilia omisit; immo, si uere uolumus dicere, iam incohauit bellum. Dolopiam armis subegit nec prouocantis de controuersiis ad disceptationem populi Romani audiuit. inde transgressus Oetam, ut repente in medio umbilico Graeciae conspiceretur, Delphos descendit. haec usurpatio itineris insoliti quo uobis spectare uidetur? Thessaliam deinde peragrauit; quod sine ullius eorum, quos oderat, noxa, hoc magis temptationem metuo. inde litteras ad nos cum muneris specie misit et cogitare iubet, quo modo in reliquum hoc munere non egeamus, hoc est, ut decretum, quo arcentur Peloponneso Macedones, tollamus, rursus legatos regios et hospitium cum principibus et mox Macedonum exercitus, ipsum quoque a Delphis++quantum enim interfluit fretum? ++traicientem in Peloponnesum uideamus, inmisceamur Macedonibus armantibus se aduersus Romanos. ego nihil noui censeo decernendum seruandaque omnia integra, donec ad certum redigatur, uanusne hic timor noster an uerus fuerit. si pax inuiolata inter Macedonas Romanosque manebit, nobis quoque amicitia et commercium sit; nunc de eo <cogitare> periculosum et inmatuum uidetur’.

[24] post hunc Archo, frater Xenarchi praetoris, ita disseruit: ‘difficilem orationem Callicrates et mihi et omnibus, qui ab eo dissentimus, fecit: agendo enim Romanae societatis causam ipse temptarique et oppugnari dicendo, quam nemo neque temptat neque oppugnat, effecit, ut, qui ab se dissentiret, aduersus Romanos dicere uideretur. ac primum omnium, tamquam non hic nobiscum fuisset, sed aut ex curia populi Romani ueniret aut regum arcanis interesset, omnia scit et nuntiat, quae occulte facta sunt. diuinat etiam, quae futura fuerint, si Philippus uiuisset, quid ita Perseus regni heres sit, quid parent Macedones, quid cogitent Romani. nos autem, qui nec ob quam causam nec quem ad modum perierit Demetrius scimus, nec, quid Philippus, si uiuisset, facturus fuerit, ad haec, quae palam

geruntur, consilia nostra accommodare oportet. ac scimus Persea regno accepto regem a populo Romano appellatum; audimus legatos Romanos uenisse ad regem Persea et eos benigne exceptos. haec omnia pacis equidem signa esse iudico, non belli; nec Romanos offendi posse, si ut bellum gerentes eos secuti sumus, nunc quoque pacis auctores sequamur. cur quidem nos inexpiabile omnium soli bellum aduersus regnum Macedonum geramus, non uideo. opportuni propinquitate ipsa Macedoniae sumus? an infirmissimi omnium, tamquam, quos nuper subegit, Dolopes? immo contra ea uel uiribus nostris, deum benignitate, uel regionis interuallo tuti. sed simus aequae subiecti ac Thessali Aetolique: nihilo plus fidei auctoritatisque habemus aduersus Romanos, qui semper socii atque amici fuimus, quam Aetoli, qui paulo ante hostes fuerunt? quod Aetolis, quod Thessalis, quod Epirotis, omni denique Graeciae cum Macedonibus iuris est, idem et nobis sit. cur execrabilis ista nobis solis uelut dissertio iuris humani est? fecerit aliquid Philippus, cur aduersus eum armatum et bellum gerentem hoc decerneremus; quid Perseus, nouus rex, omnis iniuriae insons, suo beneficio paternas simultates obliterans, meruit, cur soli omnium hostes ei simus? quamquam et illud dicere poteram, tanta priorum Macedoniae regum merita erga nos fuisse, ut Philippi unius iniurias, si quae forte fuerunt, utique post mortem <obliterent. non uenit in mentem,> cum classis Romana Cenchreis staret, consul cum exercitu Elatiae esset, triduum nos in concilio fuisse consultantis, utrum Romanos an Philippum sequeremur? nihil metus praesens ab Romanis sententias nostras inclinarit: fuit certe tamen aliquid, quod tam longam deliberationem faceret; idque erat uetusta coniunctio cum Macedonibus, uetera et magna in nos regum merita. ualeant et nunc eadem illa, non ut praecipue amici, sed ne praecipue inimici simus. ne id, quod non agitur, Callicrates, simulauerimus agi. nemo nouae societatis aut noui foederis, quo nos temere inligemus, conscribendi est auctor; sed commercium tantum iuris praebendi repetendique sit, ne interdictione finium nostrorum nos quoque <terminis> regni arceamus; ne seruis nostris aliquo fugere liceat, quid hoc aduersus Romana foedera est? quid rem paruam et apertam magnam et suspectam facimus? quid uanos tumultus ciemus? quid, ut ipsi locum adsentandi Romanis habeamus, suspectos alios <et> inuisos efficimus? si bellum erit, ne Perseus quidem dubitat, quin Romanos secuturi simus; in pace, etiam si non finiuntur odia, intermittantur.’ cum iidem huic orationi, qui litteris regis adsensi erant, adsentirentur, indignatione principum, quod, quam rem ne legatione quidem dignam iudicasset Perseus, litteris paucorum uersuum impetraret, decretum differtur. legati deinde postea missi ab rege, cum Megalopoli concilium esset, dataque opera est ab iis, qui offensionem apud Romanos timebant, ne admitterentur.

[25] per haec tempora Aetolorum in semet ipsos uersus furor mutuis caedibus ad internecionem adducturus uidebatur gentem. fessi deinde et Romam utraque pars miserunt legatos et inter se ipsi de reconcilianda concordia agebant; quae nouo facinore discussa res ueteres etiam iras excitauit. exulibus Hypataeis, qui factionis Proxeni erant, cum reditus in patriam promissus esset fidesque data per principem ciuitatis Eupoleum, octoginta inlustres homines, quibus redeuntibus inter ceteram multitudinem Eupolemus etiam obuius exierat, cum salutatione benigna excepti essent dextraeque datae, ingredienti portam, fidem datam deosque testis nequiquam inuocantes interfecti sunt. inde grauius de integro bellum exarsit. C. Ualerius Laeuinus et Ap. Claudius Pulcher et C. Memmius et M. Popilius et L. Canuleius missi ab senatu uenerant. apud eos cum Delphis utriusque partis legati magno certamine agerent, Proxenus maxime cum causa, tum eloquentia praestare uisus est; qui paucos post dies ab Orthobula uxore ueneno est sublatus; damnataque eo crimine in exilium abiit. idem furor et Cretenses lacerabat. aduentu deinde Q. Minuci legati, qui cum decem nauibus missus ad sedanda eorum certamina erat, <ad> spem pacis uenerant. ceterum indutiae tantum sex mensum fuerunt; inde multo grauius bellum exarsit. Lycii quoque per idem tempus ab Rhodiis bello uexabantur. sed externorum inter se bella, quo quaeque modo gesta sint, persequi non operae est satis superque oneris sustinenti res a populo Romano gestas perscribere.

[26] Celtiberi in Hispania, qui bello domiti se Ti. Graccho dediderant, pacati manserant M. Titinio praetore obtinente prouinciam. rebellarunt sub aduentum Ap. Claudi orsique bellum sunt ab repentina oppugnatione castrorum Romanorum. prima lux ferme erat, cum uigiles in uallo quique in portarum stationibus erant, cum uidissent procul uenientem hostem, ad arma conclamauerunt. Ap. Claudius, signo proposito pugnae ac paucis adhortatus milites, tribus simul portis eduxit. obsistentibus ad exitum Celtiberis primo par utrimque proelium fuit, quia propter angustias non omnes in faucibus pugnare poterant Romani; urgentes deinde alii alios secuti <ubi> euaserunt extra uallum, ut pandere aciem et exaequari cornibus hostium, quibus circumibantur, possent, ita repente inruperunt, ut sustinere impetum eorum Celtiberi nequirent. ante horam secundam pulsati sunt; ad quindecim milia <caesa aut> capta, signa adempta duo et triginta. castra etiam eo die expugnata debellatumque; nam qui superfuere proelio, in oppida sua dilapsi sunt. quieti deinde paruerunt imperio.

[27] censores eo anno creati Q. Fuluius Flaccus et A. Postumius Albinus legerunt senatum; princeps lectus M. Aemilius Lepidus pontifex maximus. de senatu nouem eiecerunt; insignes notae fuerunt M. Corneli Maluginensis, qui biennio ante praetor in Hispania fuerat, et L. Corneli Scipionis praetoris, cuius tum inter ciuis et peregrinos iurisdictio erat, et L. Fului, qui frater germanus et, ut Ualerius Antias tradit, consors etiam censoris erat. consules uotis in Capitolio nuncupatis in prouincias profecti sunt. ex iis M. Aemilio senatus negotium dedit, ut Patauinorum in Uenetia seditionem conprimeret, quos certamine factionum ad intestinum bellum exarsisse et ipsorum legati attulerant. legati, qui in Aetoliam ad similis motus comprimendos ierant, renuntiarunt coerceri rabiem gentis non posse. Patauinis saluti fuit aduentus consulis; neque aliud, quod ageret in prouincia, cum habuisset, Romam redit. censores uias sternendas silice in urbe, glarea extra urbem substruendas marginandasque primi omnium locauerunt, pontesque multis locis faciendos; et scaenam aedilibus praetoribusque praebendam; et carceres in circo, et oua ad no<tas> curriculis numerand<is> dam, et metas trans. et caueas ferreas, pe<r quas> intromitterentur. . . . feriis in monte Albano consulibus, et cliuom Capitolinum silice sternendum curauerunt, et porticum ab aede Saturni in Capitolium ad senaculum, ac super id curiam. et extra portam Trigeminam emporium lapide strauerunt stipitibusque saepserunt, et porticum Aemiliam reficiendam curarunt, gradibusque ascensum ab Tiberi in emporium fecerunt. et intra eandem portam in

LIBER XLII

[1] L. Postumius Albinus M. Popilius Laenas <consules> cum omnium primum de prouinciis <et> exercitibus ad senatum rettulissent, Ligures utrique decreti sunt, ut nouas ambo, quibus eam prouinciam obtinerent, legiones — binae singulis decretae — et socium Latini nominis dena milia peditum et sescenos equites, et supplementum Hispaniae tria milia peditum Romanorum scriberent et ducentos equites. ad hoc mille et quingenti pedites Romani cum centum equitibus scribi iussi, cum quibus praetor, cui Sardinia obtigisset, in Corsicam transgressus bellum gereret; interim M. Atilius, uetus praetor, prouinciam obtineret Sardiniam. praetores deinde prouincias sortiti sunt, A. Atilius Serranus urbanam, C. Cluius Saxula inter ciues et peregrinos, N. Fabius Buteo Hispaniam citeriorem, M. Matienus ulteriorem, M. Furius Crassipes Siciliam, C. Cicereius Sardiniam. priusquam in <prouincias> magistratus proficiscerentur, senatui placuit, L. Postumium consulem ad agrum publicum a priuato terminandum in Campaniam ire, cuius ingentem modum possidere priuatos paulatim proferendo fines constabat. hic iratus Praenestinis, quod, cum eo priuatus sacrificii in templo Fortunae faciundi causa profectus esset, nihil in se honorifice neque publice neque priuatim factum a Praenestinis esset, priusquam ab Roma proficisceretur, litteras Praeneste misit, ut sibi magistratus obuiam exiret, locum publice pararent, ubi deuerteretur, iumentaue, cum exiret inde, praesto essent. ante hunc consulem nemo umquam sociis in ulla re oneri aut sumptui fuit. ideo magistratus mulis tabernaculisque et omni alio instrumento militari ornabantur, ne quid tale imperarent sociis. priuata hospitia habebant; ea benigne comiterque colebant, domusque eorum Romae hospitibus patebant, apud quos ipsis deuerti mos esset. legati, qui repente aliquo mitterentur, singula iumenta per oppida, iter qua faciundum erat, imperabant; aliam inpensam socii in magistratus Romanos non faciebant. ira consulis, etiamsi iusta, non tamen in magistratu exercenda, et silentium nimis aut modestum aut timidum Praenestinatorum ius, uelut probato exemplo, magistratibus fecit grauiorum in dies talis generis imperiorum.

[2] Principio huius anni legati, qui in Aetoliam et Macedoniam missi erant, renuntiarunt, sibi conueniendi regis Persei, cum alii abesse eum, alii aegrum esse, falso utrumque, fingerent, potestatem non factam. facile tamen apparuisse sibi, bellum parari, nec ultra ad arma ire <regem> dilaturum. item in Aetolia seditionem gliscere in dies, neque discordiarum principes auctoritate sua coerceri potuisse. cum bellum Macedonicum in expectatione esset, priusquam id susciperetur, prodigia expiari pacemque deum peti precationibus, qui editi ex fatalibus libris essent, placuit. Lanuui classis magnae species in caelo uisa dicebatur, et Priuerni lana pulla terra enata, et in Ueienti apud Rementem lapidatum; Pomptinum omne uelut nubibus lucustarum coopertum esse; in Gallico agro, qua induceretur aratrum, sub existentibus glaebis pisces emersisse. ob haec prodigia libri fatales inspecti, editumque ab decemuiris est, et quibus diis quibusque hostiis sacrificaretur, et ut supplicatio prodigiis expiandis fieret, alteraque, <quae> priore anno uoletudinis populi causa uota esset, ea uti fier<et fer>iaequae essent. itaque sacrificatum est, ut decemuiri scriptum ediderant.

[3] Eodem anno aedis Iunonis Lacinae detecta. Q. Fuluius Flaccus censor aedem Fortunae equestris, quam in Hispania praetor bello Celtiberico uouerat, faciebat enixio studio, ne ullum Romae amplius aut magnificentius templum esset. magnum ornatum ei templo ratus adiecturum, si tegulae marmoreae essent, profectus in Bruttios aedem Iunonis Lacinae ad partem dimidiam detegit, id satis fore ratus ad tegendum, quod aedificaretur. naues paratae fuerunt, quae tollerent atque asportarent, auctoritate censoria sociis deterritis id sacrilegium prohibere. postquam censor rediit, tegulae expositae de nauibus ad templum portabantur. quamquam, unde essent, silebatur, non tamen celari potuit. fremitus igitur in curia ortus est; ex omnibus partibus postulabatur, ut consules eam rem ad senatum referrent. ut uero accersitus in curiam censor uenit, multo infestius singuli uniuersique praesentem lacerare: templum augustissimum regionis eius, quod non Pyrrhus, non Hannibal uiolassent, uiolare parum habuisse, nisi detexisset foede ac prope diruisset. detractum culmen templo, nudatum tectum patere imbribus putrefaciendum. <ad> id censorem moribus regendis creatum? cui sarta tecta exigere sacris publicis et loca * * tuenda more maiorum traditum esset, eum per sociorum urbes diruentem templa nudantemque tecta aedium sacrarum uagari. et quod, si in priuatis sociorum aedificiis faceret, indignum uideri posset, id eum <templa deum> immortalium demolientem facere, et obstringere religione populum Romanum, ruinis templorum templa aedificantem, tamquam non iidem ubique di immortales sint, sed spoliis aliorum alii colendi exornandique. cum, priusquam referretur, appareret, quid sentirent patres, relatione facta in unam omnes sententiam ierunt, ut eae tegulae reportandae in templum <locarentur> piaculariaque Iunoni fierent. quae ad religionem pertinebant, cum cura facta; tegulas relictas in area templi, quia reponendarum nemo artifex inire rationem potuerit, redemptores nuntiarunt.

[4] Ex praetoribus, qui in prouincias ierant, N. Fabius Massiliae moritur, cum in citeriorem Hispaniam iret. itaque cum id nuntiatum  Massiliensibus legatis esset, senatus decreuit, ut P. Furius et Cn. Seruilius, quibus succedebatur, inter se sortirentur, uter citeriorem Hispaniam prorogato imperio obtineret. sors opportuna fuit, <ut> P. Furius idem, cuius ea prouincia fuerat, remaneret.

Eodem anno, cum agri Ligustini et Gallici, quod bello captum erat, aliquantum uacaret, senatus consultum factum, ut is ager uiritim diuideretur. decemuiros in eam <rem> ex senatus consulto creauit A. Atilius praetor urbanus M. Aemilium Lepidum C. Cassium T. Aebutium Parrum C. Tremellium P. Cornelium Cethegum Q. et L. Apuleios M. Caecilium C. Salonium C. Munatium. diuiserunt dena iugera in singulos, sociis nominis Latini terna.

Per idem tempus, quo haec agebantur, legati ex Aetolia Romam uenerunt de discordiis seditionibusque suis, et Thessali legati nuntiantes, quae in Macedonia gererentur.

[5] Perseus bellum iam uiuo patre cogitatum in animo uoluens omnis non gentes modo Graeciae, sed ciuitates etiam legationibus mittendis, pollicendo plura quam praestando, sibi conciliabat. erant autem magnae partis hominum ad fauorem eius inclinati animi, et aliquanto quam in Eumenem propensiores, cum Eumenis beneficiis muneribusque omnes Graeciae ciuitates et plerique principum obligati essent, et ita se in regno suo gereret, ut, quae sub ditione eius urbes <essent>, nullius liberae ciuitatis fortunam secum mutatam uellent. contra Persea fama erat post patris mortem uxorem

manu sua occidisse; Apellem, ministrum quondam fraudis in fratre tollendo atque ob id [et] quaesitum a Philippo ad supplicium, exulantem accersitum post patris mortem ingentibus promissis ad praemia tantae perpetratae rei clam interfecisse. intestinis externisque praeterea multis caedibus infamem nec ullo commendabilem merito praeferabant uulgo ciuitates tam pio erga propinquos, tam iusto in ciuis, tam munifico erga omnes homines regi, seu fama et maiestate Macedonum regum praeoccupati ad spernendam originem noui regni, seu mutationis rerum cupidi, seu quia <sua> non obiecta esse Romanis uolebant. erant autem non Aetoli modo in seditionibus propter ingentem uim aeris alieni, sed Thessali etiam; et contagione, uelut tabes, in Perrhaebiam quoque id peruaserat malum. cum Thessalos in armis esse nuntiatum esset, Ap. Claudium legatum ad eas res aspiciendas componendasque senatus misit. qui utriusque partis principibus castigatis, cum iniusto faenore grauatum aes alienum, ipsis magna ex parte concedentibus, qui onerarent, leuasset, iusti crediti solutionem in decem annorum pensiones distribuit. per eundem Appium eodemque modo conpositae in Perrhaebia res. Aetolorum causas <M.> Marcellus Delphis per idem tempus <iisdem> hostilibus actas animis, quos intestino gesserant bello, cognouit. cum certatum utrimque temeritate atque audacia cerneret, decreto quidem suo neutram partem aut leuare aut onerare uoluit; communiter ab utrisque petit, abstinere bello et obliuione praeteritorum discordias finirent. huius reconciliationis inter ipsos fides obsidibus ultro citroque datis firmata est. Corinthus, ubi deponerentur obsides, conuenit.

[6] A Delphis et Aetolico concilio Marcellus in Peloponnesum traiecit <Aegium>, quo Achaeis edixerat conuentum. ubi conlaudata gente, quod constanter uetus decretum de arcendis aditu finium regibus Macedonum tenuissent, insigne aduersus Persea odium Romanorum fecit; quod ut maturius erumperet, Eumenes rex commentarium ferens secum, quod de apparatus belli omnia inquirens fecerat, Romam uenit. per idem tempus quinque legati ad regem missi, qui res in Macedonia aspicerent. Alexandriam iidem ad Ptolemaeum renouandae amicitiae causa proficisci iussi. legati erant hi: C. Ualerius C. Lutatius Cerco Q. Baebius Sulca M. Cornelius Mammula M. Caecilius Denter. et <ab> Antiocho rege sub idem tempus legati uenerunt; quorum princeps Apollonius in senatum introductus multis iustisque causis regem excusauit, quod stipendium serius quam ad diem praestaret; id se omne aduexisse, ne cuius nisi temporis gratia regi fieret. donum praeterea afferre, uasa aurea quingentum pondo. petere regem, ut, quae cum patre suo societas atque amicitia fuisset, ea secum renouaretur, imperaretque sibi populus Romanus, quae bono fidelique socio regi essent imperanda; se <in> nullo usquam cessaturum officio. ea merita in <se> senatus fuisse, cum Romae esset, eam comitatem iuuentutis, ut pro rege, non pro obside omnibus ordinibus fuerit. legatis benigne responsum, et societatem renouare cum Antiocho, quae cum patre eius fuerat, A. Atilius praetor urbanus iussus. quaestores urbani stipendium, uasa aurea censores acceperunt, eisque negotium datum est, ut ponerent ea, in quibus templis uideretur; legato centum milium aeris munus missum et aedes liberae hospitio datae sumptusque decretus, donec in Italia esset. legati, qui in Syria fuerant, renuntiauerant, in maximo eum honore apud regem esse amicissimumque populo Romano.

[7] In prouinciis eo anno haec <acta>. C. Cicereius praetor in Corsica signis conlatis pugnavit; septem milia Corsorum caesa, capti amplius mille et septingenti. uouerat in ea pugna praetor aedem Iunoni Monetae. pax deinde data petentibus Corsis, et exacta cerae ducenta milia pondo. ex Corsica subacta Cicereius in Sardiniam transmisit. et in Liguribus in agro Statellati pugnatum ad oppidum Carystum. eo se magnus exercitus Ligurum contulerat. primo sub aduentum M. Popili consulis moenibus sese continebant; deinde, postquam oppidum oppugnaturum Romanum cernebant, progressi ante portas aciem struxerunt. nec consul, ut qui id ipsum oppugnatione comminanda quaesisset, moram certamini fecit. pugnatum amplius tris est horas ita, ut neutro inclinaret spes. quod ubi consul uidit nulla parte moueri Ligurum signa, imperat equitibus, ut equos conscendant ac tribus simul partibus in hostis, quanto maximo possent tumultu, incurrant. pars magna equitum mediam traiecit aciem et ad terga pugnantium peruasit. inde terror iniectus Liguribus; diuersi in omnes partes fugerunt, perpauca retro in oppidum, quia inde se maxime obiecerat eques. et pugna tam peruehax multos absumpserat Ligurum, et in fuga passim caesi sunt. decem milia hominum caesa traduntur, amplius septingenti [passim] capti, signa militaria relata octoginta duo. <nec> incruenta uictoria fuit: amplius tria milia militum amissa, cum cedentibus neutris ex parte utraque primores caderent.

[8] Post hanc pugnam ex diuersa fuga in unum collecti Ligures, cum maiorem multo partem ciuium amissam quam superesse cernerent — nec enim plus decem milia hominum erant — , dediderunt sese, nihil quidem illi pacti; sperauerant tamen, <non> atrocius quam superiores imperatores consulem in se saeuiturum. at ille arma omnibus ademit, oppidum diruit, ipsos bonaque eorum uendidit; litterasque senatui de rebus ab se gestis misit. quas cum A. Atilius praetor in curia recitasset — nam consul alter Postumius agris recognoscendis in Campania occupatus aberat — , atrox res uisa senatui, Statellites, qui uni ex Ligurum gente non tulissent arma aduersus Romanos, tum quoque oppugnatos, non ultro inferentis bellum, deditos in fidem populi Romani omni ultimae crudelitatis exemplo laceratos ac deletos esse, tot milia capitum innoxiorum, fidem inplorantia populi Romani, ne quis umquam se postea dedere auderet, pessimo exemplo uenisse, et distractos passim iustis quondam hostibus populi Romani pacatos seruire. quas ob res placere senatui, M. Popilius consulem Ligures, pretio emptoribus reddito, ipsos restituere in libertatem, bonaque ut iis, quod eius recipari possit, reddantur curare; arma <quoque reddi, eaque omnia primo> quoque tempore fieri; nec ante consulem de prouincia decedere, quam deditos in sedem suam Ligures restituisset. claram uictoriam uincendo pugnantis, non saeuendo in adflictos fieri.

[9] Consul, qua ferocia animi usus erat in Liguribus, eandem ad non parendum senatui habuit. legionibus extemplo Pisas in hibernacula missis iratus patribus, infestus praetori Romam redit; senatuque extemplo ad aedem Bellonae uocato, multis uerbis inuectus in praetorem, qui, cum ob rem bello bene gestam uti diis immortalibus honos haberetur referre ad senatum debuisset, aduersus se pro hostibus senatus consultum fecisset, quo uictoriam suam ad Ligures transferret dedique iis prope consulem praetor iuberet: itaque multam ei se dicere; a patribus postulare, ut senatus consultum in se factum tolli iuberent, supplicationemque, quam absente se ex litteris de bene gesta re publica missis decernere debuerint, praesente se honoris deorum primum causa, deinde et sui aliquo tamen respectu decernerent. nihilo lenioribus, quam absens, senatorum aliquot orationibus increpitus neutra impetrata re in prouinciam redit.

Alter consul Postumius consumpta aestate in recognoscendis agris, ne uisa quidem prouincia sua comitiorum causa Romam rediit. consules C. Popilium Laenatem P. Aelium Ligurem creauit. praetores exinde facti C. Licinius Crassus M. Iunius Pennus Sp. Lucretius Sp. Cluuius Cn. Sicinius C. <Memmius> iterum.

[10] Eo anno lustrum conditum est; censores erant Q. Fuluius <Flaccus A. Postumius> Albinus; Postumius condidit. censa sunt ciuium Romanorum capita ducenta sexaginta nouem milia et quindecim, minor aliquanto numerus, quia L. Postumius consul pro contione edixerat, qui socium Latini nominis ex edicto C. Claudii consulis redire in ciuitates suas debuissent, ne quis eorum Romae, et omnes in suis ciuitatibus censerentur. concors et e re publica censura fuit. omnes, quos senatu mouerunt quibusque equos ademerunt, aerarios fecerunt et tribu mouerunt; neque ab altero notatum alter probauit. Fuluius aedem Fortunae equestris, quam proconsul in Hispania dimicans cum Celtiberorum legionibus uouerat, annis sex post, quam uouerat, dedicauit, et scaenicos ludos per quadriduum, unum diem in circo fecit.

L. Cornelius Lentulus, decemuir sacrorum, eo anno mortuus est. in locum eius suffectus A. Postumius Albinus. lucustarum tantae nubes a mari repente in Apuliam inlatae sunt, ut examinibus suis agros late operirent. ad quam pestem frugum tollendam Cn. Sicinius, praetor designatus, cum imperio <in> Apuliam missus, ingenti agmine hominum ad colligendas eas coacto aliquantum temporis absumpsit.

Principium insequentis anni, quo C. Popilius et P. Aelius fuerunt consules, residuas contentiones ex priore anno habuit. patres referri de Liguribus renouarique senatus consultum uolebant, et consul Aelius referebat. Popilius et collegam et senatum pro fratre deprecabatur, prae se ferens, si quid decernerent, intercessurum. collegam deterruit; patres eo magis, utrique pariter consuli infensi, in incepto perstabant. itaque cum de prouinciis ageretur et Macedonia iam imminente Persei bello peteretur, Ligures ambobus consulibus decernunt; Macedoniam decreturos negant, <ni> de M. Popilio referretur. postulantibus deinde, ut nouos exercitus scribere aut supplementum ueteribus liceret, utrumque negatum est. praetoribus quoque in Hispaniam supplementum petentibus negatum M. Iunio <in> citeriorem, Sp. Lucretio in ulteriorem. C. Licinius Crassus urbanam iurisdictionem, Cn. Sicinius inter peregrinos erat sortitus, C. Memmius Siciliam, Sp. Cluuius Sardiniam. consules ob ea irati senatui, Latinis feriis in primam quamque diem indictis, in prouinciam abituros esse denuntiarunt, nec quicquam rei publicae acturos, praeterquam quod ad prouinciarum administrationem adtineret.

[11] Attalum, regis Eumenis fratrem, legatum uenisse Romam Ualerius Antias his consulibus scribit ad deferenda de Perseo crimina indicandosque apparatus belli. plurium annales, et quibus credidisse malis, ipsum Eumenem uenisse tradunt. Eumenes igitur ut Romam uenit, exceptus cum tanto honore, quantum non meritis tantum eius, sed beneficiis etiam suis, ingentia quae in eum congesta erant, existimabant deberi, a praetore in senatum est introductus. causam ueniendi sibi Romam fuisse dixit praeter cupiditatem uidendi deos hominesque, quorum beneficio in ea fortuna esset, supra quam ne optare quidem auderet, etiam ut coram moneret senatum, ut Persei conatis obuiam iret. orsus inde a Philippi consiliis necem Demetrii filii rettulit, aduersantis Romano bello; Bastarnarum gentem excitam sedibus suis, quorum auxiliis fretus in Italiam transiret. haec secum uolutantem in animo, oppressum fato, regnum ei reliquisse, quem infestissimum esse sensisset Romanis. itaque Persea hereditarium  patre relictum bellum et simul cum imperio traditum, iamiam proximum alere ac fouere omnibus consiliis. florere praeterea iuuentute, quam stirpem longa pax ediderit, florere opibus regni, florere etiam aetate. quae cum corporis robore ac uiribus uigeat, animum esse inueteratum diutina arte atque usu belli. iam inde a puero patris contubernio Romanis quoque bellis, non finitumis tantum adsuetum, missum a patre in expeditiones multas uariasque. iam ex quo ipse accepisset regnum, multa, quae non ui, non dolo Philippus omnia expertus potuisset moliri, admirando rerum successu tenuisse. accessisse ad uires eam, quae longo tempore multis magnisque meritis pareretur, auctoritatem.

[12] Nam apud Graeciae atque Asiae ciuitates uereri maiestatem eius omnes. nec pro quibus meritis, pro qua munificentia tantum ei tribuatur, cernere nec dicere pro certo posse, utrum felicitate id quadam eius accidat, an, quod ipse uereatur dicere, inuidia aduersus Romanos fauorem illi conciliet. inter ipsos quoque reges ingentem auctoritate <esse>, Seleuci filiam duxisse eum, non petentem, sed petutum ultro; sororem dedisse Prusiae precanti at<que> oranti; celebratas esse utrasque nuptias gratulatione donis<que> innumerabilium legationum, et uelut auspiciis nobilissimis populis deductas esse. Boeotorum gentem, captatam Philipppo, numquam ad scribendum amicitiae foedus adduci potuisse; tribus nunc locis cum Perseo foedus incisum litteris esse, uno Thebis, altero ad Delium, augustissimo et celeberrimo in templo, tertio Delphis. in Achaico concilio uero, nisi discussa res per paucos Romanum imperium intentantis esset, eo rem prope adductam, ut aditus ei in Achaiam daretur. at hercule suos honores, cuius merita in eam gentem priuatim an publice sint maiora uix dici possit, partim desertos per incultum ac negligentiam, partim hostiliter sublato esse. iam Aetolos quem ignorare in seditionibus suis non ab Romanis, sed a Perseo praesidium petisse? his eum fultum societatibus atque amicitiiis eos domesticos apparatus belli habere, ut externis non egeat. triginta milibus peditum, quinque milibus equitum in decem annos frumentum praeparasse, ut abstinere et suo et hostium agro frumentandi causa possit. iam pecuniam tantam habere, ut decem milibus mercennariorum militum praeter Macedonum copias stipendium in totidem annos praeparatum habeat, praeter annum, quod ex metallis regiis capiat, uectigal. arma uel tribus tantis exercitibus in armamentaria conguessisse. iuuentutem, ut iam Macedonia deficiat, uelut ex perenni fonte unde hauriat, Threciam subiectam esse.

[13] Reliquom orationis adhortatio fuit. ‘non ego haec’ inquit ‘incertis iactata rumoribus et cupidius credita, quia uera esse de inimico crimina uolebam, adfero ad uos, patres conscripti, sed conperta et explorata, haud secus quam si speculator missus a uobis subiecta oculis referrem; neque relicto regno meo, quod amplum et egregium uos fecistis, mare tantum traiecissem, ut uana ad uos adferendo fidem abrogarem mihi; cernebam nobilissimas Asiae et Graeciae ciuitates in dies magis denudantis iudicia sua, mox, si permetteretur, eo processuras, unde receptum ad paenitendum non haberent; cernebam Persea non continentem se Macedoniae regno, alia armis occupantem, alia, quae ui subigi non possent, fauore ac beniuolentia conplectentem; uidebam, quam impar esset sors, cum ille uobis bellum <pararet>, uos ei securam pacem praestaretis, quamquam mihi quidem non parare, sed gerere paene bellum uidebatur. Abrupolim, socium atque amicum uestrum, regno expulit; Arthetaurum Illyrium, quia scripta ab eo quaedam uobis conperit, socium item atque amicum uestrum, interfecit; Euersam et Callicritum Thebanos, principes ciuitatis, quia liberius aduersus eum in concilio Boeotorum locuti fuerant delaturosque ad uos, quae agerentur, professi erant, tollendos curauit; auxilium Byzantiis aduersus foedus tulit; Dolopiae bellum intulit; Thessaliam et Doridem cum exercitu peruasit, ut in bello intestino deterioris partis auxilio meliorem adfligeret; confudit et miscuit omnia in Thessalia Perrhaebiaque spe nouarum tabularum, ut manu debitorum obnoxia sibi optumates opprimeret. haec cum uobis quiescentibus et patientibus fecerit et concessam sibi Graeciam esse a uobis uideat, pro certo habet neminem sibi, antequam in Italiam traiecerit, armatum occurrurum. hoc quam uobis tutum aut honestum sit, uos uideritis: ego certe mihi turpe esse duxi, prius Persea ad bellum inferendum, quam me socium ad praedicendum, ut caueretis, uenire in Italiam. functus necessario mihi officio, et quodam modo liberata atque exonerata fide mea, quid ultra facere possum, quam uti deos deasque precer, ut uos et uestrae rei publicae et nobis sociis atque amicis, qui ex uobis pendemus, consulatis?’

[14] Haec oratio mouit patres conscriptos. ceterum in praesentia nihil, praeterquam fuisse in curia regem, scire quisquam potuit: eo silentio clausa curia erat. bello denique perfecto, quaeque dicta ab rege quaeque responsa essent, emanauere.

Persei deinde regis legatis post paucos dies senatus datus est. ceterum praeoccupatis non auribus magis quam animis ab Eumene rege, omnis et defensio et deprecatio legatorum respuebatur; et exasperauit animos ferocia nimia Harpali, qui princeps legationis erat. is uelle quidem et laborare dixit regem, ut purganti, se nihil hostile dixisse aut fecisse, fides habeatur: ceterum si peruicacius causam belli quaeri uideat, forti animo defensurum se. Martem communem esse et euentum incertum belli.

Omnibus ciuitatibus Graeciae atque Asiae curae erat, quid Persei legati, quid Eumenes in senatu egisset; et propter aduentum eius, quem moturum aliquid rebantur, miserant pleraeque ciuitates alia in speciem praeferentis legatos. et legatio Rhodiorum ~erat hac falsa iturus princeps, haud dubius, quin Eumenes ciuitatis quoque suae <crimina> Persei criminibus iunxisset. itaque omni modo per patronos hospitesque disceptandi cum rege locum in senatu quaerebat. quod cum <non> contigisset, libertate intemperanti inuectus in regem, quod Lyciorum gentem aduersus Rhodios concitasset grauiorque Asiae esset, quam Antiochus fuisset, popularem quidem <neque Asiae> ingratham populis — nam eo quoque iam fauor Persei uenerat — orationem habuit, ceterum inuisam senatui inutilemque sibi et ciuitati suae. Eumeni uero conspiratio aduersus eum fauorem <maiolem> apud Romanos fecit. ita omnes ei honores habiti donaque quam amplissima data cum sella curuli atque eburneo scipione.

[15] Legationibus dimissis cum Harpalus, quanta maxima celeritate poterat, regressus in Macedoniam nuntiasse regi, nondum quidem parantis bellum reliquisse se Romanos, sed ita infestos, ut facile appareret, non dilaturos, et ipse, praeterquam quod et ita credebat futurum, iam etiam uolebat, in flore uirium se credens esse. Eumeni ante omnis infestus erat; a cuius sanguine ordiens bellum, Euandrum Cretensem, ducem auxiliorum, et Macedonas tres aduetos ministeriis talium facinorum ad caedem regis subornat litterasque eis dat ad Praxo hospitam, principem auctoritate et opibus Delphorum. satis constabat, Eumenem, ut sacrificaret Apollini, Delphos escensurum. praegressi cum Euandro insidiatores nihil aliud ad peragendum inceptum quam loci opportunitatem, omnia circumeuntes, quaerebant. escendentibus ad templum a Cirrha, priusquam perueniretur ad frequentia aedificiis loca, maceria erat ab laeua ad semitam paulum extantem a fundamento, qua singuli transirent; dextra pars labe terrae in aliquantum altitudinis derupta erat. post maceriam se abdiderunt gradibus adstructis, ut ex ea uelut e muro tela in praetereuntem conicerent. primo a mari circumfusa turba amicorum ac satellitum procedebat, deinde extenuabant paulatim angustiae agmen. ubi ad eum locum uentum est, qua singulis eundum erat, primus semitam ingressus Pantaleon, Aetoliae princeps, cum quo institutus regi sermo erat. tum insidiatores exorti saxa duo ingentia deuoluunt, quorum altero caput ictum est regi, altero umerus; sopitusque ex semita procidit in decliue, multis super prolapsus iam saxis congestis. et ceteri quidem, etiam amicorum et satellitum <turba>, postquam cadentem uidere, diffugiunt; Pantaleon contra inpauidus mansit ad protegendum regem.

[16] Latrones, cum breui circumitu maceriae decurrere ad conficiendum saucium possent, uelut perfecta re in iugum Parnasi refugerunt eo cursu, ut, cum unus non facile sequendo per inuia atque ardua moraretur fugam eorum, <ne> ex comprehenso indicium emanaret, occiderint comitem. ad corpus regis primo amici, deinde satellites ac serui concurrerunt; tollentes sopitum uolnere ac nihil sentientem, uiuere tamen ex calore et spiritu remanente in praecordiis senserunt: uicturum exigua ac prope nulla spes erat. quidam ex satellitibus secuti latronum uestigia, cum usque ad iugum Parnasi nequiquam fatigati peruenissent, re infecta redierunt. adgressi facinus Macedones ut <non> inconsulte ita audacter, coeptum nec consulte et timide reliquerunt. conpotem iam sui regem amici postero die deferunt ad nauem; inde Corinthum, ab Corintho per Isthmi iugum nauibus traductis, Aeginam traiciunt. ibi adeo secreta eius curatio fuit, admittentibus neminem, ut fama mortuum in Asiam perferret. Attalus quoque celerius, quam dignum concordia fraterna erat, credidit; nam et cum uxore fratris et praefecto arcis tamquam iam haud dubius regni heres est locutus. quae postea non fefellere Eumenen; et quamquam dissimulare et tacite habere et pati statuerat, tamen in primo congressu non temperauit, quin uxoris petendae <im>maturam festinationem fratri obiceret. Romam quoque fama de morte Eumenis perlata est.

[17] Sub idem tempus C. Ualerius ex Graecia, quo legatus ad uisendum statum regionis eius speculandaque consilia Persei regis ierat, rediit, congruentiaque omnia criminibus ab Eumene adlatis referebat. simul et adduxerat secum Praxo a Delphis, cuius domus receptaculum latronum fuerat, et L. Rammium Brundisinum, qui talis indicii delator erat. princeps Brundisi Rammius fuit; hospitioque et duces Romanos omnes et legatos, exterarum quoque gentium insignis, praecipue regios, accipiebat. ex eo notitia ei cum absente Perseo fuerat; litterisque spem amicitiae interioris magnaeque inde fortuna facientibus ad regem profectus breui perfamiliaris haberi trahique magis, quam uellet, in arcanos sermones est coeptus. promissis enim ingentibus praemiis petere institit ab eo rex, quoniam duces omnes legatique Romani hospitio eius uti adsuissent, quibus eorum ipse scripsisset, ut uenenum dandum curaret. cuius scire se conparationem plurimum difficultatis et periculi habere; pluribus consciis comparari; euentu praeterea incerto esse, ut aut satis efficacia ad rem peragendam aut tuta ad rem celandam dentur. se daturum, quod nec in dando nec datum ullo signo deprendi posset. Rammius ueritus, ne, si abnuisset, primus ipse ueneni experimentum esset, facturum pollicitus proficiscitur; nec Brundisium ante redire, quam conuento C. Ualerio legato, qui circa Chalcidem esse dicebatur, uoluit. ad eum primum indicio delato, iussu eius Romam simul uenit. introductus in curiam, quae acta erant, exposuit.

[18] Haec ad ea, quae ab Eumene delata erant, accessere, quo maturius hostis Perseus iudicaretur, quippe quem non iustum modo apparare bellum regio animo, sed per omnia clandestina grassari scelera latrociniorum ac ueneficiorum cernebant. belli administratio ad nouos consules reiecta est; in praesentia tamen Cn. Sicinium praetorem, cuius inter ciues et peregrinos iurisdictio erat, scribere milites placuit, qui Brundisium ducti primo quoque tempore Apolloniam in Epirum traicerentur ad occupandas maritimas urbes, ubi consul, cui prouincia Macedonia obuenerat, classem appellere tuto et copias per commodum exponere posset. Eumenes, aliquamdiu Aeginae retentus periculosa et difficili curatione, cum primum tuto potuit, profectus Pergamum, praeter pristinum odium recenti etiam scelere Persei stimulante <summa> ui parabat bellum. legati eo ab Roma gratulantes, quod e tanto periculo euasisset, uenerunt. cum Macedonicum bellum in annum dilatum esset, ceteris praetoribus iam in prouincias profectis, M. Iunius et Sp. Lucretius, quibus Hispaniae prouinciae obuenerant, fatigantes saepe idem petendo senatum, tandem peruicerunt, ut supplementum sibi ad exercitum daretur: tria milia peditum, centum et quinquaginta equites in Romanas legiones <scribere>, in socialem exercitum quinque milia peditum et trecentos equites imperare sociis iussi. hoc copiarum in Hispanias cum praetoribus nouis portatum est.

[19] Eodem anno, quia per recognitionem Postumi consulis magna pars agri Campani, quem priuati sine discrimine passim possederant, recuperata in publicum erat, M. Lucretius tribunus plebis promulgauit, ut agrum Campanum censores fruendum locarent, quod factum tot annis post captam Capuam non fuerat, ut in uacuo uageretur cupiditas priuatorum.

Cum <in> expectatione senatus esset bello etsi non indicto, tamen iam decreto, qui regum suam, qui Persei secuturi amicitiam essent, legati Ariarathis puerum filium regis secum adducentes Romam uenerunt; quorum oratio fuit, regem educendum filium Romam misisse, ut iam inde a puero adsuesceret moribus Romanis hominibusque. petere, ut eum non sub hospitum modo priuatorum custodia, sed publicae etiam curae ac uelut tutelae uellent esse. ea legatio grata senatui fuit; decreuerunt, ut Cn. Sicinius praetor aedis instruendas locaret, ubi filius regis comitesque eius habitare possent. et Threcum legatis, Maedis Cepnatisque et Astis societatem amicitiamque petentibus et, quod petebant, datum est, et munera <binum> milium aeris [summae] in singulos missa. hos utique populos, quod ab tergo Macedoniae Threcia esset, adsumptos in societatem gaudebant. sed ut in Asia quoque et insulis explorata omnia essent, Ti. Claudium Neronem M. Decimium legatos miserunt. adire eos Cretam et Rhodum iusserunt, simul renouare amicitiam, simul speculari, num sollicitati animi sociorum ab rege Perseo essent.

[20] In suspensa ciuitate ad expectationem noui belli, nocturna tempestate columna rostrata in Capitolio bello Punico <priore posita ob uictoriam M. Aemili> consulis, cui collega Ser. Fuluius fuit, tota ad imum fulmine discussa est. ea res prodigii loco habita ad senatum relata est; patres et <ad> haruspices referri et decemuiros adire libros iusserunt. decemuiri lustrandum oppidum, supplicationem obsecrationemque habendam, uictimis maioribus sacrificandum et in Capitolio Romae et in Campania ad Mineruae promunturium renuntiarunt; ludos per decem dies Ioui optimo maximo primo quoque die faciendos. ea omnia cum cura facta. haruspices in bonum uersurum id prodigium, prolationemque finium et interitum perduellium portendi responderunt, quod ex hostibus spolia fuissent ea rostra, quae tempestas disiecisset. accesserunt, quae cumularent religiones animis: Saturniae nuntiatum erat sanguine per triduum in oppido pluuisse; Calatiae asinum tripodem natum, et taurum cum quinque uaccis uno ictu fulminis exanimatos; Auximi terra pluuisse. horum quoque prodigiorum causa res diuinae factae et supplicatio unum diem feriaeque habitae.

[21] Consules ad id tempus in prouinciam non exierant, quia neque, uti de M. Popilio referrent, senatui obsequebantur, et nihil aliud decernere prius statutum patribus erat. aucta etiam inuidia est Popili litteris [eius], quibus iterum cum Statellatibus Liguribus proconsul pugnasse se scripsit ac sex milia eorum occidissee; propter cuius iniuriam belli ceteri quoque Ligurum populi ad arma ierunt. tum uero non absens modo Popilius, qui deditis contra ius ac fas bellum intulisset <et> pacatos ad rebellandum incitasset, sed consules, quod non exirent in prouinciam, in senatu increpiti. hoc consensu patrum accensi M. Marcius Sermo et Q. Marcius Scilla, tribuni plebis, et consulibus multam se dicturos, nisi in prouinciam exirent, denuntiarunt, et rogationem, quam de Liguribus deditis promulgare in animo haberent, in senatu recitarunt. sanciebatur, ut, qui ex Statellis deditis in libertatem restitutus ante kal. Sextiles primas non esset, cuius dolo malo is in seruitutem uenisset, ut iuratus senatus decerneret, qui eam rem quaereret animaduerneretque. ex auctoritate deinde senatus eam rogationem promulgarunt. priusquam proficiscerentur consules, C. Cicereio, <praetori> prioris anni, ad aedem Bellonae senatus datus est. is expositis, quas in Corsica res gessisset, postulatoque frustra triumpho, in monte Albano, quod iam in morem uenerat, ut sine publica auctoritate fieret, triumphauit. rogationem Marciam de Liguribus magno consensu plebes sciuit iussitque. ex eo plebiscito C. Licinius praetor consuluit senatum, quem quaerere ea rogatione uellet. patres ipsum eum quaerere iusserunt.

[22] Tum demum consules in prouinciam profecti sunt exercitumque a M. Popilio acceperunt. neque tamen M. Popilius reuerti Romam audebat, ne causam diceret aduerso senatu, infestiore populo, apud praetorem, qui de quaestione in se <pro>posita senatum consuluisset. huic detractationi eius tribuni plebis alterius rogationis denuntiatione occurrerunt, ut, si non ante idus Nouembres in urbem Romam introisset, de absente eo C. Licinius statueret ac iudicaret. hoc tractus uinculo cum redisset, ingenti cum inuidia in senatum uenit. ibi cum laceratus iurgiis multorum esset, senatus consultum factum est, ut, qui Ligurum post Q. Fuluium L. Manlium consules hostes non fuissent, ut eos C. Licinius Cn. Sicinius praetores in libertatem restituendos curarent, agrumque iis trans Padum consul C. Popilius daret. multa milia hominum hoc senatus consulto restituta in libertatem, transductisque Padum ager est adsignatus. M. Popilius rogatione Marcia bis apud C. Licinium causam dixit; tertio praetor, gratia consulis absentis et Popiliae familiae precibus uictus, idibus Martiis adesse reum iussit, quo die noui magistratus inituri erant honorem, ne diceret ius, qui priuatus futurus esset. ita rogatio de Liguribus arte fallaci elusa est.

[23] Legati Carthaginienses eo tempore Romae erant et Gulussa, filius Masinissae. inter eos magnae contentiones in senatu fuere. Carthaginienses querebantur, praeter agrum, de quo ante legati ab Roma, qui <in> re praesenti cognoscerent, missi essent, amplius septuaginta oppida castellaque agri Carthaginiensis biennio proximo Masinissam ui atque armis possedisse: id illi, cui nihil pensi sit, facile esse. Carthaginienses foedere inligatos silere; prohiberi enim extra fines efferre arma; quamquam sciant in suis finibus, si inde Numidas pellerent, se gesturos bellum, illo haud ambiguo capite foederis deterreri, quo diserte uenturum cum sociis populi Romani bellum gerere. sed iam ultra superbiam crudelitatemque et auaritiam eius pati non posse Carthaginienses. missos esse <se>, qui orarent senatum, ut trium harum rerum unam ab se impetrari sinerent: ut uel ex aequo in<ter regem> socium populumque <Carthaginiensem>, quid cuiusque esset, disceptarent; uel permetterent Carthaginiensibus, ut aduersus iniusta arma pio iustoque se tutarentur bello; uel ad extremum, si gratia plus quam ueritas apud eos ualeret, semel statuerent, quid donatum ex alieno Masinissae uellent. modestius certe daturos eos, et <se> scituros, quid dedissent; ipsum nullum praeterquam suae libidinis arbitrio <finem> facturum. horum si nihil impetrarent, et aliquod suum post datam a P. Scipione pacem delictum esset, ipsi potius animaduernerent in se. tutam seruitutem se sub dominis Romanis quam libertatem expositam ad iniurias Masinissae malle; perire denique semel ipsis satius esse, quam sub acerbissimi carnificis arbitrio spiritum ducere. sub haec dicta lacrimantes procubuerunt stratique humi non sibi magis misericordiam quam regi <inuidiam conciliarunt>.

[24] Interrogari Gulussam placuit, quid ad ea responderet, aut, si prius mallet expromere, super qua re Romam uenisset. Gulussa neque sibi facile esse dixit de iis rebus agere, de quibus nihil mandati a patre haberet, neque patri facile fuisse mandare, cum Carthaginienses nec, de qua re acturi essent, nec omnino ituros se Romam indicauerint. in aede Aesculapi clandestinum eos per aliquot noctes consilium principum habuisse, unde * * praeterea legatos occultis cum mandatis Romam mitti. eam causam fuisse patri mittendi se Romam, qui deprecaretur senatum, ne quid communibus inimicis criminantibus se <crederent>, quem ob nullam aliam causam nisi propter constantem fidem erga populum Romanum odissent. his utrimque auditis senatus, de postulatis Carthaginiensium consultus, responderi ita iussit: Gulussam placere extemplo in Numidiam proficisci et nuntiare patri, ut de iis, de quibus Carthaginienses querantur, legatos quam primum ad senatum mittat denuntietque Carthaginiensibus, ut ad disceptandum ueniant. se alia, quae possent, Masinissae honoris causa et fecisse et facturos esse; ius gratiae non dare. agrum, qua cuiusque sit, possideri uelle, nec novos statuere fines, sed ueteres obseruare in animo habere. Carthaginiensibus uictis se et urbem et agros concessisse, non ut in pace eriperent per iniuriam, quae iure belli non ademissent. ita regulus Carthaginiensesque dimissi. munera ex instituto data utrisque aliaque hospitalia comiter conseruata.

[25] Sub idem tempus Cn. Seruilius Caepio Ap. Claudius Cento T. Annius Luscus legati ad res repetendas in Macedoniam renuntiandamque amicitiam regi missi redierunt; qui iam sua sponte infestum Persei senatum insuper accenderunt, relatis ordine, quae uidissent quaeque audissent: uidisse se per omnes urbes Macedonum summa ui parari bellum. cum ad regem peruenissent, per multos dies conueniendi eius potestatem non factam; postremo, cum desperato iam conloquio profecti essent, tum demum se ex itinere reuocatos et ad eum introductos esse. suae orationis summam fuisse: foedus cum Philippo ictum <es>se, cum ipso eo post mortem patris renouatum, in quo diserte prohiberi eum extra fines arma efferre, prohiberi socios populi Romani lacessere bello. exposita deinde ab se ordine, quae ipsi nuper in senatu Eumenen uera omnia et conperta referentem audissent. Samothracae praeterea per multos dies occultum consilium cum legationibus ciuitatum Asiae regem habuisse. pro his iniuriis satisfieri senatum aecum censere, reddique sibi res sociisque suis, quas contra ius foederis habeat. regem ad ea primo accensum ira inclementer locutum, auaritiam superbiamque Romanis obicentem frementemque, quod alii super alios legati uenirent speculatum dicta factaque sua, quod se ad nutum imperiumque eorum omnia dicere ac facere aecum censerent; postremo multum ac diu uociferatum reuerti postero die iussisse: scriptum se responsum dare uelle. tum ita sibi scriptum traditum esse: foedus cum patre ictum ad se nihil pertinere; id se renouari, non quia probaret, sed quia in noua possessione regni patienda omnia essent, passum. nouom foedus si secum facere uellent, conuenire prius de condicionibus debere; si in animum inducerent, ut ex aequo foedus fieret, et se uisurum, quid sibi faciendum esset, et illos credere e re publica consulturos. atque ita se proripuisse, et summoueri e regia omnes coeptos. tum se amicitiam et societatem renuntiasset. qua uoce eum accensum restitisse atque uoce clara denuntiasset sibi, ut triduo regni sui decederent finibus. ita se profectos; nec sibi aut manentibus <aut abeuntibus> quidquam hospitaliter aut benigne factum. Thessali deinde Aetolique legati auditi. senatui, ut scirent quam primum, quibus ducibus usura res publica esset, litteras mitti consulibus placuit, ut, uter eorum posset, Romam ad magistratus creandos ueniret.

[26] Nihil magnopere, quod memorari adtineat, rei publicae eo anno consules gesserant. magis e re publica uisum erat, conprimi ac sedari exasperatos Ligures. cum Macedonicum bellum expectaretur, Gentium quoque, Illyriorum regem, suspectum Issaei legati fecerunt, simul questi fines suos eum depopulatum, simul nuntiantes uno animo uiuere Macedonum atque Illyriorum regem; communi consilio parare Romanis bellum; et specie legatorum Illyrios speculatores Romae esse Perse auctore missos, ut, quid ageretur, scirent. Illyrii uocati in senatum; qui cum legatos se esse missos ab rege dicerent ad purganda crimina, si qua de rege Issaei deferrent, quaesitum est, quid ita non adissent magistratum, ut ex instituto loca, lautia acciperent, sciretur denique uenisse eos et super qua re uenissent? haesitantibus in responso, ut curia excederent, dictum; responsum tamquam legatis, qui ut adirent senatum non postulassent, dari non placuit; mittendosque ad regem legatos censuerunt, qui nuntiarent, quid socii quererentur; senatum existumare non aecum eum facere, qui ab sociis suis non abstinere iniuriam. in hanc legationem missi A. Terentius Uarro C. Plaetorius C. Cicereius. ex Asia, qui circa socios reges missi erant, redierunt legati, qui rettulerunt Eumenen <Aeg>inae, Antiochum in Syria, Ptolemaeum Alexandriae sese conuenisse. omnes sollicitatos legationibus Persei, sed egregie <in> fide permanere pollicitosque omnia, quae populus Romanus imperasset, praestatueros. et ciuitates socias adisse: ceteras satis fidas, Rhodios fluctuantis et inbutos Persei consiliis inuenisse. uenerant Rhodii legati ad purganda ea, quae uolgo iactari de ciuitate sciebant; ceterum senatum iis non <prius dari, quam no>ui consules magistratum inissent, placuit.

[27] Belli apparatus non differendum censuerunt. C. Licinio praetori negotium datur, ut ex ueteribus quinquereimis in naualibus Romae subductis, quae possent usui esse, reficeret pararetque naues quinquaginta. si quid ad eum numerum explendum deesset, C. Memmio collegae in Siciliam scriberet, ut eas, quae in Sicilia naues essent, reficeret atque expediret, ut Brundisium primo quoque tempore mitti possent. socios nauales libertini ordinis in uiginti et quinque naues exciuius Romanis C. Licinius praetor scribere iussus; in quinque et uiginti parem numerum Cn. Sicinius sociis imperaret; idem praetor peditum octo milia, quadringentos <equites> ab sociis Latini nominis exigeret. hunc militem qui Brundisi acciperet atque in Macedoniam mitteret, A. Atilius Serranus, qui priore anno praetor fuerat, deligitur. Cn. Sicinius praetor ut exercitum paratum ad traiciendum haberet, C. Popilio consuli ex auctoritate senatus C. Licinius praetor scribit, ut et legionem secundam, quae maxime ueterana in Liguribus erat, et <ex> sociis Latini nominis quattuor milia peditum, ducentos equites idibus Februariis Brundisi adesse iuberet. hac classe et hoc exercitu Cn. Sicinius prouinciam Macedoniam obtinere, donec successor ueniret, iussus, prorogato in annum imperio. ea omnia, quae senatus censuit, inpigre facta sunt. duodequadraginta quinquereimes ex naualibus deductae; qui deduceret eas Brundisium, L. Porcius Licinus praepositus; duodecim ex Sicilia missae. ad frumentum classi exercituique coemendum in Apuliam Calabriamque tres legati missi, Sex. Digitius T. Iuuentius

M. Caecilius. ad omnia praeparata Cn. Sicinius praetor, paludatus ex urbe profectus, Brundisium uenit.

[28] Exitu prope anni C. Popilius consul Romam redit aliquanto serius, quam <senatus> censuerat, cui primo quoque tempore magistratus creari, cum tantum bellum immineret, e re publica uisum erat. itaque non secundis auribus patrum auditus est consul, cum in aede Bellonae de rebus in Liguribus gestis dissereret. succlamationes frequentes erant interrogationesque, cur scelere fratris oppressos Ligures in libertatem non restituisset. comitia consularia, in quam edicta erant diem, ante diem duodecimum kal. Martias sunt habita. creati consules <P.> Licinius Crassus C. Cassius Longinus. postero die praetores facti C. Sulpicius Galba L. Furius Philus L. Canuleius Diues C. Lucretius <Gallus> C. Caninius Rebilus L. Uillius Annalis. his praetoribus prouinciae decretae, duae iure Romae dicendo, Hispania et Sicilia et Sardinia, ut uni sors integra esset, quo senatus censuisset. consulibus designatis imperauit senatus, ut, qua die magistratum inissent, hostiis maioribus rite mactatis precarentur, ut, quod bellum populus Romanus in animo haberet gerere, ut id prosperum eueniret. eodem die decreuit senatus, C. Popilius consul ludos per dies decem Ioui optumo maximo <fieri> uoueret donaque circa omnia puluinaria dari, <si> res publica decem annos in eodem statu fuisset. ita ut censuerant, in Capitolio uouit consul, ludos fieri donaque dari, quanta ex pecunia decresset senatus, cum centum et quinquaginta non minus adessent. praeunte uerba Lepido pontifice maximo id uotum susceptum est. eo anno sacerdotes publici mortui L. Aemilius Papus decemuir sacrorum et Q. Fuluius Flaccus pontifex, qui priore anno fuerat censor. hic foeda morte perit. ex duobus filiis eius, qui tum in Illyrico militabant, nuntiatum alterum <mortuum, alterum> graui et periculoso morbo aegrum esse. obruit animum simul luctus metusque: mane ingressi cubiculum serui laqueo dependentem inuenere. erat opinio post censuram minus conpotem fuisse sui; uulgo Iunonis Laciniae iram ob spoliatum templum alienasse mentem ferebant. suffectus in Aemili locum decemuir M. Ualerius Messalla; in Fului pontifex Cn. Domitius Ahenobarbus, oppido adulescens sacerdos, est lectus.

[29] P. Licinio C. Cassio consulibus non urbs tantum Roma nec terra Italia, sed omnes reges ciuitatesque, quae in Europa quaeque in Asia erant, conuerterant animos in curam Macedonici ac Romani belli. Eumenen cum uetus odium stimulabat, tum recens ira, quod scelere regis prope ut uictuma mactatus Delphis esset. Prusias, Bithyniae rex, statuerat abstinere armis <et> euentum expectare; nam neque Romanos posse aequom censere, aduersus fratrem uxoris <se> arma ferre, et apud Persea uictorem ueniam per sororem impetrabilem fore. Ariarathes, Cappadocum rex, praeterquam quod Romanis suo nomine auxilia pollicitus erat, ex quo est iunctus Eumeni adfinitate, in omnia belli pacisque se consociauerat consilia. Antiochus imminebat quidem Aegypti regno, et pueritiam regis et inertiam tutorum spernens; et ambigendo de Coele Syria causam belli se habiturum existumabat gesturumque id nullo impedimento occupatis Romanis in Macedonico bello; quod <ad> bellum tamen omnia et per suos legatos senatui et ipse legatis eorum enixe pollicitus erat. Ptolemaeus propter aetatem alieni etiam tum arbitrii erat; tutores et bellum aduersus Antiochum parabant, quo uindicarent Coelen Syriam, et Romanis omnia pollicebantur ad Macedonicum bellum. Masinissa et frumento iuuabat Romanos et auxilia cum elephantis Misagenenque filium mittere ad bellum parabat. consilia autem in omnem fortunam ita disposita habebat: si penes Romanos uictoria esset, sua quoque in eodem statu mansura esse, neque ultra quidquam mouendum; non enim passuros Romanos uim Carthaginiensibus adferri; si fractae essent opes Romanorum, quae tum protegerent Carthaginienses, suam omnem Africam fore. Gentius, rex Illyriorum, fecerat potius, cur suspectus esset Romanis, quam satis statuerat, utram foueret partem, impetuque magis quam consilio his aut illis se adiuncturus uidebatur. Cotys Thrax, Odrysarum rex, clam Macedonum partis erat.

[30] Haec sententia regibus cum esset de bello, in liberis gentibus populisque plebs ubique omnis ferme, ut solet, deterioris erat, ad regem Macedonasque inclinata; principum diuersa cerneret studia. pars ita in Romanos effusi erant, ut auctoritatem inmodico fauore corrumpere, pauci ex iis iustitia imperii Romani capti, plures ita, si praecipuam operam nauassent, potentes sese in ciuitatibus suis futuros rati. pars altera regiae adulationis erat; quosdam<dam> aes alienum et desperatio rerum suarum eodem manente statu praecipites ad nouanda omnia agebat; quosdam uentosum ingenium, quia <ad>

Persea magis aura popularis ierat. tertia pars, optuma eadem et prudentissima, si utique optio domini potioris daretur, sub Romanis quam sub rege malebat esse; si liberum in ea re arbitrium fortunae esset, neutram partem uolebant potentiores altera oppressa fieri, sed inlibatis potius uiribus utriusque partis pacem ex aequo manere; ita inter utrasque optimam condicionem ciuitatum fore. protegente altera semper inopem ab alterius iniuria. haec sentientes certamina fautorum utriusque partis taciti ex tuto spectabant.

Consules, quo die magistratum inierunt, ex senatus consulto cum circa omnia fana, in quibus lectisternium maiorem partem anni esse solet, maioribus hostiis immolassent, inde preces suas acceptas ab diis immortalibus ominati, senatui rite sacrificatum precationemque de bello factam renuntiarunt. haruspices ita responderunt: si quid rei nouae inciperetur, id maturandum esse; uictoriam, triumphum, propagationem <imperii portendi. patres, quod bonum faustum> felixque populo Romano esset, centuriatis comitiis primo <quoque> die ferre ad populum consules iusserunt, ut, quod Perseus Philippi filius, Macedonum rex, aduersus foedus cum patre Philippo ictum et secum post mortem eius renouatum sociis populi Romani arma intulisset, agros uastasset urbesque occupasset, quodque belli parandi aduersus populum Romanum consilia inisset, arma milites classem eius rei causa comparasset, ut, nisi de iis rebus satisfacisset, bellum cum eo iniretur. haec rogatio ad populum lata est.

[31] Senatus consultum inde factum est, ut consules inter se prouincias Italiam et Macedoniam compararent sortirentur; cui Macedonia obueneret, ut is regem Persea quique eius sectam secuti essent, nisi populo Romano satisfacissent, bello persequeretur. legiones quattuor nouas scribi placuit, binas singulis consulibus. id praecipui prouinciae Macedoniae datum, quod, cum alterius consulis legionibus quina milia et duceni pedites ex uetere instituto darentur in singulas legiones, in Macedoniam sena milia peditum scribi iussa, equites treceni aequaliter in singulas legiones. et in sociali exercitu consuli alteri auctus numerus: sedecim milia peditum octingentos equites, praeter eos, quos Cn. Sicinius duxisset, sescentos equites, in Macedoniam traiceret. Italiae satis uisa duodecim milia sociorum peditum, sescenti equites. illud quoque praecipuum datum sorti Macedoniae, ut centuriones militesque ueteres scriberet, quos uellet, consul usque ad quinquaginta annos. in tribunis militum nouatum eo anno propter Macedonicum bellum, quod consules ex senatus consulto ad populum tulerunt, ne tribuni militum eo anno suffragiis crearentur, sed consulum praetorumque in iis faciendis iudicium arbitriumque esset. inter praetores ita partita imperia: praetorem, cuius sors fuisset, ut iret, quo senatus censuisset, Brundisium ad classem ire placuit, atque ibi recognoscere socios nauales, dimissisque, si qui parum idonei essent, supplementum legere ex libertinis et dare operam, ut duae partes ciuium Romanorum, tertia sociorum esset. commeatus classi legionibusque ut ex Sicilia Sardinia<que> subueherentur, praetoribus, <qui> eas prouincias sortiti essent, mandari placuit, ut alteras decumas Siculis Sardisque imperarent, quod frumentum ad exercitum in Macedoniam portaretur. Siciliam C. Caninius Rebilus est sortitus, L. Furius Philus Sardiniam, <L. Canuleius Hispaniam,> C. Sulpicius Galba urbanam iurisdictionem, L. Uillius Annalis inter peregrinos; C. Lucretio Gallo, quo senatus censuisset, sors obuenit.

[32] Inter consules magis cauillatio quam magna contentio de prouincia fuit. Cassius sine sorte se Macedoniam optaturum dicebat, nec posse collegam saluo iureiurando secum sortiri. praetorem eum, ne in prouinciam iret, in contione iurasse se stato loco statisque diebus sacrificia habere, quae absente se recte fieri non possent; quae non magis consule quam praetore absente recte fieri posse, si senatus non, quid uelit in consulatu, potius quam, quid in praetura iurauerit P. Licinius, animaduertendum esse censeat; se tamen futurum in senatus potestate. consulti patres, cui consulatum populus Romanus non negasset, <ei> ab se prouinciam negari, superbum rati, sortiri consules iusserunt. P. Licinio Macedonia, <C.> Cassio Italia obuenit. legiones inde sortiti sunt: prima et tertia <ut> in Macedoniam traicerentur, secunda et quarta ut in Italia remanerent. dilectum consules multo intentiore, quam alias, cura habebant. Licinius ueteres quoque scribebat milites centurionesque; et multi uoluntate nomina dabant, quia locupletes uidebant, qui priore Macedonico bello aut aduersus Antiochum in Asia stipendia fecerant. cum tribuni militum, qui centuriones * * , sed primum quemque citarent, tres et uiginti centuriones, qui primos pilos duxerant, citati tribunos plebis appellarunt. duo ex collegio, M. Fuluius Nobilior et M. Claudius

Marcellus, ad consules <rem> reiciebant: eorum cognitionem esse debere, quibus dilectus quibusque bellum mandatum esset; ceteri cognituros se, de quo appellati essent, aiebant, et si iniuria fieret, auxilium ciuibus laturos.

[33] Ad subsellia tribunorum res agebatur; eo M. Popilius consularis, aduocatus <centurionum, et> centuriones et consul uenerunt. consule inde postulante, ut in contione ea res ageretur, populus in contionem aduocatus. pro centurionibus M. Popilius, qui biennio ante consul fuerat, ita uerba fecit: militares homines et stipendia iusta et corpora et aetate et adsiduus laboribus confecta habere; nihil recusare tamen, quo minus operam rei publicae dent. id tantum deprecari, ne inferiores iis ordines, quam quos, <cum> militassent, habuissent, adtribuerentur. P. Licinius consul senatus consulta recitari iussit, primum, quo bellum senatus Perseo iussisset, deinde, quo ueteres centuriones quam plurimos ad id bellum scribi censuisset, nec ulli, qui non maior annis quinquaginta esset, uacationem militiae esse. deprecatus est deinde, <ne> in nouo bello, tam propinquo Italiae, aduersus regem potentissimum, aut tribunos militum dilectum habentis inpedirent, aut prohiberent consulem, quem cuique ordinem adsignari e re publica esset, eum adsignare. si quid in ea re dubium esset, ad senatum reicerent.

[34] Postquam consul, quae uoluerat, dixit, Sp. Ligustinus ex eo numero, qui tribunos plebis appellauerant, a consule et ab tribunis petit, ut sibi paucis ad populum agere liceret. permissu omnium ita locutus fertur: 'Sp. Ligustinus [tribus] Crustumina ex Sabinis sum oriundus, Quirites. pater mihi iugerum agri reliquit et paruom tugurium, in quo natus educatusque sum, hodieque ibi habito. cum primum in aetatem ueni, pater mihi uxorem fratris sui filiam dedit, quae secum nihil adtulit praeter libertatem pudicitiamque, et cum his fecunditatem, quanta uel in diti domo satis esset. sex filii nobis, duae filiae sunt, utraeque iam nuptae. filii quattuor togas uiriles habent, duo praetextati sunt. miles sum factus P. Sulpicio C. Aurelio consulibus. in eo exercitu, qui in Macedoniam est transportatus, biennium miles gregarius fui aduersus Philippum regem; tertio anno uirtutis causa mihi T. Quinctius Flaminius decumum ordinem hastatum adsignauit. deuicto Philippo Macedonibusque cum in Italiam <re>portati ac dimissi essemus, continuo miles uoluntarius cum M. Porcio consule in Hispaniam sum profectus. neminem omnium imperatorum, qui uiuant, acriorem uirtutis spectatorem ac iudicem fuisse sciunt, qui et illum et alios duces longa militia experti sunt. hic me imperator dignum iudicauit, cui primum hastatum prioris centuriae adsignaret. tertio iterum uoluntarius miles factus sum in eum exercitum, qui aduersus Aetolos et Antiochum regem est missus. a M'. Acilio mihi primus princeps prioris centuriae est adsignatus. expulso rege Antiocho, subactis Aetolis reportati sumus in Italiam; et deinceps bis, quae annua merebant legiones, stipendia feci. bis deinde in Hispania militauit, semel Q. Fuluius Flacco, iterum Ti. Sempronio Graccho praetore. a Flacco inter ceteros, quos uirtutis causa secum ex prouincia ad triumphum deducebat, deductus sum; a Ti. Graccho rogatus in prouinciam ii. quater intra paucos annos primum pilum duxi; quater et tricies uirtutis causa donatus ab imperatoribus sum; sex ciuicas coronas accepi. uiginti duo stipendia annua in exercitu emerita habeo, et maior annis sum quinquaginta. quodsi mihi nec stipendia omnia emerita essent necdum aetas uacationem daret, tamen, cum quattuor milites pro me uobis dare, P. Licini, possem, aecum erat me dimitti. sed haec pro causa mea dicta accipiatis uelim; ipse me, quoad quisquam, qui exercitus scribit, idoneum militem iudicabit, numquam sum excusaturus. quo ordine me dignum iudicent tribuni militum, ipsorum est potestatis; ne quis me uirtute in exercitu praestet, dabo operam; et semper ita fecisse me et imperatores mei et, qui una stipendia fecerunt, testes sunt. uos quoque aecum est, commilitones, etsi appellatione uostrum usurpatis ius, cum adulescentes nihil aduersus magistratum senatusque auctoritatem usquam feceritis, nunc quoque in potestate consulum ac senatus esse et omnia honesta loca ducere, quibus rem publicam defensuri sitis.'

[35] Haec ubi dixit, conlaudatum multis uerbis P. <Licinius> consul ex contione in senatum duxit. ibi quoque ei ex auctoritate senatus gratiae actae, tribunique militares in legione prima primum pilum uirtutis causa ei adsignarunt. ceteri centuriones remissa appellatione ad dilectum oboedienter responderunt. quo maturius in prouincias magistratus proficiscerentur, Latinae kalendis Iuniis fuere; eoque sollemni perfecto C. Lucretius praetor omnibus, quae ad classem opus erant, praemissis Brundisium est profectus. praeter eos exercitus, quos consules comparabant, C. Sulpicio Galbae praetori negotium datum, ut quattuor legiones scriberet urbanas, iusto numero peditum equitumque, iisque quattuor tribunos militum ex senatu legeret, qui praessent; sociis Latini nominis imperaret quindecim milia peditum, mille et ducentos equites; is exercitus uti paratus esset, quo senatus censuisset. P. Licinio consuli ad exercitum ciuilem socialemque petenti addita auxilia, Ligurum duo milia, Cretenses sagittarii — incertus numerus, quantum rogati [auxilia] Cretenses misissent —, Numidae item equites elephantique. in eam rem legati ad Masinissam Carthaginiensesque missi L. Postumius Albinus Q. Terentius Culleo C. Aburius. in Cretam item legatos tres ire placuit, A. Postumium Albinum C. Decimium A. Licinium Neruam.

[36] Per idem tempus legati ab rege Perseo uenerunt. eos in oppidum intromitti non placuit, cum iam bellum regi eorum et Macedonibus et senatus decresset et populus iussisset. in aedem Bellonae in senatum introducti ita uerba fecerunt: mirari Persea regem, quid in Macedoniam exercitus transportati essent; si impetrari a senatu posset, ut ii reuocentur, regem de iniuriis, si quas sociis factas quererentur, arbitrato senatus satisfacturum esse. Sp. Caruilius, ad eam ipsam rem ex Graecia remissus ab Cn. Sicinio, in senatu erat. is Perrhaebiam expugnatam armis, Thessaliae aliquot urbes captas, cetera, quae aut ageret aut pararet rex, cum argueret, respondere ad ea legati iussi. postquam haesitabant, negantes sibi ultra quidquam mandatum esse, iussi renuntiare regi, consulem P. Licinium breui cum exercitu futurum in Macedonia esse: ad eum, si satisfacere in animo esset, mitteret legatos. Romam quod praeterea mitteret, non esse; nemini enim eorum per Italiam ire liciturum. ita dimissis P. Licinio consuli mandatum, ut intra undecimum diem iuberet eos Italia excedere, et Sp. Caruilius mitteret, qui, donec nauem conscendissent, custodiret. haec Romae acta nondum profectis in prouinciam consulibus. iam Cn. Sicinius, qui, priusquam magistratu abiret, Brundisium ad classem et ad exercitum praemissus erat, traiectionis in Epirum quinque milibus peditum, trecentis equitibus, ad Nymphaeum in agro Apolloniati castra habebat. inde tribunos cum duobus milibus militum ad occupanda Dassaretiorum et Illyriorum castella, ipsis accersentibus praesidia, ut tutiores a finitimorum impetu Macedonum essent, misit.

[37] Paucis post diebus Q. Marcius <et> A. Atilius et P. et Ser. Cornelii Lentuli et L. Decimius, legati in Graeciam missi, Corcyram peditum mille secum aduexerunt; ibi inter se et regiones, quas obirent, et milites diuiserunt. L. Decimius missus est ad Gentium regem Illyriorum, quem si aliquem respectum amicitiae cum <populo Romano> habere cerneret, retentare aut etiam ad belli societatem perlicere iussus. Lentuli in Cephallaniam missi, ut in Peloponnesum traicerent oramque maris in occidentem uersi ante hiemem circumirent. Marcio et Atilio Epirus, Aetolia, Thessalia circumeundae adsignantur; inde Boeotiam atque Euboeam adspicere iussi, tum in Peloponnesum traicere; ibi congressuros se cum Lentulis constituunt. priusquam digrederentur a Corcyra, litterae  Perseo adlatæ sunt, quibus quaerebat, quæ causa Romanis aut in Graeciam traiciendi copias aut urbes occupandi esset. cui rescribi non placuit, nuntio ipsius, qui litteras attulerat, dici, praesidii causa ipsarum urbium Romanos facere. Lentuli circumeuntes Peloponnesi oppida, cum sine discrimine omnes ciuitates adhortarentur, ut, quo animo, qua fide adiuuissent Romanos Philippi primum, deinde Antiochi bello, eodem aduersus Persea iuuarent, fremitum in contionibus mouebant, Achæis indignantibus eodem se loco esse, qui omnia a principiis Macedonici belli praestitissent Romanis, <quo> Messenii atque Elii, [qui] et [Macedonis] Philippi bello hostes fuissent <Romanis> et pro Antiocho postea arma aduersus populum Romanum tulissent ac, nuper in Achaicum contributi concilium, uelut praemium belli se uictoribus Achæis tradi quererentur.

[38] Marcius et Atilius ad Gitana, Epiri oppidum, decem milia  mari cum escenderent, concilio Epirotarum habito cum magno omnium adsensu auditi sunt; et quadringentos iuuentutis eorum in Orestas, ut praesidio essent liberatis ab Macedonibus, miserunt. inde in Aetoliam progressi ac paucos ibi morati dies, dum in praetoris mortui locum alius sufficeretur, [et] Lycisco praetore facto, quem Romanorum fauere rebus satis conpertum erat, transierunt in Thessaliam. eo legati Acarnanes et Boeotorum exules uenerunt. Acarnanes nuntiare iussi, quæ Philippi primum, Antiochi deinde bello, decepti pollicitationibus regiis, aduersus populum Romanum commisissent, ea corrigendi occasionem illis oblatam. si male meriti clementiam populi Romani experti essent, bene merendo liberalitatem experirentur. Boeotis exprobratum, societatem eos cum Perseo iunxisse. cum culpam in Ismeniam, principem alterius partis, conferrent et quasdam ciuitates dissentientis in causam deductas, appariturum id esse Marcius respondit; singulis enim ciuitatibus de se ipsis consulendi potestatem facturos. Thessalorum Larisae fuit concilium. ibi <et> Thessalis benigna materia gratias agendi Romanis pro libertatis munere fuit, et legatis, quod et Philippi prius et post Antiochi bello enixe adiuti a gente Thessalorum essent. hac mutua commemoratione meritorum accensi animi multitudinis ad omnia decernenda, quae Romani uellent. secundum hoc concilium legati a Perseo rege uenerunt priuati maxime hospitii fiducia, quod ei paternum cum Marcio erat. ab huius necessitudinis commemoratione orsi petierunt legati, in conloquium ueniendi regi potestatem faceret. Marcius et se ita a patre suo accepisse dixit, amicitiam hospitiumque cum Philippo fuisse, <et> minime immemorem necessitudinis eius legationem eam suscepisse. conloquium, si satis commode ualeret, non fuisse se dilaturum; nunc, ubi primum posset, ad Peneum flumen, qua transitus ab Homolio Dium esset, praemissis, qui nuntiarent regi, uenturos.

[39] Et tum quidem ab Dio Perseus in interiora regni recepit se, leui aura spei obiecta, quod Marcius ipsius causa suscepisse se legationem dixisset; post dies paucos ad constitutum locum uenerunt. magnus comitatus fuit regius cum amicorum tum satellitum turba stipante. non minore agmine legati uenerunt et ab Larisa multis prosequentibus et legationibus ciuitatum, quae conuenerant Larisam et renuntiare domum certa, quae audissent, uolebant. inerat cura insita mortalibus uidendi congregientis nobilem regem et populi principis terrarum omnium legatos. <ut> in conspectu steterunt, dirimente amni, paulisper internuntiando cunctatio fuit, utri transgrederentur. aliquid illi regiae maiestati, aliquid <hi> populi Romani nomini, cum praesertim Perseus petisset conloquium, existumabant deberi. ioco etiam Marcius cunctantis mouit. ‘minor’ inquit ‘ad maiores et’ — quod Philippo ipsi cognomen erat— ‘filius ad patrem transeat.’ facile persuasum id regi est. aliud deinde ambigebatur, cum quam multis transiret. rex cum omni comitatu transire aecum censebat; legati uel cum tribus uenire iubebant uel, si tantum agmen traduceret, obsides dare, nihil fraudis fore in conloquio. Hippiam et Pantauchum, quos et legatos miserat, principes amicorum, obsides dedit. nec tam in pignus fidei obsides desiderati erant, quam ut appareret sociis nequaquam ex dignitate pari congregi regem cum legatis. salutatio non tamquam hostium, sed hospitalis ac benigna fuit, positisque sedibus consederunt.

[40] Cum paulisper silentium fuisset, 'expectari nos' inquit Marcius 'arbitror, ut respondeamus litteris tuis, quas Corcyram misisti, in quibus quaeris, quid ita legati cum militibus uenerimus et praesidia in singulas urbes dimittamus. ad hanc interrogationem tuam et non respondere, uereor, ne superbum sit, et uera respondere ne nimis acerbum audienti tibi uideatur. sed cum aut uerbis castigandus aut armis sit, qui foedus rumpit, sicut bellum aduersus te alii quam mihi mandatum malim, ita orationis acerbitem aduersus hospitem, utcumque est, subibo, sicut medici, cum salutis causa tristiora remedia adhibent. ex quo regnum adeptus es, unam rem te, quae facienda fuerit, senatus fecisse censet, quod legatos Romam ad renouandum <foedus miseris, quod tamen ipsum tibi non fuisse renouandum> iudicat potius quam, cum renouatum esset, uiolandum. Abrupolim, socium atque amicum populi Romani, regno expulisti; Arthetauri interfectores, ut caede, ne quid ultra dicam, <te> laetatum appareret, recepisti, qui omnium Illyriorum fidissimum Romanis regulum occiderant; per Thessaliam et Maliensem agrum cum exercitu contra foedus Delphos isti; Byzantiis item contra foedus misisti auxilia; cum Boeotis, sociis nostris, secretam tibi ipsi societatem, quam non licebat, iureiurando pepigisti; Thebanos legatos, Euersam et Callicritum, uenientis ad nos, quaerere malo, quis interfecerit, quam arguere. in Aetolia bellum intestinum et caedes principum per quos, nisi per tuos, factae uideri possunt? Dolopes a te ipso euastati sunt. Eumenes rex, ab Roma cum in regnum rediret, prope ut uictuma Delphis in sacrato loco ante aras mactatus, quem insimulet, piget referre; quae hospes Brundisinus occulta facinora indicet, certum habeo et scripta tibi omnia ab Roma esse et legatos renuntiasse tuos. haec ne dicerentur a me, uno modo uitare potuisti, non quaerendo, quam ob causam exercitus in Macedoniam traicerentur, aut praesidia in sociorum urbes mitteremus. quaerenti tibi superbius tacuissemus, quam uera respondimus. equidem pro paterno nostro hospitio faueo orationi tuae et opto, ut aliquid mihi materiae praebeas agenda tuae apud senatum causae.’

[41] Ad ea rex: ‘bonam causam, si apud iudice aequos ageretur, apud eosdem et accusatores et iudices agam. eorum autem, quae obiecta sunt mihi, partim ea sunt, quibus nescio an gloriari debeam, neque quae fateri erubescam, partim quae uerbo obiecta uerbo negare <satis> sit. quid enim, si legibus uestris hodie reus sim, aut index Brundisinus aut Eumenes mihi obiciat, ut accusare potius uere quam conuiciari uideantur? scilicet nec Eumenes, cum tam multis grauis publice ac priuatim sit, alium quam me inimicum habuit; neque ego potio rem quemquam ad ministeria facinorum quam Rammium, quem neque umquam ante uideram nec eram postea uisurus, inuenire potui. et Thebanorum, quos naufragio perisse constat, et Arthetauri caedis mihi reddenda ratio est; in qua tamen nihil ultra obicitur, quam interfectores eius in regno exulasse meo. cuius condicionis iniquitatem ita non sum recusaturus, si uos quoque accipitis, ut, quicumque exules in Italiam aut Romam se contulerunt, his facinorum, propter quae damnati sunt, auctores uos fuisse fateamini. si hoc et uos recusabitis et omnes aliae gentes, ego quoque inter ceteros ero. et hercule, quid adtinet cuiquam exilium patere, si nusquam exuli futurus locus est? ego tamen istos, ut primum in Macedonia esse admonitus a uobis conperi, requisitos abire ex regno iussi et in perpetuum interdixi finibus meis. et haec quidem mihi tamquam causam dicenti reo obiecta sunt; illa tamquam regi et quae de foedere, quod mihi est uobiscum, disceptationem habeant. nam si est in foedere ita scriptum, ut ne si bellum quidem quis inferat, tueri me regnumque meum liceat, mihi fatendum est, quod me armis aduersus Abrupolim, socium populi Romani, defenderim, foedus uiolatum esse. sin autem hoc et ex foedere licuit et iure gentium ita comparatum est, ut arma armis propulsentur, quid tandem me facere decuit, cum Abrupolis fines mei regni usque ad Amphipolim peruastasset, multa libera capita, magnam uim mancipiorum, multa milia pecorum abegisset? quiescerem et paterer, donec Pellam et in regiam meam armatus peruenisset? at enim bello quidem iusto sum persecutus, sed uinci non oportuit eum, neque alia, quae uictis accidunt, pati; quorum casum cum ego subierim, qui sum armis lacessitus, quid potest queri sibi accidisse, qui causa belli fuit? non sum eodem modo defensurus, Romani, quod Dolopas armis coercuerim; quia, etsi non merito eorum, iure feci meo, cum mei regni, meae dicionis essent, uestro decreto patri adtributi meo. nec, si causa reddenda sit, non uobis nec foederatis, sed iis, qui <ne> in seruos quidem saeua atque iniusta imperia probant, plus aequo et bono saeuisse in eos uideri possum; quippe Euphranorem, praefectum a me inpositum, ita occiderunt, ut mors poenarum eius leuissima fuerit.

[42] At cum processissem inde ad uisendas Larisam et Antronas et Pteleon, qua in propinquo Delphi s<unt>, sacrificandi causa, <ut> multo ante debita uota persoluerem, Delphos escendi. et his, criminis augendi causa, cum exercitu me isse adicitur; scilicet, ut, quod nunc uos facere queror, urbes occuparem, arcibus inponerem praesidia. uocate in concilium Graeciae ciuitates, per quas iter feci, queratur unusquilibet militis mei iniuriam; non recusabo, quin simulato sacrificio aliud petisse uidear. Aetolis et Byzantiis praesidia misimus et cum Boeotis amicitiam fecimus. haec, qualiacumque sunt, per legatos meos non solum indicata sed etiam excusata sunt saepe in senatu uestro, ubi aliquos ego disceptatores non tam aequos quam te, <Q.> Marci, paternum amicum et hospitem, habebam. sed nondum Romam accusator Eumenes uenerat, qui calumniando omnia detorquendoque suspecta et inuisa efficeret et persuadere uobis conaretur, non posse Graeciam in libertate esse et uestro munere frui, quoad regnum Macedoniae incolume esset. circumagetur hic orbis; erit mox, qui arguat nequiquam Antiochum ultra iuga Tauri emotum; grauiorem multo Asiae, quam Antiochus fuerit, Eumenen esse; conquiescere socios uestros non posse, quoad regia Pergami sit; eam arcem supra capita finitimarum ciuitatum impositam. ego haec, Q. Marci et A. Atili, quae aut a uobis obiecta aut purgata a me sunt, talia esse scio, ut aures, ut animi audientium sint, nec tam referre, quid ego aut qua mente fecerim, quam, quomodo id uos factum accipiatis. conscius mihi sum nihil me scientem deliquisse, et, si quid fecerim imprudentia lapsus, corrigi me et emendari castigatione hac posse. nihil certe insanabile nec, quod bello et armis persequendum esse censeatis, commisi; aut frustra clementiae grauitatisque uestrae fama uolgata per gentes est, si talibus de causis, quae uix querella et expostulatione dignae sunt, arma capitis et regibus sociis bella infertis.’

[43] Haec dicenti ei sum adsensum esset, Marcius auctor fuit mittendi Romam legatos; cum experienda omnia ad ultimum nec praetermittendam spem ullam censuisset <rex>, reliqua consultatio erat, quonam modo tutum iter legis esset. ad id <cum> necessaria petitio indutiarum uideretur cuperetque Marcius neque aliud conloquio petisset, grauate et in magnam gratiam petentis concessit. nihil enim satis paratum ad bellum in praesentia habebant Romani, non exercitum, non ducem, cum Perseus, ni spes uana pacis occaecasset consilia, omnia praeparata atque instructa <haberet>, et suo maxime tempore atque alieno hostibus incipere bellum posset. ab hoc conloquio, fide indutiarum interposita, legati Romani in Boeotiam ~comparati sunt. ibi iam motus coeperat esse discedentibus a societate communis concilii Boeotorum quibusdam populis, ex quo renuntiatum erat respondisse legatos appariturum, quibus populis proprie societatem cum rege iungi displicuisset. primi a Chaeronia legati, deinde a Thebis in ipso itinere occurrerunt, adfirmantes non interfuisse se, quo societas ea decreta esset, concilio; quos legati, nullo in praesentia responso dato, Chalcidem se sequi iusserunt. Thebis magna contentio orta erat ex alio certamine. comitiis praetoris <et> Boeot<arch>arum uicta pars iniuriam persequens coacta multitudine decreuit, ne Boeotarchae urbibus reciperentur. exules Thespias uniuersi concesserunt; inde — recepti enim sine cunctatione erant — Thebas iam mutatis animis reuocati decretum faciunt, ut duodecim, qui priuati coetum et concilium habuissent, exilio multarentur. nouus deinde praetor — Ismenias is erat, uir nobilis ac potens — capitalis poenae absentis eos decreto damnat. Chalcidem fugerant; inde ad Romanos Larisam profecti causam cum Perseo societatis in Ismeniam contulerant; ex <ea> contentione ortum certamen. utriusque [tamen] partis legati ad Romanos uenerunt, et exules accusatoresque Ismeniae et Ismenias ipse.

[44] Chalcidem ut uentum est, aliarum ciuitatum principes, id quod maxime gratum erat Romanis, suo quique proprie decreto regiam societatem aspernati Romanis se adiungebant; Ismenias gentem Boeotorum in fidem Romanorum permitti aecum censebat. inde certamine orto, nisi in tribunal legatorum perfugisset, haud multum afuit, quin ab exulibus fautoribusque eorum interficeretur. Thebae quoque ipsae, quod Boeotiae caput est, in magno motu erant, aliis ad regem trahentibus ciuitatem, aliis ad Romanos; et turba Coronaeorum Haliartiorumque conuenerat ad defendendum decretum regiae societatis. sed constantia principum docentium cladibus Philippi Antiochique, quanta esset uis et fortuna imperii Romani, uicta tandem multitudo et, ut tolleretur regia societas, decreuit, et eos, qui auctores paciscendae amicitiae fuerant, ad satisfaciendum legatis Chalcidem misit fideique legatorum commendari ciuitatem iussit. Thebanos Marcius et Atilius laeti audierunt auctoresque et his <et> separatim singulis fuerunt ad renouandam amicitiam mittendi Romam legatos. ante omnia exules restitui iusserunt et auctores regiae societatis decreto suo damnarunt. ita, quod maxime uolebant, discusso Boeotico concilio <in Pelo>ponnesum proficiscuntur Ser. Cornelio Chalcidem accersito. Argis praebitum est iis concilium; ubi res * * * aliud a gente Achaeorum petierunt, quam ut mille milites darent. id praesidium ad Chalcidem tuendam, dum Romanus exercitus in Graeciam traiceretur, missum est. Marcius et Atilius peractis, quae agenda in Graecia erant, principio hiemis Romam redierunt.

[45] Inde legatio sub idem tempus in Asiam <et> circum insulas missa. tres erant legati, Ti. Claudius Sp. Postumius M. Iunius. ii circumeuntes hortabantur socios ad suscipiendum aduersus Persea <pro> Romanis bellum; et, quo quaeque opulentior ciuitas erat, eo accuratius agebant, quia minores secuturae maiorum auctoritatem erant. Rhodii maximi ad omnia momenti habebantur, quia non fouere tantum, sed adiuuare etiam uiribus suis bellum poterant, quadraginta nauibus auctore Hegesilocho praeparatis; qui cum in summo magistratu esset — prytanin ipsi uocant — , multis orationibus peruicerat Rhodios, ut omissa, quam saepe uanam experti essent, regum fouendorum spe Romanam societatem, unam tum in terris uel uiribus uel fide stabilem, retinerent. bellum imminere cum Perseo; desideraturos Romanos eundem naualem apparatus, quem nuper Antiochi, quem Philippi ante bello uidissent. trepidaturos tum repente paranda classe, cum mittenda esset, nisi reficere naues, nisi instruere naualibus sociis coepissent. <id> eo magis enixe faciundum esse, ut crimina delata ab Eumene fide rerum refellerent. his incitati quadraginta nauium classem instructam ornatamque legatis Romanis aduenientibus, ut non expectatam adhortationem esse appareret, ostenderunt. et haec legatio magnum ad conciliandos animos ciuitatum Asiae momentum fuit. Decimius unus sine ullo effectu, captarum etiam pecuniarum ab regibus Illyriorum suspicione infamis, Romam redit.

[46] Perseus, cum ab conloquio Romanorum in Macedoniam recepisset sese, legatos Romam de incohatis cum Marcio condicionibus pacis misit; et Byzantium et Rhodum et * * legatis ferendas dedit. in litteris eadem sententia ad omnis erat, conlocutum se cum Romanorum legatis; quae audisset quaeque dixisset, ita disposita, ut superior fuisse in disceptatione uideri posset. apud Rhodios legati adiecerunt confidere pacem futuram; auctoribus enim Marcio atque Atilio missos Romam legatos. si pergerent Romani contra foedus mouere bellum, tum omni gratia, omni ope adnitendum fore Rhodiis, ut reconcilient pacem; si nihil deprecando proficiant, id agendum, ne omnium rerum ius ac potestas ad unum populum perueniat. cum ceterorum id interesse, tum praecipue Rhodiorum, quo plus inter alias ciuitates dignitate atque opibus excellant; quae serua atque obnoxia fore, si nullus alio sit quam ad Romanos respectus. magis et litterae et uerba legatorum benigne sunt audita, quam momentum ad mutandos animos habuerunt; potentior esse partis melioris auctoritas coeperat. responsum ex decreto est optare pacem Rhodios; si bellum esset, ne quid ab Rhodiis speraret aut peteret rex, quod ueterem amicitiam, multis magnisque meritis pace belloque partam, diiungeret sibi ac Romanis. ab Rhodo redeuntes Boeotiae quoque ciuitates, [et] Thebas et Coroneam et Haliartum, adierunt, quibus expressum inuitis existimabatur, ut relictis regia societate Romanis adiungerentur. Thebani nihil moti sunt, quamquam et damnatis principibus et restitutis exulibus suscensebant Romanis. Coronaei et Haliartii, fauore quodam insito in reges, legatos in Macedoniam miserunt praesidium petentes, quo se aduersus inotentem superbiam Thebanorum tueri possint. cui legationi responsum ab rege est, praesidium se propter indutias cum Romanis factas mittere non posse; tamen ita suadere ab Thebanorum iniuriis, qua possent, ut se uindicarent, ne Romanis praeberent causam in se saeuiendi.

[47] Marcius et Atilius Romam cum uenissent, legationem in Capitolio ita renuntiarunt, ut nulla re magis gloriarentur quam decepto per indutias et spem pacis rege. adeo enim apparatibus belli fuisse instructum, ipsis nulla parata re, ut omnia opportuna loca praeoccupari ante ab eo potuerint, quam exercitus in Graeciam traiceretur. spatio autem indutiarum sumpto aecum <bellum> futurum: illum nihilo paratiorem, Romanos omnibus instructiores rebus coepturos bellum. Boeotorum quoque se concilium arte distraxisse, ne coniungi amplius ullo consensu Macedonibus possent. haec ut summa ratione acta magna pars senatus adprobabat; ueteres et moris antiqui memores negabant se in ea legatione Romanas agnoscere artes. non per insidias et nocturna proelia, nec simulatam fugam inprouisosque ad incautum hostem reditus, nec ut astu magis quam uera uirtute gloriarentur, bella maiores gessisse: indicare prius quam gerere solitos bella, denuntiare etiam interdum <pugnam et locum> finire, in quo dimicaturi essent. eadem fide indicatum Pyrrho regi medicum uitae eius insidiantem; eadem Faliscis uinctum traditum proditorem liberorum; religionis haec Romanae esse, non uersutiarum Punicarum neque calliditatis Graecae, apud <quos> fallere hostem quam ui superare gloriosius fuerit. interdum in praesens tempus plus profici dolo quam uirtute; sed eius demum animum in perpetuum uinci, cui confessio expressa sit se neque arte neque casu, sed collatis comminus uiribus iusto ac pio esse bello superatum. haec seniores, quibus noua ac nimis <callida minus> placebat sapientia; uicit tamen ea pars senatus, cui potior utilis quam honesti cura erat, ut conprobaretur prior legatio Marci, et eodem rursus in Graeciam cum * quinquere milibus remitteretur iubereturque cetera, uti e re publica maxime uisum esset, agere. A. quoque Atilium miserunt ad occupandam Larisam in Thessaliam timentes, ne, si indutiarum dies exisset, <Perseus> praesidio eo misso caput Thessaliae in potestate haberet. duo milia peditum Atilius ab Cn. Sicinio accersere ad eam rem agendam iussus. et P. Lentulo, qui ex Achaia redierat, trecenti milites Italici generis dati, ut Thebis daret operam, ut in potestate Boeotia esset.

[48] His prae paratis, quamquam ad bellum consilia erant destinata, senatum tamen praeberi legatis placuit. eadem fere, quae in conloquio ab rege dicta erant, relata ab legatis. insidiarum Eumeni factarum crimen et maxima cura et minime tamen probabiliter —

manifesta enim res erat — defensum; cetera deprecatio erat. sed non eis animis audiebantur, qui aut doceri aut flecti possent. denuntiatur, extemplo moenibus urbis Romae, Italia intra tricesimum diem excederent. P. Licinio deinde consuli, cui Macedonia prouincia obuenerat, denuntiatur, ut exercitui diem primam quamque diceret ad conueniendum. C. Lucretius praetor, cui classis prouincia erat, cum quadraginta quinquereimis ab urbe profectus; nam ex relictis nauibus alias in alium usum retineri ad urbem placuit. praemissus a praetore est frater <M.> Lucretius cum quinquereimi una, iussusque ab sociis ex foedere acceptis nauibus ad Cephallaniam classi occurrere. ab Reginis triremi una <sumpta>, ab Locris duabus, ab Uritibus quattuor, praeter oram Italiae superuectus Calabriae extremum promunturium [in] Ionio mari Dyrrhachium traicit. ibi decem ipsorum Dyrrhachinorum, duodecim Issaeorum, quinquaginta quattuor Genti regis lembos nactus, simulans se credere eos in usum Romanorum comparatos esse, omnibus abductis die tertio Corcyram, inde protinus in Cephallaniam traicit. C. Lucretius praetor ab Neapoli profectus, superato freto, die quinto in Cephallaniam transmisit. ibi stetit classis, simul opperiens, ut terrestres copiae traicerentur, simul ut onerariae ex agmine suo per altum dissipatae consequerentur.

[49] Per hos forte dies P. Licinius consul uotis in Capitolio nuncupatis paludatus ab urbe profectus est. semper quidem ea res cum magna dignitate ac maiestate agitur; praecipue conuertit oculos animosque, cum ad magnum nobilemque aut uirtute aut fortuna hostem euntem consulem prosequuntur. contrahit enim non officii modo cura, sed etiam studium spectaculi, ut uideant ducem suum, cuius imperio consilioque summam rem publicam tuendam permiserunt. subit deinde cogitatio animos, qui belli casus, quam incertus fortunae euentus communisque Mars belli sit; aduersa secundaque, quae inscitia et temeritate ducum clades saepe acciderint, quae contra bona prudentia et uirtus attulerit. quem scire mortalium, utrius mentis, utrius fortunae consulem ad bellum mittant? triumphantem mox cum exercitu uictore scandentem in Capitolium ad eosdem deos, a quibus proficiscatur, uisuri, an hostibus eam praebituri laetitiam sint? Persei autem regi, aduersus quem ibatur, famam et bello clara Macedonum gens et Philippus pater, inter multa prospere gesta Romano etiam nobilitatus bello, praebebat; tum ipsius Persei numquam, ex quo regnum accepisset, desitum belli expectatione celebrari nomen. cum his cogitationibus omnium ordinum homines proficiscentem consulem prosecuti sunt. duo consulares tribuni militum cum eo missi, C. Claudius, Q. Mucius, et tres inlustres iuuenes, P. Lentulus et duo Manli Acidini: alter M. Manli, alter L. Manli filius erat. cum iis consul Brundisium ad exercitum <profectus> atque inde cum omnibus copiis transuectus ad Nymphaeum in Apolloniatium agro posuit castra.

[50] Paucos ante dies Perseus, postquam legati ab Roma regressi praeciderant spem pacis, consilium habuit. ibi aliquam<diu> diuersis sententiis certatum est. erant, quibus uel stipendium <pendendum>, si iniungeretur, uel agri parte cedendum, si multarent, quidquid denique aliud pacis causa patiendum esset, non recusandum uideretur, nec committendum, ut in aleam tanti casus se regnumque daret. si possessio haud ambigua regni maneret, multa diem tempusque adferre posse, quibus non amissa modo recipere, sed timendus ultro iis esse, quos nunc timeret, posset. ceterum multo maior pars ferocioris sententiae erat. quidquid cessisset, cum eo simul regno protinus cedendum esse adfirmabant. neque enim Romanos pecunia aut agro egere, sed hoc scire, cum omnia humana, tum maxima quaeque et regna et imperia sub casibus multis esse. Carthaginiensium opes fregisse sese, et ceruicibus eorum praepotentem finitimum regem inposuisse; Antiochum progeniemque eius ultra iuga Tauri emotum; unum esse Macedoniae regnum, et regione propincum, et quod, sicubi populo Romano sua fortuna labet, antiquos animos regibus suis uideatur posse facere. dum integrae <res sint, statuere> apud animum suum Persea debere, utrum singula concedendo nudatus ad extremum opibus extorrisque regno Samothraciam aliamue quam insulam petere ab Romanis, ubi priuatus superstes regno suo in contemptu atque inopia consenescat, malit, an armatus uindex fortunae dignitatisque suae, aut, <ut> uiro forti dignum sit, patiatur, quodcumque casus belli tulerit, aut uictor liberet orbem terrarum ab imperio Romano. non esse admirabilius Romanos Graecia pelli, quam Hannibalem Italia pulsum esse. neque hercule uidere, qui conueniat, fratri adfectanti per iniuriam regnum summa ui restitisse, alienigenis bene parto eo cedere. postremo ita <de> bello et pace quaeri, ut inter omnes conueniat, nec turpius quicquam esse quam sine certamine cessisse regno nec praeclarius quam pro dignitate ac maiestate omnem fortunam expertum esse.

[51] Pellae, in uetere regia Macedonum, hoc consilium erat. ‘geramus ergo’ inquit, ‘dis bene iuuantibus, quando ita uidetur, bellum’; litterisque circa praefectos dimissis, Citium — Macedoniae oppidum est — copias omnis contrahit. ipse centum hostiis sacrificio regaliter Mineruae, quam uocant Alcidemon, facto cum purpuratorum et satellitum manu profectus Citium est. eo iam omnes Macedonum <et> externorum auxiliorum conuenerant copiae. castra ante urbem ponit omnisque armatos in campo <in>struxit; summa omnium quadraginta <tria> milia armata fuere; quorum pars ferme dimidia phalangitae erant; Hippias Beroeaeus praeerat. delecta deinde et uiribus et robore aetatis ex omni caetratorum numero duo <milia> erant: agema hanc ipsi legionem uocabant; praefectos habebat Leonnatum et Thrasippum Eulyestas. ceterorum caetratorum, trium ferme milium hominum, dux erat Antiphilus Edessaes. Paeones et ex Paroria et Parastrymonia — sunt autem ea loca subiecta Thraciae — et Agrianes, admixtis etiam Threcibus incolis, trium milium ferme et ipsi expleuerant numerum. armauerat contraxeratque eos Didas Paeon, qui adulescentem Demetrium occiderat. et armatorum duo milia Gallorum erant; praefectus Asclepiodotus ab Heraclea ex Sintis; tria milia Threcum liberorum suum ducem habebant. Cretensium par ferme numerus suos duces sequebatur, Susum Phalasarnaeum et Syllum Gnosium. et Leonides Lacedaemonius quingentis ex Graecia, mixto generi hominum, praeerat. regii is generis ferebatur, exul, damnatus frequenti concilio Achaeorum litteris ad Persea deprexis. Aetolorum et Boeotorum, qui non explebant plus quam quingentorum omnes numerum, Lyco Achaeus praefectus erat. ex his mixtis tot populorum, tot gentium auxiliis duodecim milia armatorum ferme efficiebantur. equitum ex tota Macedonia contraxerat <tria> milia. uenerat eodem Cotys, Seuthis filius, rex gentis Odrysarum, cum mille delectis equitibus, pari ferme peditum numero. ita summa totius exercitus triginta nouem milia peditum erant, quattuor equitum. satis constabat, secundum eum exercitum, quem magnus Alexander in Asiam traiecit, numquam ullius Macedonum regis copias tantas fuisse.

[52] Sextus et uicesimus annus agebatur, ex quo petenti Philippo

data pax erat; per id omne tempus quieta Macedonia et progeniem ediderat, cuius magna pars matura militiae esset, et leuibus bellis Thracum accolarum, quae exercerent magis quam fatigarent, sub adsidua tamen militia fuerat. et diu meditatam Philippo primo, deinde et Persei Romanum bellum, omnia ut instructa parataque essent, effecerat. mota parumper acies, non iusto decursu tamen, ne stetisse tantum in armis uiderentur; armatosque, sicut erant, ad contionem uocauit. ipse constitit in tribunali, circa se habens filios duos, quorum maior Philippus natura frater, adoptione filius, minor, quem Alexandrum uocabant, naturalis erat. cohortatus est milites ad bellum; iniurias populi Romani in patrem seque commemorauit: illum omnibus indignitatibus compulsum ad rebellandum, inter apparatus belli fato oppressum; ad se simul legatos, simul milites ad occupandas Graeciae urbes missos. fallaci dein conloquio per speciem reconciliandae pacis extractam hiemem, ut tempus ad conparandum haberent; consulem nunc uenire cum duabus legionibus Romanis, quae <singulae sena milia peditum>, trecenos equites habeant, et pari ferme numero sociorum peditum equitumque. eo ut accedant regum auxilia, Eumenis et Masinissae, non plus <triginta> septem milia peditum, duo equitum futura. auditis hostium copiis respicerent suum ipsi exercitum, quantum numero, quantum genere militum praestarent tironibus raptim ad id bellum conscriptis ipsi, a pueris eruditi artibus militiae, tot subacti atque durati bellis. auxilia Romanis Lydos et Phrygas et Numidas esse, sibi Thracas Gallosque, ferocissimas gentium. arma illos habere ea, quae sibi quisque parauerit pauper miles, Macedonas prompta ex regio apparatu, per tot annos patris sui cura et impensa facta. commeatum illis cum procul, tum omnibus sub casibus maritimis fore; se et pecuniam et frumentum, praeter reditus metallorum, in decem annos seposuisse. omnia, quae deorum indulgentia, quae regia cura praeparanda fuerint, plena cumulataque habere Macedonas; animos habendos esse, quos habuerint maiores eorum, qui Europa omni domita transgressi in Asiam incognitum famae aperuerint armis orbem terrarum nec ante uincere desierint, quam Rubro mari inclusis, quod uincerent, defuerit. at hercule nunc <non> de ultimis Indiae oris, sed de ipsius Macedoniae possessione certamen fortunam indixisse. cum patre suo gerentis bellum Romanos speciosum

Graeciae liberandae <prae>tulisse titulum: nunc propalam Macedoniam in seruitutem petere, ne rex uicinus imperio sit Romano, ne gens bello nobilis arma habeat. haec enim tradenda superbis dominis esse cum rege regnoque, <si> absistere bello et facere imperata uelint.

[53] Cum per omnem orationem satis frequenti adsensu succlamatum esset, tum uero ea uociferatio simul indignantium minitantiumque, partim iubentium bonum animum habere regem, exorta est, ut finem dicendi faceret, tantum iussis ad iter <se> parare; iam enim dici mouere castra ab Nymphaeo Romanos. <contione> dimissa ad audiendas legationes ciuitatum Macedoniae se contulit. uenerant autem ad pecunias pro facultatibus quaeque suis et frumentum pollicendum ad bellum. omnibus gratiae actae, remissum omnibus; satis regios apparatus ad ea dictum sufficere. uehicula tantum imperata, ut tormenta telorumque missilium ingentem uim praeparatam bellicumque aliud instrumentum ueherent. profectus inde toto exercitu, Eordaeam petens, ad Begorritim, quem uocant, lacum positis castris, postero die in Elimeam ad Haliacmona fluuium processit. deinde saltu angusto superatis montibus, quos Cambunios uocant, descendit ad Azorum, Pythoum, Dolichen: Tripolim uocant incolentes. haec tria oppida paulisper cunctati, quia obsides Larisaeis dederant, uicti tamen praesenti metu in deditionem concesserunt. benigne his appellatis, haud dubius Perrhaebos quoque idem <facturos>, * * urbem nihil cunctatis, qui incolebant, primo aduentu recipit. Cyretias oppugnare coactus primo [etiam] die acri concursu ad portas armatorum est repulsus; postero die omnibus copiis adortus in deditionem omnes ante noctem accepit.

[54] Mylae, proximum oppidum, ita munitum, ut inexsuperabilis munimenti spes incolas ferociores faceret, non portas claudere regi satis habuerunt, sed probris quoque in ipsum Macedonasque procacibus iaculati sunt. quae res cum infestiores hostem ad oppugnandum fecisset, ipsos desperatione ueniae ad tuendos sese acrius accendit. itaque per triduum ingentibus utrimque animis et oppugnata est <urbs et> defensa. multitudo Macedonum ad subeundum in uicem proelium haud difficulter suppetebat; oppidanos, diem noctem eosdem tuentis moenia, non uulnera modo, sed etiam uigiliae et continens labor conficiebat. quarto die cum et scalae undique ad muros erigerentur et porta ui maiore oppugnaretur, oppidani depul<sa ui> muris ad portam tuendam concurrunt eruptionemque repentinam in hostis faciunt; quae cum irae magis inconsultae quam uerae fiducia uirium esset, pauci et fessi ab integris pulsi terga <dederunt> fugientesque per patentem portam hostes acceperunt. ita capta urbs ac direpta est; libera quoque corpora, quae caedibus superfuerunt, uenum data. diruto magna ex parte et incenso oppido profectus ad Phalannam castra mouit, inde postero die Gyrtonem peruenit. quo cum T. Minucium Rufum et Hippiam, Thessalorum praetorem, cum praesidio intrasse accepisset, ne temptata quidem oppugnatione praetergressus, Elatiam et Gonnum percussis inopinato aduentu oppidanis recepit. utraque oppida in faucibus sunt, qua Tempe adeun<tur>, magis Gonnus. itaque et firmiore id praesidio tutum equitum peditumque, ad hoc fossa triplici ac uallo munitum reliquit. ipse ad Sycurium progressus opperiri ibi hostium aduentum statuit; simul et frumentari passim exercitum iubet in subiecto hostium agro. namque Sycurium est sub radicibus Ossae montis. <is>, qua in meridiem uergit, subiectos habet Thessaliae campos, ab tergo Macedoniam atque Magnesiam. ad has opportunitates accedit summa salubritas et copia pluribus circumiectis fontibus perennium aquarum.

[55] Consul Romanus, per eosdem dies Thessaliam cum exercitu petens, iter expeditum primo per Epirum habuit; deinde, postquam in Athamaniam est transgressus, asperi ac prope inuii soli, cum ingenti difficultate paruis itineribus aegre Gomphos peruenit; cui si uexatis hominibus equisque tironem exercitum ducenti acie instructa et loco suo et tempore obstitisset rex, ne Romani quidem abnuunt magna sua cum clade fuisse pugnatuos. postquam Gomphos sine certamine uentum est, praeter gaudium periculosi saltus superati, contemptus quoque hostium adeo ignorantium opportunitates suas accessit. sacrificio rite perfecto consul et frumento dato militibus paucos ad requiem iumentorum hominumque moratus dies, cum audiret uagari Macedonas effusos per Thessaliam uastarique sociorum agros, satis iam refectum militem ad Larisam ducit. inde cum tria milia ferme abesset, ad Tripolim — Scaeam uocant — , super Peneum amnem posuit castra. per idem tempus Eumenes ad Chalcidem nauibus accessit cum Attalo atque Athenaeo fratribus, Philetaero fratre relicto

Pergami ad tutelam regni. Chalcide cum Attalo et quattuor milibus peditum, mille equitum ad consulem uenit; Chalcide relicta duo milia peditum, quibus Athenaeus praepositus. et alia eodem auxilia Romanis ex omnibus undique Graeciae populis conuenerunt, quorum pleraque — adeo parua erant — in obliuionem adducta. Apolloniatae trecentos equites, centum pedites miserunt. Aetolorum alae unius instar erat, quantum ab tota gente equitum uenerat, et Thessalorum, <quorum> omnis equitatus speratus erat, non plus quam trecenti erant equites in castris Romanis. Achaei iuuentutis suae, Cretico maxime armatu, ad mille quingentos dederunt.

[56] Sub idem tempus et C. Lucretius praetor, qui nauibus praeerat ad Cephallaniam, M. Lucretio fratre cum classe super Maleum Chalcidem iusso petere, ipse triremem conscendit, sinum Corinthium petens ad praeoccupandas in Boeotia res. tardior ei nauigatio propter infirmitatem corporis fuit. M. Lucretius, Chalcidem adueniens, cum a P. Lentulo Haliartum oppugnari audisset, nuntium, praetoris uerbis qui abscedere eum inde iuberet, misit. Boeotorum iuuentute, quae pars cum Romanis stabat, eam rem adgressus legatus a moenibus abscessit. haec soluta obsidio locum alteri nouae obsidioni dedit; namque extemplo M. Lucretius cum exercitu nauali, decem milibus armatorum, ad hoc duobus milibus regionum, qui sub Athenaeo erant, Haliartum circumscedit; parantibusque iam oppugnare superuenit a Creusa praetor. ad idem fere tempus et ab sociis naues Chalcidem conuenerunt, duae Punicae quinqueremes, duae ab Heraclea ex Ponto triremes, quattuor Chalcedone, totidem Samo, tum quinque Rhodiae quadriremes. has praetor, quia nusquam erat maritimum bellum, remisit sociis. et Q. Marcius Chalcidem nauibus uenit, Alope <Pthio>tica capta, Larisa, quae Cremaste dicitur, oppugnata.

Cum hic status in Boeotia esset, Perseus, cum ad Sycurium, sicut ante dictum est, statiuia haberet, frumento undique circa ex agris conuecto, ad uastandum Phraeorum <agrum> misit, ratus ad iuuandas sociorum urbes longius a castris abstractos deprehendi Romanos posse. quos cum eo tumultu nihil motos animaduertisset, * * * praedam quidem praeterquam hominum — pecora autem maxime omnis generis fuere — diuisit ad epulandum militibus * * *

[57] Sub idem deinde tempus consilium et consul et rex habuerunt, unde bellum ordirentur. regiis creuerant animi uastatione concessa sibi ab hoste Pheraei agri; itaque eundum inde ad castra nec dandum ultra spatium cunctandi censebant. et Romani sentiebant cunctationem suam infamem apud socios esse, maxime indigne ferentis non latam Pheraeis opem. consultantibus, quid agerent — aderant autem Eumenes et Attalus in consilio — , trepidus nuntius adfert hostem magno agmine adesse. consilio dimisso signum extemplo datur, ut arma capiant. interim placet ex regiis auxiliis centum equites et parem numerum iaculatorum peditum exire. Perseus <hora> ferme diei quarta, cum paulo plus mille passus abesset a castris Romanis, consistere signa peditum iussit; praegressus ipse cum equitibus ac leui armatura; et Cotys cum eo ducesque aliorum auxiliorum praecesserunt. minus quingentos passus ab castris aberant, cum in conspectu fuere hostium equites; duae alae erant magna ex parte Gallorum — Cassignatus praeerat — et leuis armaturae centum fere et quinquaginta Mysi et Cretenses. constitit rex, incertus, quantae <hostium copiae> essent. duas inde ex agmine turmas Threcum, duas Macedonum cum binis Cretensium cohortibus et Threcum misit. proelium, cum pares numero essent neque ab hac aut illa parte noua auxilia subuenirent, incerta uictoria finitum est. Eumenis ferme triginta interfecti, inter quos Cassignatus dux Gallorum cecidit. et tunc quidem Perseus ad Sycurium copias reduxit; postero die circa eandem horam in eundem locum rex copias admouit plaustis cum aqua sequentibus; nam duodecim milium passuum <uia> omnis sine aqua et plurimi pulueris erat; aduectosque siti, si primo in conspectu dimicassent, pugnatuos fuisse apparebat. cum Romani quiescent, stationibus etiam intra uallum reductis, regii quoque in castra redeunt. hoc per aliquot dies fecerunt, sperantes fore, ut Romani equites abeuntium nouissimum agmen adgrederentur; inde certamine orto, cum longius a castris eos eliciissent, facile, ubiubi essent, se, qui equitatu et leui armatura plus possent, conuersuros aciem.

[58] Postquam inceptum non succedebat, castra propius hostem mouit rex et a quinque milibus passuum communiuit. inde luce prima in eodem, quo solebat, loco peditum acie instructa, equitatum omnem leuemque armaturam ad castra hostium ducit. uisus et plurium et propior solito puluis trepidationem in castris Romanis fecit. et primo

uix creditum nuntianti est, quia prioribus continuis diebus numquam ante horam quartam hostis apparuerat; tum solis ortus erat. deinde ut plurium clamore et cursu a portis dubitatio exempta est, tumultus ingens oboritur. tribuni praefectique et centuriones in praetorium, miles ad sua quisque tentoria discurrit. minus quingentos passus a uallo instruxerat Perseus suos circa tumulum, quam Callinicum uocant. laeuo cornu Cotys rex praeerat cum omnibus suae gentis; equitum ordines leuis armatura interposita distinguebat. in dextro cornu Macedones erant equites, intermixti turmis eorum Cretenses; huic armaturae Midon Beroeaeus, equitibus et summae partis eius Meno Antigonalensis praeerat. proximi cornibus constiterant regii equites, et, mixtum genus, delecta plurium gentium auxilia; Patrocles Antigonalensis his et Paeoniae praefectus Didas erant praepositi. medius omnium rex erat; circa eum agema quod uocant, equitumque sacrae alae. ante se statuit funditores iaculatoresque: quadringentorum manus utraque numerum explebat; Ionem Thessalonicensem et Artemona Dolopem iis praefecit. sic regii constiterant. consul intra uallum peditum acie instructa et ipse equitatum omnem cum leui armatura emisit; pro uallo instructi sunt. dextro cornu praepositus C. Licinius Crassus, consulis frater, cum omni Italico equitatu, uelitibus intermixtis; sinistro M. Ualerius Laeuinus sociorum ex Graecis populis equites habebat <et> eiusdem gentis leuem armaturam; mediam autem aciem cum delectis equitibus extraordinariis tenebat Q. Mucius. ducenti equites Galli ante signa horum instructi et de auxiliis Eumenis Cyrtiorum gentis trecenti. Thessali quadringenti equites paruo interuallo super laeuum cornu locati. Eumenes rex Attalusque cum omni manu sua ab tergo inter postremam aciem ac uallum steterunt.

[59] In hunc modum maxime instructae acies, par ferme utrimque numerus equitum ac leuis armaturae, concurrunt, a funditoribus iaculatoribusque, qui praecesserant, proelio orto. primi omnium Thraces, haud secus quam diu claustris retentae ferae, ita concitati cum ingenti clamore in dextrum cornu, Italicos equites, incurrerunt, ut usu belli et ingenio inpauida gens turbaretur * * <gla>diis hastas petere pedites * * nunc succidere crura <equ>is, nunc ilia suffodere. Perseus, in mediam inuectus aciem, Graecos primo impetu auertit; quibus <fus>is cum grauis ab tergo instaret hostis, Thessalorum equitatus, <qui a laeuo> cornu breui spatio diiunctus in subsidiis fuerat extra concursum, primo spectator certaminis, deinde inclinata re maximo usui fuit. cedentes enim sensim integris ordinibus, postquam se Eumenis auxiliis adiunxerunt, et cum eo tutum inter ordines suos receptum sociis fuga dissipatis dabant et, cum minus conferti hostes instarent, progredi etiam ausi multos fugientium obuios exceperunt. nec regii, sparsi iam ipsi passim sequendo, cum ordinatis et certo incedentibus gradu manus conserere audebant. cum uictor equestri proelio rex * * * * paruo momento si adiuuisset debellatum esse, et opportune adhortanti superuenit phalanx, quam sua sponte, ne audaci coepto deessent, Hippias et Leonnatus raptim adduxerant, postquam prospere pugnasse equitem acceperunt. fluctuante rege inter spem metumque tantae rei conandae Cretensis Euander, quo ministro Delphis ad insidias Eumenis regis usus erat, postquam agmen peditum uenientium sub signis uidit, ad regem accurrit et monere institit, ne elatus felicitate summam rerum temere in non necessariam aleam daret; si contentus bene re gesta quiescet eo die, uel pacis honestae condicionem habiturum uel plurimos belli socios, qui fortunam sequerentur, si bellare mallet. in hoc consilium pronior erat animus regis. itaque conlaudato Euandro signa referri peditumque agmen redire in castra iubet, equitibus receptui canere.

[60] Cecidere eo die ab Romanis ducenti equites, duo milia haud minus peditum; capti sescenti ferme. ex regiis autem uiginti equites, quadraginta pedites interfecti. postquam redire in castra uictores, omnes quidem laeti, ante alios Thracum insolens laetitia eminebat; cum cantu enim superfixa <hastis> capita hostium portantes redierunt. apud Romanos non maestitia tantum ex male gesta re, sed pauor etiam erat, ne extemplo castra hostis adgrederetur. Eumenes <consuli> suadere, ut trans Peneum transferret castra, ut pro munimento amnem haberet, dum perculsi milites animos colligerent. consul moueri flagitio timoris fatendi; uictus tamen ratione, silentio noctis transductis copiis, castra in ulteriore ripa communiuit. rex postero die ad lacessendos proelio hostes progressus, postquam trans amnem in tuto posita castra animaduertit, fatebatur quidem peccatum, quod pridie non institisset uictis, sed aliquanto maiorem culpam esse, quod nocte foret cessatum; nam, ut neminem alium suorum moueret, leui armatura inmissa, trepidantium in transitu fluminis hostium deleri magna ex parte copias potuisse. Romanis quidem praesens pauor demptus erat, in tuto castra habentibus; damnum inter cetera praecipue famae mouebat. et in consilio apud consulem pro se quisque in Aetolos conferebant causam: ab iis fugae terrorisque principium ortum; secutos pauorem Aetolorum et ceteros socios Graecorum populorum. quinque principes Aetolorum, qui primi terga uertentes conspecti dicebantur, <Romam missi>. Thessali pro contione laudati, ducesque eorum etiam uirtutis causa donati.

[61] Ad regem spolia caesorum hostium referebantur. [dona] ex his aliis arma insignia, aliis equos, quibusdam captiuos dono dabat. scuta erant supra mille quingenta; loricae thoracesque mille amplius summam explebant; galearum gladiatorumque et missilium omnis generis maior aliquanto numerus. haec per se ampla laetaque multiplicata uerbis regis, quae ad contionem uocato exercitu habuit. 'praeiudicatum euentum belli habetis. meliorem partem hostium, equitatum Romanum, quo inuictos se esse gloriabantur, fudistis. equites enim illis principes iuuentutis, equites seminarium senatus; inde lectos in patres consules, inde imperatores creant: horum spolia paulo ante diuisimus inter uos. nec minorem de legionibus peditum uictoriam habetis, quae nocturna fuga uobis subtractae naufragorum trepidatione passim natantium flumen compleuerunt. sed facilius nobis sequentibus uictos Peneum superare erit, quam illis trepidantibus fuit; transgressisque extemplo castra oppugnabimus, quae hodie cepissemus, ni fugissent; aut si acie decernere uolent, eundem pugnae pedestris euentum expectate, qui equitum in certamine fuit.' et qui uicerant, alacres, spolia caesorum hostium umeris gerentes, decora sua audiuerunt, ex eo, quod acciderat, spem futuri praecipientes, et pedites aliena gloria accensi, praecipue qui Macedonum phalangis erant, sibi quoque et nauandae regi operae et similem gloriam ex hoste pariendi occasionem <optabant. contione> dimissa, postero die profectus inde ad Mopselum posuit castra. tumulus hic ante Tempe eminent et Larisa medius abest Gonnum <eunti>.

[62] <Romani> non abscedentes ab ripa Penei transtulerunt in locum tutiorem castra. eo Misagenes Numida uenit cum mille equitibus, pari peditum numero, ad hoc elephantis duobus et uiginti. per eos dies consilium habenti regi de summa <rerum>, cum iam consedisset ferocia ab re bene gesta, ausi sunt quidam amicorum consilium dare, ut secunda fortuna in condicionem honestae pacis uteretur potius, quam spe uana euectus in casum inreuocabilem se daret. modum inponere secundis rebus nec nimis credere serenitati praesentis fortunae, prudentis hominis et merito felicitis esse. mitteret ad consulem, qui foedus in easdem leges renouarent, quibus Philippus pater eius pacem ab T. Quinctio uictore accepisset. neque finiri bellum magnificentius quam ab tam memorabili pugna <posse, neque> spem firmiorem pacis perpetuae dari, quam quae perculos aduerso proelio Romanos molliores factura sit ad paciscendum. quodsi Romani tum quoque insita pertinacia aequa aspernarentur, deos hominesque et moderationis Persei et illorum peruicacis superbiae futuros testes. numquam ab talibus consiliis abhorrebat regis animus. itaque <ut> plurium adsensu conprobata est sententia, legati ad consulem missi; adhibito frequenti consilio auditi sunt. pacem petiere, uetigal, quantum Philippus pactus esset, daturum Persea Romanis pollicentes; urbibus, agris locisque, quibus Philippus cessisset, cessurum <quam> primum. haec legati. summotis his cum consultarent, Romana constantia uicit in consilio. ita tum mos erat, in aduers<is reb>us uoltum secundae fortunae gerere, moderari animo in secundis. responderi placuit, ita pacem dari, si de summa rerum liberum senatui permittat rex de se deque uniuersa Macedonia statuendi ius. haec cum renuntiassent legati, miraculo ignaris <Romani> moris pertinacia esse, et plerique uetare amplius mentionem pacis facere; ultro mox quaesituros, quod oblatum fastidiant. Perseus hanc ipsam superbiam — quippe ex fiducia uirium esse — timere, et summam pecuniae augens, si pretio pacem emere posset, non destitit animum consulis temptare. postquam nihil ex eo, quod primo responderat, mutabat, desperata pace ad Sycurium, unde profectus erat, redit, belli casum de integro temptaturus.

[63] Fama equestris pugnae uulgata per Graeciam nudauit uoluntates hominum. non enim solum qui partis Macedonum erant, sed plerique ingentibus Romanorum obligati beneficiis, quidam uim superbiamque experti <Persei>, laeti eam famam accepere, non ob aliam causam quam prauo studio, quo etiam in certaminibus ludicris uulguS utitur, deteriori atque infirmiori fauendo.

Eodem tempore in Boeotia summa ui Haliartum Lucretius praetor oppugnabat; et quamquam nec habebant externa auxilia obsessi praeter Coronaeorum iuniores, qui prima obsidione moenia intrauerant, neque sperabant, tamen ipsi animis magis quam uiribus resistebant. nam et eruptiones in opera crebro faciebant, et arietem admotum nunc <saxis ingentibus, nunc> libramento plumbi grauatum ad terram urguebant, et si qua declinare nequiuissent ictum, pro diruto muro nouum tumultuario opere, raptim ex ipsa ruinae strage congestis saxis, extruebant. cum operibus lentior <oppugnatio> esset, scalas per manipulos diuidi praetor iussit, ut corona undique moenia adgressurus, eo magis suffecturam ad id multitudinem ratus, quod, qua parte palus urbem cingit, nec adtinebat oppugnari nec poterat. ipse ab ea parte, qua duae turres quodque inter eas muri erat, <corruebat>, duo milia militum delectorum admouit, <ut> eodem tempore, quo ipse transcendere ruinas conaretur, concursu aduersus se oppidanorum facto, scalis uacua defensoribus moenia capi parte aliqua possent. haud segniter oppidani uim eius arcere parant. nam super stratum ruinis locum fascibus aridis sarmentorum iniectis stantes cum ardentibus facibus accensuros eam se saepem minabantur, ut, incendio intersaepti ab hoste, spatium ad obiciendum interiorem murum haberent. quod inceptum eorum fors impediit; nam tantus repente effusus est imber, ut nec accendi facile pateretur et extingueret accensa. itaque et transitus per distracta fumantia uirgulta patuit, et in unius loci praesidium omnibus uersis moenia quoque pluribus simul partibus scalis capiuntur. in primo tumultu captae urbis seniores inpubesque, quos casus obuios obtulit, passim caesi; armati in arcem confugerunt; et postero die, cum spei nihil superesset, deditione facta sub corona uenierunt. fuerunt autem duo milia ferme et quingenti. ornamenta urbis, statuae et tabulae pictae, et quidquid pretiosae praedae fuit, ad naues delatum; urbs diruta a fundamentis. inde Thebas ductus exercitus; quibus sine certamine receptis urbem tradidit exulibus et qui Romanorum partis erant; aduersae factionis hominum fautorumque regis ac Macedonum familias sub corona uendidit. his gestis in Boeotia ad mare ac naues redit.

[64] Cum haec in Boeotia gererentur, Perseus ad Sycurium statiuam dierum aliquot habuit. ubi cum audisset raptim Romanos circa ex agris demessum frumentum conuehere, deinde ante sua quemque tentoria spicas falcibus desecantem, quo purius frumentum tereret, ingentis acervos per tota castra stramentorum fecisse, ratus incendio opportuna esse, faces taedamque et malleolos stuppae inlitos pice parari iubet; atque ita media nocte profectus, ut prima luce adgressus falleret. nequiquam primae stationes oppressae: tumultu ac terrore suo ceteros excitauerunt, signumque datum est arma extemplo capiendi; simulque in uallo, ad portas miles instructus erat. <tum uero pudore coeptae temere> et inconste oppugnationis castrorum Perseus [et] extemplo circumegit aciem et prima impedimenta ire, deinde peditum signa ferri iussit; ipse cum equitatu et leui armatura substitit ad agmen cogendum, ratus, id quod accidit, insecuturos ad extrema ab tergo carpenda hostis. breue certamen leuis armaturae maxime cum procuratoribus fuit; equites peditesque sine tumultu in castra redierunt.

Demessis circa segetibus Romani ad Crannona, intactum agrum, castra mouent. ibi cum securi et propter longinquitatem et uiae inopis aquarum difficultatem, quae inter Sycurium et Crannona est, statua haberent, repente prima luce <in> imminetibus tumultis equitatus regius cum leui armatura uisus ingentem tumultum fecit. pridie per meridiem profecti ab Sycurio erant; peditum agmen sub lucem reliquerant in proxuma planitie. stetit paulisper <Perseus> in tumultis, elici posse ratus ad equestre certamen Romanos; qui postquam nihil mouebant, equitem mittit, qui pedites referre ad Sycurium signa iuberet; ipse mox insecutus. Romani equites modico interuallo sequentes, sicubi sparsos ac dissipatos inuadere possent, postquam confertos abire signa atque ordines seruantes uiderunt, et ipsi in castra redeunt.

[65] Inde offensus longinquitate itineris rex ad Mopselum castra mouit; et Romani demessis Crannonis segetibus in Phalannaem agrum transeunt. ibi cum ex transfuga cognosset rex sine ullo armato praesidio passim uagantis per agros Romanos metere, cum <mille> equitibus, duobus milibus Thracum et Cretensium profectus, cum, quantum adcelerare poterat, effuso agmine isset, inprouiso adgressus est Romanos. iuncta uehicula, pleraque onusta, mille admodum capiuntur, sescenti ferme homines. praedam custodiendam ducendamque in castra trecentis Cretensium dedit; ipse reuocato ab effusa caede equite et reliquis peditum ducit ad proximum praesidium, ratus haud magno certamine opprimi posse. L. Pompeius tribunus militum praeerat, qui percussos milites repentino hostium aduentu in propinquum tumulum recepit, loci se praesidio, quia numero et uiribus impar erat, defensurus. ibi cum in orbem milites coegisset, ut densatis scutis ab ictu sagittarum et iaculorum sese tuerentur, Perseus circumdato armatis tumulo alios ascensum undique temptare iubet et comminus proelium conserere, alios eminus tela ingerere. ingens Romanos terror circumstabat; nam neque conferti propellere eos, qui in tumulum conitebantur, poterant et, ubi ordines procursando soluissent, patebant iaculis sagittisque. maxime cestrosphendonis uulnerabantur. hoc illo bello nouum genus teli inuentum est. bipalme spiculum hastili semicubitali infixum erat, crassitudine digiti; huic abiegnae breues pinnae tres, uelut sagittis solent, circumdabantur; funda media duo scutalia inparia habebat; cum maiori nisu libratum funditor habena rotaret, excussum uelut glans emicabat. cum et hoc et alio omni genere telorum pars uulnerata militum esset nec facile iam arma fessi sustinerent, instare rex, ut dederent se, fidem dare, praemia interdum polliceri. nec cuiusquam ad deditionem flectebatur animus, cum ex insperato iam obstinatis mori spes adfulsit. nam cum ex frumentatoribus refugientes quidam in castra nuntiassent consuli circumsideri praesidium, motus periculo tot ciuium — nam octingenti ferme et omnes Romani erant — cum equitatu ac leui armatura (accesserant noua auxilia, Numidae pedites equitesque et elephanti) castris egreditur et tribunis militum imperat, ut legionum signa sequantur. ipse uelitibus ad firmanda leuium armorum auxilia adiectis ad tumulum praecedit. consulis latera tegunt Eumenes <et> Attalus et Misagenes, regulus Numidarum.

[66] Cum in conspectu prima signa suorum circumsessis fuerunt, Romanis quidem ab ultima desperatione recreatus est animus. Perseus, cui primum omnium fuerat, ut contentus fortuito successu, captis aliquot frumentatoribus occisisque, non tereret tempus in obsidione praesidii, secundum, ea quoque temptata utcumque, cum sciret nihil roboris secum esse, dum liceret intacto abire, et ipse hostium aduentum elatus successu mansit et, qui phalangem arcesserent, propere misit; quae et serius, quam res postulabat, et raptim acta, turbata cursu aduersus instructos et praeparatos erat aduentura. consul anteueniens extemplo proelium conseruit. primo resistere Macedones; deinde, ut nulla re pares erant, amissis trecentis peditibus, uiginti quattuor primoribus equitum ex ala, quam sacram uocant, inter quos Antimachus etiam praefectus alae cecidit, abire conantur. ceterum iter prope ipso proelio tumultuosius fuit. phalanx trepido nuntio accita cum raptim duceretur, primo in angustiis captiuorum agmini oblata uehiculisque frumento onustis haesit. ingens ibi uexatio partis utriusque fuit, nullo expectante, <dum> utcumque explicaretur agmen, sed armatis deicientibus <in> praiceps inpedimenta — neque enim aliter uia aperiri poterat — , iumentis, cum stimularentur, in turba saeuientibus. uix ab incondito agmine captiuorum expedierant sese, cum regio agmini percussisque equitibus occurrunt. ibi uero clamor iubentium referre signa ruinae [quoque] prope similem trepidationem fecit, ut, <si> hostes intrare angustias ausi longius insecuti essent, magna clades accipi potuerit. consul recepto ex tumulo praesidio contentus modico successu in castra copias reduxit. sunt, qui eo die magno proelio pugnatum auctores sint; octo milia hostium caesa, in his Sopatrum et Antipatrum, regios duces; uiuos captos circiter duo milia octingentos, signa militaria capta uiginti septem. nec incruentam uictoriam fuisse; supra quattuor milia et trecentos de exercitu consulis cecidisse; signa sinistrae alae quinque amissa.

[67] Hic dies et Romanis refecit animos et Persea perculit, ut dies paucos ad Mopselum moratus sepulturae maxime militum amissorum cura, praesidio satis ualido ad Gonnum relicto, in Macedoniam reciperet copias. Timotheum quendam ex regiis praefectis cum modica manu relinquit ad Philam, iussum Magnetas ex propinquo temptare. cum Pellam uenisset, exercitu in hiberna dimisso ipse cum Cotye Thessalonicam est profectus. eo fama adfertur, Autlesbim, regulum Thracum, <et> Corragum, Eumenis praefectum, in Cotyis fines impetum fecisse et regionem, Marenen quam uocant, cepisse. itaque dimittendum Cotyn ad sua tuenda ratus, magnis proficiscentem donis prosequitur. ducenta talenta, semestre stipendium, equitatu numerat, cum primo annum dare constituisset.

Consul postquam profectum Persea audiuit, ad Gonnum castra mouet, si potiri oppido posset. ante ipsa Tempe in faucibus situm Macedoniae claustra tutissima praebet et in Thessaliam opportunum Macedonibus decursum. cum et loco et praesidio ualido inexpugnabilis urbs esset, abstinit incepto. in Perrhaebiam flexis itineribus Malloea primo impetu capta ac direpta, Tripoli aliaque Perrhaebia recepta, Larisam redit. inde Eumene atque Attalo domum remissis, Misageni Numidisque hiberna in proxumis Thessaliae urbibus distribuit, et partem exercitus ita per totam Thessaliam diuisit, ut et hiberna commoda omnes haberent et praesidio urbibus essent. Q. Mucium legatum cum duobus milibus ad obtinendam Ambraciam misit. Graecarum ciuitatum socios omnes praeter Achaeos dimisit. cum exercitus parte profectus in Achaiam Pthiotim Pteleum desertum fuga oppidanorum diruit a fundamentis, Antronas uoluntate incolentium recepit. ad Larisam deinde exercitum admouit. urbs deserta erat; in arcem omnis multitudo concesserat; eam oppugnare adgreditur. primi omnium Macedones, regium praesidium, metu excesserant: a quibus relictis oppidani in deditionem extemplo ueniunt. dubitantem inde, utrum Demetrias prius adgredienda foret, an in Boeotia aspiciendae res, Thebani uexantibus eos Coronaeis in Boeotiam arcescebant. et <ad> horum preces <et> quia hibernis aptior regio quam Magnesia erat, in Boeotiam duxit.

LIBER XLIII

[1] Eadem aestate qua in Thessalia [haec gesta sunt], * * * legatus in Illyricum a consule missus opulenta duo oppida oppugnauit. Ceremiam ui atque armis coegit in deditionem; omniaque iis sua concessit, ut opinione clementiae eos, qui Carnuntem, munitam urbem, incolebant, adliceret. Postquam nec, ut dederent se, compellere neque capere obsidendo poterat, ne duabus oppugnationibus nequiquam fatigatus miles esset, quam prius intactam urbem reliquerat, diripuit. Alter consul C. Cassius nec in Gallia, quam sortitus erat, memorabile quicquam gessit et per Illyricum ducere legiones in Macedoniam uano incepto est conatus. Ingressum hoc iter consulem senatus ex Aquileiensium legatis cognouit, qui querentes coloniam suam nouam et infirmam necdum satis munitam inter infestas nationes Histrorum et Illyriorum esse, cum peterent, ut senatus curae haberet, quomodo ea colonia muniretur, interrogati, uellentne eam rem C. Cassio consuli mandari, responderunt Cassium Aquileiam indicto exercitu profectum per Illyricum in Macedoniam esse. Ea res primo incredibilis uisa, et pro se quisque credere Carnis forsitan aut Histris bellum inlatum. Tum Aquileienses: nihil se ultra scire nec audere adfirmare, quam triginta dierum frumentum militi datum et duces, qui ex Italia itinera in Macedoniam nossent, conquisitos abductosque. Enimuero senatus indignari tantum consulem ausum, ut suam prouinciam relinqueret, in alienam transiret, exercitum nouo periculoso[que] itinere inter exterarum gentes duceret, uiam tot nationibus in Italiam aperiret. Decernunt frequentes, ut C. Sulpicius praetor tris ex senatu nominet legatos, qui eo die proficiscantur ex urbe et, quantum adcelerare possint, Cassium consulem, ubicumque sit, persequantur; nuntient, ne bellum cum ulla gente moueat, nisi cum qua senatus gerendum censuerit. Legati hi profecti M. Cornelius Cethegus, M. Fuluius, P. Marcius Rex. Metus de consule atque exercitu distulit eo tempore muniendae Aquileiae curam.

[2] Hispaniae deinde utriusque legati aliquot populorum in senatum introducti. Ii de magistratuum Romanorum auaritia superbiaque conquesti, nixi genibus ab senatu petierunt, ne se socios

foedius spoliari uexarique quam hostes patiantur. Cum et alia indigna quererentur, manifestum autem esset pecunias captas, L. Canuleio praetori, qui Hispaniam sortitus erat, negotium datum est, ut in singulos, a quibus Hispani pecunias repeterent, quinos recuperatores ex ordine senatorio daret patronosque, quos uellent, sumendi potestatem faceret. Uocatis in curiam legatis recitatum est senatus consultum, iussique nominare patronos. Quattuor nominauerunt, M. Porcium Catonem, P. Cornelium Cn. F. Scipionem, L. Aemilium L. F. Paulum, C. Sulpicium Gallum. Cum M. Titinio primum, qui praetor A. Manlio M. Iunio consulibus in citeriore Hispania fuerat, recuperatores sumpserunt. Bis ampliatus, tertio absolutus est reus. Dissensio inter duarum prouinciarum legatos est orta; citerioris Hispaniae populi M. Catonem et [P.] Scipionem, ulterioris L. Paulum et Gallum Sulpicium patronos sumpserunt. Ad recuperatores adducti a citerioribus populis P. Furius Philus, ab ulterioribus M. Matienus; ille Sp. Postumio Q. Mucio consulibus triennio ante, hic biennio prius L. Postumio M. Popilio consulibus praetor fuerat. Grauiissimis criminibus accusati ambo ampliati; cum dicenda de integro causa esset, excusati exilii causa solum uertisse. Furius Praeneste, Matienus Tibur exulatum abierunt. Fama erat prohiberi a patronis nobiles ac potentes conpellare; auxitque eam suspicionem Canuleius praetor, quod omissa ea re dilectum habere instituit, dein repente in prouinciam abiit, ne plures ab Hispanis uexarentur. Ita praeteritis silentio oblitteratis in futurum tamen consultum ab senatu Hispanis, quod impetrarunt, ne frumenti aestimationem magistratus Romanus haberet neue cogeret uicensusas uendere Hispanos, quanti ipse uellet, et ne praefecti in oppida sua ad pecunias cogendas imponerentur.

[3] Et alia noui generis hominum ex Hispania legatio uenit. Ex militibus Romanis et ex Hispanis mulieribus, cum quibus conubium non esset, natos se memorantes, supra quattuor milia hominum, orabant, ut sibi oppidum, in quo habitarent, daretur. Senatus decreuit, uti nomina sua apud L. Canuleium profiterentur eorumque, si quos manumisissent; eos Carteiam ad Oceanum deduci placere; qui Carteiensium domi manere uellent, potestatem fieri, uti numero colonorum essent, agro adsignato. Latinam eam coloniam esse libertinorumque appellari. Eodem tempore ex Africa et Gulussa regulus, Masinissae filius, legatus patris, et Carthaginienses uenerunt. Gulussa prior in senatum introductus et, quae missa erant ad bellum Macedonicum a patre suo, exposuit et, si qua praeterea uellent imperare, praestaturum merito populi Romani est pollicitus et monuit patres conscriptos, ut a fraude Carthaginiensium cauerent: classis eos magnae parandae consilium cepisse, specie pro Romanis et aduersus Macedonas; ubi ea parata instructaque esset, ipsorum fore potestatis, quem hostem aut socium habeant. Hanc iniec . . .

[4] . . . tis tantum exinde pauorem ingressi castra, ostentantes capita fecerunt, ut, si admotus extemplo exercitus foret, capi castra potuerint. tum quoque fuga ingens facta est; et erant, qui legatos mittendos ad pacem precibus petendam censerent; ciuitatesque conplures eo nuntio audito in deditionem uenerunt. Quibus purgantibus sese culpamque in duorum amentiam conferentibus, qui se ultro ad poenam ipsi obtulissent, cum ueniam dedisset praetor, profectus extemplo ad alias ciuitates omnibus imperata facientibus quieto exercitu pacatum agrum, qui paulo ante ingenti tumultu arserat, peragrauit. Haec lenitas praetoris, qua sine sanguine ferocissimam gentem domuerat, eo gratior plebi patribusque fuit, quo crudelius auariusque in Graecia bellatum et ab consule Licinio et ab Lucretio praetore erat. Lucretium tribuni plebis absentem contionibus adsiduis lacerabant, cum rei publicae causa abesse excusaretur; sed tum adeo uicina etiam inexplorata erant, ut is eo tempore in agro suo Antiati esset aquamque ex manubiis Antium ex flumine Loracinae duceret. Id opus centum triginta milibus aeris locasse dicitur; tabulis quoque pictis ex praeda fanum Aesculapi exornauit. Inuidiam infamiamque ab Lucretio auerterunt in Hortensium, successorem eius, Abderitae legati flentes ante curiam querentesque oppidum suum ab Hortensio expugnatum ac direptum esse; causam excidii fuisse urbi, quod, cum centum milia denarium et tritici quinquaginta milia modium imperaret, spatium petierint, quo de ea re et ad Hostilium consulem et Romam mitterent legatos. Uixdum ad consulem se peruenisse et audisse oppidum expugnatum, principes securi percussos, sub corona ceteros uenisse. Indigna res senatui uisa, decreueruntque eadem de Abderitis, quae de Coronaeis decreuerant priore anno, eademque pro contione edicere Q. Maenium praetorem iusserunt. Et legati duo, C. Sempronius Blaesus Sex. Iulius Caesar, ad restituendos in libertatem Abderitas missi. Iisdem mandatum, ut et Hostilio consuli et Hortensio praetori nuntiarent, senatum Abderitis iniustum bellum inlatum conquirique omnes, qui in seruitute sint, et restitui in libertatem aecum censere.

[5] Eodem tempore de C. Cassio, qui consul priore anno fuerat, tum tribunus militum in Macedonia cum A. Hostilio erat, querellae ad senatum delatae sunt, et legati regis Gallorum Cincibili uenerunt. Frater eius uerba in senatu fecit questus Alpinorum populorum agros, sociorum suorum, depopulatum C. Cassium esse et inde multa milia hominum in seruitutem abripuisse. Sub idem tempus Carnorum Histrorumque et Iapydum legati uenerunt: duces sibi ab consule Cassio primum imperatos, qui in Macedoniam ducenti exercitum iter monstarent; pacatum ab se tamquam ad aliud bellum gerendum abisse. Inde ex medio regressum itinere hostiliter peragrasse fines suos; caedes passim rapinasque et incendia facta; nec se ad id locorum scire, propter quam causam consuli pro hostibus fuerint. Et regulo Gallorum absenti et his populis responsum est senatum ea, quae facta querantur, neque scisse futura, neque, si sint facta, probare. Sed indicta causa damnari absentem consularem uirum iniurium esse, cum is rei publicae causa absit; ubi ex Macedonia redisset C. Cassius, tum, si coram eum arguere uellent, cognita re senatum daturum operam, uti satisfiat. Nec responderi tantum iis gentibus, sed legatos mitti, duos ad regulum trans Alpibus, tres circa eos populos placuit, qui indicarent, quae patrum sententia esset. Munera mitti legatis ex binis milibus aeris censuerunt; fratri reguli haec praecipua, torques duo ex quinque pondo auri facti et uasa argentea quinque ex uiginti pondo et duo equi phalerati cum agasonibus et equestria arma ac sagula, et comitibus eorum uestimenta, liberis seruisque. Haec missa; illa petentibus data, ut denorum equorum iis commercium esset educendique ex Italia potestas fieret. Legati cum Gallis missi trans Alpibus C. Laelius, M. Aemilius Lepidus, ad ceteros populos C. Sicinius, P. Cornelius Blasio, T. Memmius.

[6] Multarum simul Graeciae Asiaeque ciuitatum legati Romam conuenerunt. Primi Athenienses introducti; ii se, quod nauium habuerint militumque, P. Licinio consuli et C. Lucretio praetori misisse exposuerunt; quibus eos non usos frumenti sibi centum milia imperasse; quod, quamquam sterilem terram ararent, ipsosque etiam agrestis peregrino frumento alerent, tamen, ne deessent officio, confecisse; et alia, quae imperarentur, praestare paratos esse. Milesii nihil, [quod] praestitissent, memorantes, si quid imperare ad bellum senatus uellet, praestare se paratos esse polliciti sunt. Alabandenses templum Urbis Romae se fecisse commemorauere ludosque anniuersarios ei diuae instituisse; et coronam auream quinquaginta pondo, quam in Capitolio ponerent donum Ioui optimo maximo, attulisse et scuta equestria trecenta; ea, cui iussissent, tradituros. Donum ut in Capitolio ponere et sacrificare liceret, petebant. Hoc [et] Lampsaceni, octoginta pondo coronam adferentes, petebant, commemorantes discessisse se a Perseo, postquam Romanus exercitus in Macedoniam uenisset, cum sub dicione Persei et ante Philippi fuissent. Pro eo et quod imperatoribus Romanis omnia praestitissent, id se tantum orare, ut in amicitiam populi Romani reciperentur, et, si pax cum Perseo fieret, exciperentur, ne in regiam potestatem reciderent. Ceteris legatis comiter responsum; Lampsacenos in sociorum formulam referre Q. Maenius praetor iussus. Munera omnibus in singulos binum milium aeris data. Alabandenses scuta reportare ad A. Hostilium consulem in Macedoniam iussi. Et ex Africa legati simul Carthaginiensium [et Masinissae uenerunt: legati Carthaginiensium] tritici deciens centum milia et hordei quingenta indicantes se ad mare deuecta habere, ut, quo senatus censuisset, deportarent; id munus officiumque suum scire minus esse quam pro meritis populi Romani et uoluntate sua; sed saepe alias bonis in rebus utriusque populi se gratorum fideliumque socium muneribus functos esse. Item Masinissae legati tritici eandem summam polliciti et mille et ducentos equites, duodecim elephantos; et si quid aliud opus esset, uti inperaret senatus: aequae propenso animo et, quae ipse ultro pollicitus sit, praestaturum esse. Gratiae et Carthaginiensibus et regi actae, rogatique, ut ea, quae pollicerentur, ad Hostilium consulem in Macedoniam deportarent. legatis in singulos binum milium aeris munera missa.

[7] Cretensium legatis commemorantibus se, quantum sibi imperatum a P. Licinio consule esset sagittariorum, in Macedoniam misisse, cum interrogati non infitiarentur apud Persea maiorem

numerum sagittariorum [suorum] quam apud Romanos militare, responsum est, si Cretenses bene ac nauiter destinarent potio-rem populi Romani quam regis Persei amicitiam habere, senatum quoque Romanum iis tamquam certis sociis responsum daturum esse. Interea nuntiarent suis placere senatui dare operam Cretenses, ut, quos milites intra praesidia regis Persei haberent, eos primo quoque tempore domum reuocarent. Cretensibus cum hoc responso dimissis Chalcidenses uocati, quorum legatio ipso introitu mouit, quod Micythion, princeps eorum, pedibus captus lectica est introlatus; ultimae necessitatis extemplo uisa res, in qua ita adfecto excusatio uale- tudinis aut ne ipsi quidem petenda uisa foret aut data petenti non esset. Cum sibi nihil uiui relicum praeterquam linguam ad deplorandas patriae suae calamitates praefatus esset, exposuit ciuitatis primum suae benefacta et uetera et ea, quae Persei bello praestitissent ducibus exercitibusque Romanis; tum quae primo C. Lucretius in populares suos praetor Romanus superbe, auare, crudeliter fecisset; deinde quae tum cum maxime L. Hortensius faceret. Quem ad modum omnia sibi, etiam iis, quae patiantur, tristiora, patienda esse ducant potius, quam fide decedant, sic, quod ad Lucretium Hortensiumque attineret, scire tutius fuisse claudere portas quam in urbem eos accipere. Qui exclusissent eos, Emathiam, Amphipolim, Maroneam, Aenum incolumes esse. Apud se templa omnibus ornamentis spoliata; compilataque sacrilegiis C. Lucretium nauibus Antium deuexisse; libera corpora in seruitutem abrepta; fortunas sociorum populi Romani direptas esse et cotidie diripi. Nam ex instituto C. Lucreti Hortensium quoque in tectis hieme pariter atque aestate naualis socios habere, et domos suas plenas turba nautica esse; uersari inter se, coniuges liberosque suos, quibus nihil neque dicere pensi sit neque facere.

[8] Accersere in senatum Lucretium placuit, ut disceptaret coram purgaretque sese. Ceterum multo plura praesens audiuit, quam in absentem iacta erant; et grauiores potentioresque accessere accusatores duo tribuni plebis, M'. Iuuentius Talna et Cn. Aufidius. Ii non in senatu modo eum lacerarunt, sed in contionem etiam pertracto multis obiectis probris diem dixerunt. Senatus iussu Chalcidensibus Q. Maenius praetor respondit, quae bene meritos sese et ante et in eo bello, quod geratur, de populo Romano dicant, ea et scire uera eos referre senatum et perinde ac debeant grata esse. Quae facta [a] C. Lucretio fierique ab L. Hortensio praetoribus Romanis querantur, ea neque facta neque fieri uoluntate senatus quem non posse existimare, qui sciat bellum Persei et ante Philippo, patri eius, intulisse populum Romanum pro libertate Graeciae, non ut ea a magistratibus suis socii atque amici paterentur? litteras se ad L. Hortensium praetorem duros esse, quae Chalcidenses querantur acta, ea senatui non placere; si qui in seruitutem liberi uenissent, ut eos conquirendos primo quoque tempore restituendosque in libertatem curaret; sociorum naualium neminem praeter magistros, in hospitia deduci aequum censere. Haec Hortensio iussu senatus scripta. Munera binum milium aeris legatis missa et uehicula Micythioni publice locata, quae eum Brundisium commode perueherent. C. Lucretium, ubi dies, quae dicta erat, uenit, tribuni ad populum accusarunt multamque deciens centum milium aeris dixerunt. Comitibus habitis omnes quinque et triginta tribus eum condemnarunt.

[9] In Liguribus eo [anno] nihil memorabile gestum. Nam nec hostes mouerunt arma, neque consul in agrum eorum legiones induxit; et satis explorata pace eius anni milites duarum legionum Romanarum intra dies sexaginta, quam in prouinciam uenit, dimisit. Sociorum nominis Latini exercitu mature in hiberna Lunam et Pisas deducto ipse cum equitibus Galliae prouinciae pleraque oppida adit. Nusquam alibi quam in Macedonia bellum erat. Suspectum tamen Gentium, Illyriorum regem, habebant. Itaque et octo nauis ornatas a Brundisio senatus censuit mittendas ad C. Furium legatum Issam, qui cum praesidio duarum Issensium nauium insulae praeerat — duo milia militum in eas naues sunt inposita, quae M. Raecius praetor ex senatus consulto in ea parte Italiae, quae obiecta Illyrico est, conscripsit — , et consul Hostilius Ap. Claudium in Illyricum [cum] quattuor milibus peditum misit, ut accolae Illyrici tutaretur. Qui non contentus iis, quas adduxerat, copiis auxilia ab sociis conrogando ad octo milia hominum [ex] uario genere armauit peragratamque omni ea regione ad Lynchnidum Dassaretiorum consedit.

[10] Haud procul inde Uscana oppidum finium imperiique Persei erat. decem milia ciuium habebat et modicum custodiae causa Cretensium praesidium. Inde nuntii ad Claudium occulti ueniebant, si propius copias admouisset, paratos fore, qui proderent urbem. Et operae pretium esse: non se amicosque tantum, sed etiam milites praeda expleturum. Spes cupiditati admota ita occaecauit animum, ut nec ex iis qui uenerant quemquam retineret nec obsides, pignus futuros afore fraudem agenda rei, posceret nec mitteret exploratum nec fidem acciperet. Die tantum statuta profectus a Lychnido duodecim milia ab urbe, ad quam tendebat, posuit castra. Quarta inde uigilia signa mouit mille ferme ad praesidium castrorum relictis. Inconpositi, longo agmine effusi, infrequentes, cum nocturnus error dissiparet, ad urbem peruenerunt. Creuit neclegentia, postquam neminem armatum in muris uiderunt. Ceterum, ubi primum sub ictu teli fuerunt, duabus simul portis erumpitur; et ad clamorem erumpentium ingens strepitus e muris ortus ululantium mulierum cum crepitu undique aeris, et incondita multitudo turba inmixta seruili uariis uocibus personabat. Hic tam multiplex undique obiectus terror effecit, ne sustinere primam procellam eruptionis Romani possent. Itaque fugientes plures quam pugnantes interempti sunt; uix duo milia hominum cum ipso legato in castra perfugerunt. Quo longius iter in castra erat, eo pluris fessos consecrandi hostibus copia fuit. Ne moratus quidem in castris Appius, ut suos dissipatos fuga colligeret, quae res palatis per agros saluti fuisset, ad Lychnidum protinus reliquias cladis reduxit.

[11] Haec et alia haud prospere in Macedonia gesta ex Sex. Digitio tribuno militum, qui sacrificii causa Romam uenerat, sunt audita. Propter quae ueriti patres, ne qua maior ignominia acciperetur, legatos in Macedoniam M. Fuluium Flaccum et M. Caninium Rebilum miserunt, qui conperta, quae agerentur, referrent; et ut A. Atilius consul comitia consulibus rogandis ita ediceret, uti mense Ianuario confici possent, et ut primo quoque tempore in urbem rediret. Interim M. Raecio praetori mandatum, ut edicto senatores omnes ex tota Italia, nisi qui rei publicae causa abessent, Romam reuocaret: qui Romae essent, ne quis ultra mille passuum ab Roma abesset. Ea, uti senatus censuit, sunt facta. comitia consularia ante diem quintum kal. Febr. fuere. Creati consules sunt Q. Marcius Philippus iterum et Cn. Seruilius Caepio. Post diem tertium praetores sunt facti C. Decimius, M. Claudius Marcellus, C. Sulpicius Gallus, C. Marcius Figulus, Ser. Cornelius Lentulus, P. Fonteius Capito. Designatis praetoribus praeter duas urbanas quattuor prouinciae sunt decretae: Hispania et Sardinia et Sicilia et classis. Legati ex Macedonia exacto admodum mense Februario redierunt. Hi, quas res ea aestate prospere gessisset rex Perseus, referebant, quantusque timor socios populi Romani cepisset tot urbibus in potestatem regis redactis. Exercitum consulis infrequentem commeatibus uulgo datis per ambitionem esse; culpam eius rei consulem in tribunos militum, contra illos in consulem conferre. Ignominiam Claudii temeritate acceptam eleuare eos patres acceperunt, qui perpauca Italici generis et magna [ex parte] tumultuario dilectu conscriptos ibi milites amissos referebant. Consules designati ubi primum magistratum inissent, de Macedonia referre ad senatum iussi; destinataeque prouinciae iis sunt Italia et Macedonia. Hoc anno intercalatum est: tertio die post Terminalia kalendae intercalariae fuere. Sacerdotes intra eum annum mortui sunt L. Flamininus . . . pontifices duo decesserunt, L. Furius Philus et C. Liuius Salinator. In locum Furii T. Manlium Torquatum, in Liuii M. Seruiliū pontifices legerunt.

[12] Principio insequentis anni cum consules noui Q. Marcius et Cn. Seruilius de prouinciis rettulissent, primo quoque tempore aut conparare eos inter se Italiam et Macedoniam aut sortiri placuit; priusquam id sors cerneret, in incertum, ne quid gratia momenti faceret, in utramque prouinciam, quod res desideraret supplementi decernunt in Macedoniam peditum Romanorum sex milia, sociorum nominis Latini sex milia, equites Romanos ducentos quinquaginta, socios trecentos; ueteres milites dimitti, ita ut in singulas Romanas legiones ne plus sena milia peditum, treceni equites essent. Alteri consuli nullus certus finitus numerus ciuium Romanorum, quem in supplementum legeret. id modo finitum, ut duas legiones scriberet, quae quina milia peditum et ducenos haberent, equites trecenos. Latinorum maior quam collegae decretus numerus, peditum decem milia et sescenti equites. Quattuor praeterea legiones scribi iussae, quae, si quo opus esset, educerentur. Tribunos iis, non permissum, ut consules facerent: populus creauit. Sociis nominis Latini sedecim milia peditum et mille equites imperati. Hunc exercitum parari tantum placuit, ut exiret, si quo res posceret. Macedonia maxime curam praebebat. In classem mille socii nauales ciues Romani libertini ordinis, ex Italia [quingenti] scribi iussi; totidem ut ex Sicilia scriberentur; et cui ea prouincia euenisset, mandatum, ut eos in Macedoniam, ubicumque classis esset, deportandos curaret. In Hispaniam tria milia peditum Romanorum in supplementum, trecenti equites decreti. Finitus ibi quoque in legiones militum numerus, peditum quina milia duceni et treceni equites. Et sociis imperare praetor, cui Hispania obuenisset, iussus quattuor milia peditum et trecentos equites.

[13] Non sum nescius ab eadem neglegentia, quia nihil deos portendere uulgo nunc credant, neque nuntiari admodum ulla prodigia in publicum neque in annales referri. Ceterum et mihi uetustas res scribenti nescio quo pacto anticus fit animus, et quaedam religio tenet, quae illi prudentissimi uiri publice suscipienda censuerint, ea pro indignis habere, quae in meos annales referam. Anagnia duo prodigia eo anno sunt nuntiata, facem in caelo conspectam et bouem feminam locutam; [eam] publice ali. Menturnis quoque per eos dies caeli ardentis species affulserat. Reate imbri lapidauit. Cumis in arce Apollo triduum ac tris noctes lacrimauit. In urbe Romana duo aeditui nuntiarunt, alter in aede Fortunae anguem iubatum a conpluribus uisum esse, alter in aede Primigeniae Fortunae, quae in Colle est, duo diuersa prodigia, palmam in area enatam et sanguine interdum pluuisse. Duo non suscepta prodigia sunt, alterum, quod in priuato loco factum esset, — palmam enatam [in] inpluuio suo T. Marcius Figulus nuntiabat — , alterum, quod in loco peregrino: Fregellis in domo L. Atrei hasta, quam filio militi emerat, interdum plus duas horas arsisse, ita ut nihil eius ambureret ignis, dicebatur. Publicorum prodigiorum causa libri a decemuiris aditi: quadraginta maioribus hostiis quibus diis consules sacrificarent ediderunt, et uti supplicatio fieret cunctique magistratus circa omnia puluinaria uictumis maioribus sacrificarent populusque coronatus esset. Omnia, uti decemuiui praeierunt, facta.

[14] Censoribus deinde creandis comitia edicta sunt. Petierunt censuram principes ciuitatis, C. Ualerius Laeuinus, L. Postumius Albinus, P. Mucius Scaeuola, M. Iunius Brutus, C. Claudius Pulcher, Ti. Sempronius Gracchus. Hos duos censores creauit populus Romanus. Cum dilectus habendi maior quam alias propter Macedonicum bellum cura esset, consules plebem apud senatum accusabant, quod [et] iuniores non responderent. Aduersus quos C. Sulpicius et M. Claudius praetores plebis causam egerunt: non consulibus, sed ambitiosis consulibus dilectum difficilem esse; neminem inuitum militem ab iis fieri. Id ut ita esse scirent et patres conscripti, praetores se, quibus uis imperii minor et auctoritas esset, dilectum, si ita senatui uideretur, perfecturos esse. Id praetoribus magna patrum [approbatione], non sine suggillatione consulum mandatum est. Censores, ut eam rem adiuuarent, ita in contione edixerunt: legem censui censendo dicturos esse, ut praeter commune omnium ciuium ius iurandum haec adiurarent: ‘tu minor annis sex et quadraginta es tuque ex edicto C. Claudii Ti. Semproni censorum ad dilectum prodisti et, quotienscumque dilectus erit, quoad hi censorum magistratum habebunt, si miles factus non eris, in dilectum prodibis?’ item, quia fama erat multos ex Macedonicis legionibus incertis comitatibus per ambitionem imperatorum ab exercitu abesse, edixerunt de militibus P. Aelio [C. Popilio] consulibus postea eos consules in Macedoniam scriptis, ut, qui eorum in Italia essent, intra dies triginta, censi prius apud sese, in prouinciam redirent; qui in patris aut aui potestate essent, eorum nomina ad se ederentur. Missorum quoque causas sese cognituros esse; et quorum ante emerita stipendia gratiosa missio sibi uisa esset, eos milites fieri iussuros. Hoc edicto litterisque censorum per fora et conciliabula dimissis tanta multitudo iuniorum Romam conuenit, ut grauis urbi turba insolita esset.

[15] Praeter dilectum eorum, quos in supplementum mitti oportebat, quattuor a C. Sulpicio praetore scriptae legiones sunt, intraque undecim dies dilectus est perfectus. Consules deinde sortiti prouincias sunt. Nam praetores propter iurisdictionem maturius sortiti erant. Urbana C. Sulpicio, peregrina C. Decimio obtigerat; Hispaniam M. Claudius Marcellus, Siciliam Ser. Cornelius Lentulus, Sardiniam P. Fonteius Capito, classem C. Marcius Figulus erat sortitus. Consulum Cn. Seruilius Italia, Q. Marcus Macedonia obuenerat; Latinisque actis Marcius extemplo est profectus. Caepione deinde referente ad senatum, quas ex nouis legionibus duas legiones secum in Galliam duceret, decreuere patres, ut C. Sulpicius M. Claudius praetores ex iis, quas scripsissent, legionibus, quas uideretur, consuli darent. Indigne patiens praetorum arbitrio consulem subiectum, dimisso senatu ad tribunal praetorum stans postulauit, ex senatus consulto destinarent sibi duas legiones. Praetores consulis in eligendo arbitrium fecerunt. Senatum deinde censores legerunt: M. Aemilius Lepidus princeps ab tertiis iam censoribus lectus. septem de senatu eiecti sunt. In censu accipiendo populi milites ex Macedonico exercitu, qui quam multi abessent ab signis census docuit, in prouinciam [redire] cogeabant; causas ~stipendiis missorum cognoscebant, et cuius nondum iusta missio uisa esset, ita iusiurandum adigebant: ‘ex tui animi sententia, tu ex edicto C. Claudii Ti. Semproni censorum in prouinciam Macedoniam redibis, quod sine dolo malo facere poteris?’

[16] In equitibus recensendis tristis admodum eorum atque aspera censura fuit: multis equos ademerunt. In ea re cum equestrem ordinem offendissent, flammam inuidiae adiecere edicto, quo edixerunt, ne quis eorum, qui Q. Fuluius A. Postumio censoribus publica uectigalia aut ultro tributa conduxissent, ad hastam suam accederet sociusue aut adfinis eius conductionis esset. Saepe id querendo ueteres publicani cum impetrare nequissent ab senatu, ut modum potestati censoriae inponerent, tandem tribunum plebis P. Rutilium, ex rei priuatae contentione iratum censoribus, patronum causae nanci sunt. Clientem [eius] libertinum parietem in Sacra uia aduersus aedes publicas demoliri iusserant, quod publico inaedificatus esset. Appellati a priuato tribuni. cum praeter Rutilium nemo intercederet, censores ad pignora capienda miserunt multamque pro contione priuato dixerunt. Hinc contentione orta cum ueteres publicani se ad tribunum contulissent, rogatio repente sub unius tribuni nomine promulgatur, quae publica uectigalia [aut] ultro tributa C. Claudius et Ti. Sempronius locassent, ea rata locatio ne esset: ab integro locarentur, et ut omnibus redimendi et conducendi promiscue ius esset. Diem ad [eius] rogationem concilio tribunus plebis dixit. Qui postquam uenit ut censores ad dissuadendum processerunt, Graccho dicente silentium fuit; [cum] Claudio obstreperetur, audientiam facere praeconem iussit. Eo facto auocatam a se contionem tribunus questus et in ordinem se coactum ex Capitolio, ubi erat concilium, abijt. Postero die ingentis tumultus ciere. Ti. Gracchi primum bona consecrauit, quod in multa pignoribusque eius, qui tribunum appellasset, intercessionem non parendo se in ordinem coegisset; C. Claudio diem dixit, quod contionem ab se auocasset; et utrique censori perduellionem se iudicare pronuntiauit diemque comitiis a C. Sulpicio praetore urbano petit. Non recusantibus censoribus, quominus primo quoque tempore iudicium de se populus faceret, in ante diem octauum et septimum kal. Octobres comitiis perduellionis dicta dies. Censores extemplo in atrium Libertatis escenderunt et ibi obsignatis tabellis publicis clausoque tabulario et dimissis seruis publicis negarunt se prius quidquam publici negotii gesturos, quam iudicium populi de se factum esset. Prior Claudius causam dixit; et cum ex duodecim centuriis equitum octo censorem condemnassent multaeque aliae primae classis, extemplo principes ciuitatis in conspectu populi anulis aureis positis uestem mutarunt, ut supplices plebem circumirent. Maxime tamen sententiam uertisse dicitur Ti. Gracchus, quod, cum clamor undique plebis esset periculum Graccho non esse, conceptis uerbis iurauit, si collega damnatus esset, non expectato de se iudicio comitem exilii eius futurum. Adeo tamen ad extremum spei uenit reus, ut octo centuriae ad damnationem defuerint. Absoluto Claudio tribunus plebis negauit se Gracchum morari.

[17] Eo anno postulantibus Aquileiensiū legatis, ut numerus colonorum augeretur, mille et quingentae familiae ex senatus consulto scriptae triumuirique, qui eas deducerent, missi sunt T. Annius Luscus, P. Decius Subulo, M. Cornelius Cethegus. Eodem anno C. Popilius et Cn. Octavius legati, qui in Graeciam missi erant, senatus consultum Thebis primum recitatum per omnes Peloponnesi urbes circumtulerunt, ne quis ullam rem in bellum magistratibus Romanis conferret, praeterquam quod senatus censuisset. Hoc fiduciam in posterum quoque praebuerat, leuatos se oneribus[que] inpensisque, quibus, alia aliis inperantibus, exhauriebantur. Achaico concilio Aegi iis dato benigne locuti auditique, egregia spe futuri status fidissima gente relictā, in Aetoliam traiecerunt. Ibi nondum quidem seditio erat, sed omnia suspecta criminumque inter ipsos plena; ob quae obsidibus postulatis neque exitu rei inposito in Acarnaniam inde profecti legati sunt. Thyrraei concilium legatis Acarnanes dederunt. Ibi quoque inter factiones erat certamen: quidam principum postulare, ut praesidia in urbes suas inducerentur aduersus amentiam eorum, qui ad Macedonas gentem trahebant; pars recusare, ne, quod bello captis et hostibus mos esset, id pacatae et sociae ciuitates ignominiae acciperent. Iusta deprecatio haec uisa.

Larisam ad Hostilium proconsulem — ab eo enim missi erant — legati redierunt. Octavius retinuit secum, Popilius cum mille ferme militibus in hiberna Ambraciam misit.

[18] Perseus principio hiemis egredi Macedoniae finibus non ausus, ne qua in regnum uacuum inrumperent Romani, sub tempus brumae, cum inexcuperabilis ab Thessalia montes nimis altitudo facit, occasionem esse ratus frangendi finitimorum spes animosque, ne quid auerso se in Romanum bellum periculi ab iis esset, cum a Thracia pacem Cotys, ab Epiro Cephalus repentina defectione ab Romanis praestarent, Dardanos recens domuisset bellum, solum infestum esse Macedoniae latus, quod ab Illyrico pateret, cernens, neque ipsis quietis Illyriis et aditum praebentibus Romano, si domuisset proximos Illyriorum, Gentium quoque regem iam diu dubium in societatem perlici posse, cum decem milibus peditum, quorum pars phalangitae erant, et duobus milibus leuium armorum et quingentis equitibus profectus Stuberram uenit. Inde frumento conplurium dierum sumpto iussuque apparatu oppugnandarum urbium sequi, tertio die ad Uscanam — Penestianae terrae ea maxima urbs est — posuit castra, prius tamen, quam uim admoueret, missis, qui temptarent nunc praefectorum praesidii, nunc oppidanorum animos. Erat autem ibi cum iuuentute Illyriorum Romanum [praesidium]. postquam nihil pacati referebant, oppugnare est adortus et corona eam capere conatus est. cum sine intermissione interdum noctuque alii aliis succedentes, pars scalas muris, [pars] ignem portis inferrent, sustinebant tamen eam tempestatem propugnatores urbis, quia spes erat neque hiemis uim diutius pati Macedonas in aperto posse, nec ab Romano bello tantum regi laxamenti fore, ut posset morari. Ceterum postquam uineas agi turresque excitari uident, uicta pertinacia est. Nam praeterquam quod aduersus uim pares non erant, ne frumenti quidem aut ullius alterius rei copia intus erat, ut in necopinata obsidione. Itaque cum spei nihil ad resistendum esset, C. Caruilius Spoletinus et C. Afranius a praesidio Romano missi, qui a Perseo peterent primo, ut armatos suaque secum ferentis abire sineret, dein, si id minus impetrarent, uitae tantum libertatisque fidem acciperent. Promissum id benignius est ab rege quam praestitum; exire enim sua secum efferentibus iussis primum arma, [dein libertatem] ademit. His urbe egressis et Illyriorum cohors — quingenti erant — et Uscanenses se urbemque dederunt.

[19] Perseus praesidio Uscanae inposito multitudinem omnem deditorum, quae prope numero exercitum aequabat, Stuberram abducit. Ibi Romanis- quattuor milia autem hominum erant — praeter principes in custodiam ciuitatum diuisis, Uscanensibus Illyriisque uenditis, in Penestas exercitum reducit ad Oaeneum oppidum in potestatem redigendum, et alioqui opportune situm, et transitus ea est in Labeates, ubi Gentius regnabat. Praetereunti frequens castellum, Draudacum nomine, peritorum quidam regionis eius nihil Oaeneo capto opus esse ait, nisi in potestate et Draudacum sit; opportunius etiam ad omnia positum esse. Admoto exercitu omnes extemplo dederunt sese. [Ad] quam spe celeriores deditioem erectus postquam animaduertit, quantus agminis sui terror esset, undecim alia castella eodem metu in potestatem redigit. Ad perpauca ui opus fuit, cetera uoluntate dedita; et in his recepti mille et quingenti dispositi per praesidia milites Romani. Magno usui Caruilius Spoletinus erat in conloquiis dicendo nihil in ipsos saeuitum. Deinde Oaeneum peruentum est, quod sine iusta oppugnatione capi non poterat. Et maiore aliquanto, quam cetera, iuuentute et ualidum oppidum moenibus erat, et hinc amnis, Artatus nomine, hinc mons praealtus et aditu difficilis cingebat. Haec spem ad resistendum oppidanis dabant. Perseus circumuallato oppido aggerem a parte superiore ducere instituit, cuius altitudine muros superaret. Quod opus dum perficitur, crebris interim proeliis, quibus per excursions et moenia sua oppidani tutabantur et opera hostium impediabant, magna eorum multitudo uariis casibus absumpta est, et qui supererant, labore diurno nocturnoque [et] uulneribus inutiles erant. Ubi primum agger iniunctus muro est, et cohors regia, quos Nicatoras appellant, transcendit, et scalis multis simul partibus inpetus in urbem est factus. Puberes omnes interfecti sunt; coniuges liberosque eorum in custodiam dedit; praedae alia militum cessere. Stuberram inde uictor reuertens ad Gentium legatos Pleuratum Illyrium, exulantem apud se, et Adaeum Macedonem a Beroea mittit; iis mandat, ut exponerent aestatis eius hiemisque acta sua aduersus Romanos Dardanosque; adicerent recentia in Illyrico hibernae expeditionis opera; hortarentur Gentium in amicitiam secum et cum Macedonibus iungendam.

[20] Hi transgressi iugum Scordi montis, per Illyrici solitudines, quas de industria populando Macedones fecerant, ne transitus faciles Dardanis in Illyricum aut Macedoniam essent, Scodram labore ingenti tandem peruenerunt. Lissi rex Gentius erat. Eo acciti legati, qui mandata exponentes benigne auditi sunt; responsum sine effectu tulerunt, uoluntatem sibi non deesse ad bellandum cum Romanis; ceterum ad conandum id, quod uelit, pecuniam maxime deesse. Haec Stuberram rettulere regi tum maxime captiuos ex Illyrico uendenti. Extemplo iidem legati, addito Glaucia ex numero custodum corporis, remittuntur sine mentione pecuniae, qua una barbarus inops inpelli ad bellum non poterat. Ancyram inde populatus Perseus in Penestas rursus exercitum reducit firmatisque Uscanae et circa eam per omnia castella, quae receperat, praesidiis in Macedoniam sese recipit.

[21] L. Coelius, legatus Romanus, praeerat Illyrico; qui moueri non ausus, cum in iis locis rex esset, post profectionem demum eius conatus in Penestis Uschanam recipere, a praesidio, quod ibi Macedonum erat, cum multis uolneribus repulsus Lychnidum copias reduxit. Inde post dies paucos M. Trebellium Fregellum cum satis ualida manu [in] Penestas misit ad obsides ab iis urbibus, quae in amicitia cum fide permanserant, accipiendos; procedere etiam in Parthinos — ii quoque obsides dare pepigerant — iussit. Ab utraque gente sine tumultu exigit. Penestarum equites Apolloniam, Parthinorum Dyrrachium, — tum Epidamni magis celebre nomen Graecis erat — missi. Ap. Claudius acceptam in Illyrico ignominiam corrigere cupiens Phanotam, Epiri castellum, adortus oppugnare est. Auxilia Chaonum Thesprotorumque praeter Romanum exercitum, ad sex milia hominum, secum adduxit; neque operae pretium fecit Cleua, qui relictus a Perseo erat, cum ualido praesidio defendente. Et Perseus, Elimeam profectus et circa eam exercitu lustrato ad Stratum uocantibus Epirotis ducit. Stratus ualidissima tum urbs Aetoliae erat; sita est super Ambracium sinum prope amnem Inachum. Cum decem milibus peditum eo profectus est et equitibus trecentis, quos pauciores propter angustias uiarum et asperitatem duxit. Tertio die cum peruenisset ad Citium montem, uix transgressus propter altitudinem niuis locum quoque castris aegre inuenit. Profectus inde, magis quia manere non poterat, [quam] quod tolerabilis aut uia aut tempestas esset, cum ingenti uexatione praecipue iumentorum altero die ad templum Iouis, Nicaeum quem uocant, posuit castra. Ad Aratthum inde flumen itinere ingenti emenso retentus altitudine amnis mansit. Quo spatio temporis ponte perfecto, traductis copiis diei progressus iter obuium Archidamum, principem Aetolorum, per quem ei Stratus tradebatur, habuit.

[22] Eo die ad finem agri Aetolici castra posita; inde altero die ad Stratum peruentum; ubi prope Inachum amnem castris [positis], cum expectaret effusos omnibus portis Aetolos in fidem suam uenturos, clausas portas atque ipsa ea nocte, qua uenerat, receptum Romanum praesidium cum C. Popilio legato inuenit. Principes, qui praesentis Archidami auctoritate compulsi regem arcessierant, obuiam egresso Archidamo segniores facti locum aduersae factioni dederant ad Popilium cum mille peditibus ab Ambracia accersendum. In tempore et Dinarchus, praefectus equitum gentis Aetolorum, cum sescentis peditibus et equitibus centum [uenit]. Satis constabat eum tamquam ad Persea tendentem Stratum uenisse, mutato deinde cum fortuna animo Romanis se, aduersus quos uenerat, iunxisse. Nec Popilius securior, quam debebat esse, inter tam mobilia ingenia erat. Claues portarum custodiamque murorum suae extemplo potestatis fecit; Dinarchum Aetolosque cum iuuentute Stratorum in arcem per praesidii speciem amouit. Perseus ab imminentibus superiori parti urbis tumultis temptatis conloquiis, cum obstinatos atque etiam telis procul arcentis uideret, quinque milia passuum ab urbe trans Petitarum amnem posuit castra. Ibi consilio aduocato cum Archidamus Epirotarumque transfugae retinerent, Macedonum principes non pugnandum cum infesto tempore anni censerent, nullis praeparatis commeatibus, cum inopiam prius obsidentes quam obsessi sensuri essent, maxime quod hostium haud procul inde hiberna erant, territus in Aperantiam castra mouit. Aperanti eum propter Archidami magnam in ea gente gratiam auctoritatemque consensu omnium acceperunt; is ipse cum octingentorum militum praesidio his est praepositus.

[23] Rex cum [non] minore uexatione iumentorum hominumque, quam uenerat, in Macedoniam redit; Appium tamen ab obsidione Phanotes fama ducentis ad Stratum Persei summouit. Cleuas cum praesidio inpigrorum iuuenum insecutus sub radicibus prope inuiis montium ad mille hominum ex agmine inpedito occidit, ad ducentos

cepit. Appius superatis angustiis in campo, quem Meleona uocant, statua dierum paucorum habuit. Interim Cleuas adsumpto Philostrato, qui [DC ex] Epirotarum gente habebat, in agrum Antigonensem transcendit. Macedones ad depopulationem profecti; Philostratus cum cohorte sua in insidiis loco obscuro consedit. In palatos populatores cum erupissent ab Antigonea armati, fugientes eos persequentes effusius in uallem insessam ab hostibus praecipitant. Ibi DCoccisis, centum ferme captis, et ubique prospere gesta re prope statua Appi castra mouent, ne qua uis sociis suis ab Romano exercitu inferri possit. Appius nequiquam in his locis terens tempus, dimissis Chaonum [Thesprotorum]que et si qui alii Epirotae erant praesidiis, cum Italicis militibus in Illyricum regressus, per Parthinorum socias urbes in hiberna militibus diuisis, ipse Romam sacrificii causa redit. Perseus ex Penestarum gente mille pedites, ducentos equites reuocatos Cassandream, praesidio ut essent, misit. Ab Gentio eadem adferentes redierunt. Nec deinde alios atque alios mittendo temptare eum destitit, cum appareret, quantum in eo praesidii esset, nec tamen impetrare ab animo posset, ut inpensam in rem maximi ad omnia momenti faceret.

LIBER XLIV

[1] Principio ueris, quod hiemem eam, qua haec gesta sunt, insecutum est, ab Roma profectus Q. Marcius Philippus consul cum quinque milibus * * * , quod in supplementum legionum secum traiecturus erat, Brundisium peruenit. M. Popilius consularis et alii pari nobilitate adulescentes tribuni militum in Macedonicas legiones consulem secuti sunt. per eos dies et C. Marcius Figulus praetor, cui classis prouincia euenerat, Brundisium uenit; et simul ex Italia profecti Corcyram altero die, tertio Actium, Acarnaniae portum, tenuerunt. inde consul ad Ambraciam egressus itinere terrestri petit Thessaliam; praetor superato Leucata Corinthium sinum inuectus et Creusae relictis nauibus terra et ipse per mediam Boeotiam — diei unius expedito iter est — Chalcidem ad classem contendit. castra eo tempore A. Hostilius in Thessalia circa Palaepharsalum habebat, sicut nulla re bellica memorabili gesta, ita ad ~iunctam militarem disciplinam ab effusa licentia formato milite et sociis cum fide cultis et ab omni genere iniuriae defensis. audito successoris aduentu cum arma uiros equos cum cura inspexisset, ornato exercitu obuiam uenienti consuli processit. et primus eorum congressus ex dignitate ipsorum ac Romani nominis, et in rebus deinde gerendis — proconsul enim ad exercitum <mansit>-<summa concordia fuit>. paucis post diebus consul contionem apud milites habuit. orsus a parricidio Persei perpetrato in fratrem, cogitato in parentem, adiecit post scelere partum regnum ueneficia, caedes, latrocinio nefando petitem Eumenen, iniurias in populum Romanum, direptiones sociarum urbium contra foedus; ea omnia quam diis quoque inuisa essent, sensurum in exitu rerum suarum: fauere enim pietati fideique deos, per quae populus Romanus ad tantum fastigii uenerit. uires deinde populi Romani, iam terrarum orbem complectentis, cum uiribus Macedoniae, exercitus cum exercitibus conparauit: quanto maiores Philippi Antiochique opes non maioribus copiis fractas esse?

[2] Huius generis adhortatione accensis militum animis consultare de summa gerendi belli coepit. eo et C. Marcius praetor a Chalcide classe accepta uenit. placuit non ultra morando in Thessalia tempus terere, sed mouere extemplo castra atque inde pergere in Macedoniam, et praetorem dare operam, ut eodem tempore classis quoque inuehatur hostium litoribus. praetore dimisso consul menstruum <frumentum> iusso milite secum ferre profectus decumo post die, quam exercitum acceperat, castra mouit; et unius diei progressus iter conuocatis itinerum ducibus cum exponere in consilio iussisset, qua quisque ducturus esset, summotis iis, quam potissimum <uiam> peteret, rettulit ad consilium. aliis per Pythoum placebat uia, aliis per Cambunios montes, qua priore anno duxerat Hostilius consul, aliis praeter Ascuridem paludem. restabat aliquantum uiae communis; itaque in id tempus, quo prope diuortium itinerum castra posaturi erant, deliberatio eius rei differtur. in Perrhaebiam inde ducit, et inter Azorum et Dolichen statua habuit ad consulendum rursus, quam potissimum capesseret uiam. per eosdem dies Perseus cum adpropinquare hostem sciret, quod iter petiturus esset, ignarus, omnis saltus insidere praesidiis statuit. in iugum Cambuniorum montium — Uolustana ipsi uocant — decem milia leuis armaturae ~iuuenum cum duce Asclepiodoto mittit; ad castellum, quod super Ascuridem paludem erat — Lapathus uocatur locus — , Hippias tenere saltum cum duodecim milium Macedonum praesidio iussus. ipse cum reliquis copiis primo circa Dium statua habuit; deinde adeo inops consilii, ut obtorpuisse uideretur, cum equitibus expeditis litore nunc Heracleum, nunc Philam percurrerat, eodem inde cursu Dium repetens.

[3] Interim consuli sententia stetit eo saltu ducere, ubi propter Ottolobum dux regius castra <habebat>. praemitti tamen quattuor milia armatorum ad loca opportuna praeoccupanda placuit, qui<bus> praepositi sunt M. Claudius, Q. Marcius consulis filius. confestim et uniuersae copiae sequebantur. ceterum adeo ardua et aspera et confragosa fuit <uia>, ut praemissi expediti biduo quindecim milium passuum aegre itinere confecto castra posuerint. Dierum, quem cepere, locum appellant. inde postero die septem milia progressi, tumulto haud procul hostium castris capto, nuntium ad consulem remittunt peruentum ad hostem esse; loco se tuto et ad omnia opportuno consedissee; [ut] quantum extendere iter posset, consequeretur. sollicito consuli et propter itineris difficultatem, quod ingressus erat, et eorum uicem, quos paucos inter media praesidia hostium praemiserat, nuntius ad Ascuridem paludem occurrit. addita igitur et ipsi fiducia est, coniunctisque copiis castra tumulo, qui tenebatur, qua aptissimum ad loci naturam erat, sunt adclinata. non hostium modo castra, quae paulo plus mille passuum aberant, sed omnis regio ad Dium et Philam oraque maris late patente ex tam alto iugo prospectu oculis subicitur. quae res accendit militi animos, postquam summam belli ac regias omnis copias terramque hostilem tam e propinquo conspexerunt. itaque cum alacres, protinus duceret ad castra hostium, consulem hortarentur, dies unus fessis labore uiae ad quietem datus est. tertio die parte copiarum ad praesidium castrorum relicta consul ad hostem ducit.

[4] Hippias nuper ad tuendum saltum ab rege missus erat; qui ex quo castra Romana in tumulo conspexit, praeparatis ad certamen animis suorum uenienti agmini consulis obuius fuit. et Romani expediti ad pugnam exierant, et hostes leuis armatura erat, promptissimum genus ad lacesendum certamen. congressi igitur extemplo tela coniecerunt; multa utrimque uulnera temerario incursu et accepta et inlata; pauci utriusque partis ceciderunt. inritatis in posterum diem animis maioribus copiis atque infestius concursum <est; decreuissentque de summa> belli, si loci satis ad explicandam aciem fuisset; <sed> iugum montis in angustum dorsum cuneatum uix ternis ordinibus armatorum in fronte patuit. itaque paucis pugnantibus cetera multitudo, praecipue qui grauium armorum erant, spectatores pugnae stabant; leuis armatura etiam per anfractus iugi procurrare et ab lateribus cum leui armatura conserere per iniqua atque aequa loca pugnam poterat. pluribus ea die uulneratis quam interfectis proelium nocte diremptum est.

Tertio die egere consilio Romanus imperator; nam neque manere in iugo inopi neque regredi sine flagitio atque etiam periculo, si cedenti ex superioribus locis <in>staret hostis, poterat; nec aliud restabat quam audacter commissum pertinaci audacia, quae prudens interdum in exitu est, corrigere. uentum quidem erat eo, ut, si hostem similem antiquis Macedonum regibus habuisset consul, magna clades accipi potuerit. sed cum ad Dium per litora cum equitibus uagaretur rex et ab duodecim milibus prope clamorem et strepitum pugnantium audiret, nec auxit copias integros fessis summittendo neque ipse, quod plurimum intererat, certamini adfuit, cum Romanus imperator, maior sexaginta annis et praegrauis corpore, omnia militaria munera ipse inpigre obiret. egregie ad ultimum in audaciter commisso perseueravit et Popilio relicto in custodia iugi per inuia transgressurus praemissis, <qui> repurgarent iter, Attalum et Misagenem cum suae gentis utrumque auxiliaribus praesidio esse saltum aperientibus iubet; ipse equites impedimentaue prae se habens cum legionibus agmen cogit.

[5] Inenarrabilis labor descendentibus cum ruina iumentorum sarcinarumque. progressis uixdum quattuor milia passuum nihil optabilius esse quam redire, qua uenerant, si possent. hostilem prope tumultum agmini elephanti praebebant, qui, ubi ad inuia uenerant, deiectis rectoribus cum horrendo stridore pauorem ingentem, equis maxime, incutiebat, donec traducendi eos ratio inita est. per procliue sumpto fastigio longi duo ualidi asseres ex inferiore parte in terra defigebantur, distantes inter se paulo plus, quam quanta beluae latitudo est; in eos transuerso incumbente tigno as<ses> tricenos longi pedes, ut pons esset, iniungebantur humusque insuper iniciebatur. modico deinde infra interuallo similis alter pons, dein tertius et plures ex ordine, qua rupes abscisae erant, fiebant. solido procedebat elephantis in pontem; cuius priusquam in extremum <pro>cederet, succisis asseribus conlapsus pons usque <ad> alterius initium pontis prolabi eum leniter cogebat. alii elephanti pedibus insistentes, alii clunibus subsidentes prolabebantur. ubi planities altera pontis excepisset eos, rursus simili ruina inferioris pontis deferebantur, donec ad aequiorem uallem peruentum est. paulo plus septem milia <eo> die Romani processerunt; minimum pedibus itineris confectum. plerumque prouolentes se simul cum armis aliisque oneribus cum omni genere uexationis processerunt, adeo <ut> ne dux quidem et auctor itineris infitiaretur parua manu deleri omnem exercitum potuisse. nocte ad modicam planitiem peruenerunt; nec, quam infestus is locus esset saeptus undique, circumspiciendi spatium fuit uix tandem ex insperato stabilem ad insistendum nantis locum. postero quoque die in tam caua ualle opperiri Popilium ac relictas cum eo copias necesse fuit; quos et ipsos, cum ab nulla parte hostis terruisset, locorum asperitas hostiliter uexauit. tertio die coniunctis copiis eunt per saltum, quem incolae Callipeucen appellant. quarto inde die per aequae inuia, sed adsuetudine peritius et meliore cum spe, quod nec hostis usquam apparebat et mari adpropinquabant, degressi in campos inter Heracleum et Libethrum posuerunt castra [peditum], quorum pars maior tumulos tenebat. ibi <pedes tendebat>. uallo campi quoque partem, ubi eques tenderet, amplectebantur.

[6] Lauanti regi dicitur nuntiatum hostis adesse. quo nuntio cum pauidus exiluisset e solio, uictum se sine proelio clamitans proripuit; et subinde per alia atque <alia> pauida consilia et imperia trepidans duos ex amicis, Pellam alterum, ut, quae ad Phacum pecunia deposita erat, <in mare proiceret, Thessalonicam alterum, ut naualia incenderet, misit; Asclepiodotum et Hippiam, quique cum iis erant,> ex praesidiis reuocat omnisque aditus aperit bello. ipse ab Dio auratis statuīs omnibus raptis, ne praeda hosti essent, incolas eius loci demigrare Pydnam cogit, et, quae temeritas consulis uideri potuisset, quod eo processisset, unde inuito hoste regredi nequiret, eam non inconsultam audaciam fecit. duos enim saltus, per quos inde euadere possent, habebant Romani, unum per Tempe in Thessaliam, alterum in Macedoniam praeter Dium; quae utraque regiis tenebantur praesidiis. itaque si sua intrepidus defendens primam speciem adpropinquantis terroris sustinuisset, neque receptus Romanis per Tempe in Thessaliam neque commeatibus peruehendis ea patuisset iter. sunt enim Tempe saltus, etiamsi non bello fiat infestus, transitu difficilis. nam praeter angustias per quinque milia, qua exiguum iumento onusto iter est, rupes utrimque ita abscisae sunt, ut despici uix sine uertigine quadam simul oculorum animique possit. terret et sonitus et altitudo per mediam uallem fluentis Penei amnis. hic locus tam suapte natura infestus per quattuor distantia loca praesidiis regiis fuit insessus. unum in primo aditu ad Gonnum erat, alterum <in> Condylō, castello inexpugnabili, tertium circa Lapathunta, quem Characa appellant, quartum uiae ipsi, qua et media et angustissima ualles est, <in>positum, quam uel decem armatis tueri facile est. intercluso per Tempe simul aditu commeatibus, simul reditu ipsis, montes, per quos descenderant, repetendi erant. quod, ut furto fefellerant, ita propalam tenentibus superiora cacumina hostibus non poterant; et experta difficultas spem omnem incidisset. supererat nihil aliud in temere commisso quam in Macedoniam ad Dium per medios euadere hostis; quod, nisi di mentem regi ademissent, <et> ipsum ingentis difficultatis erat. nam cum Olympi radices montis paulo plus quam mille passuum ad mare relinquunt spatium, cuius dimidium loci occupat ostium late restagnans Baphyri amnis, partem planitiae aut Iouis templum aut oppidum tenet, relicum perexiguum fossa modica ualloque claudi poterat, et saxorum ad manum siluestrisque materiae tantum erat, ut uel murus obici turresque excitari potuerint. quorum nihil cum dispexisset caecata mens subito terrore, nudatis omnibus praesidiis patefactisque bello ad Pydnam refugit.

[7] Consul plurimum et praesidii et spei cernens in stultitia et segnitia hostis, remisso nuntio ad Sp. Lucretium Larisam, ut castella relictas ab hoste circa Tempe occuparet, praemisso Popilio ad explorandos transitus circa Dium, postquam patere omnia in omnis partes animaduertit, secundis castris peruenit ad Dium metarique sub ipso templo, ne quid sacro in loco uiolaretur, iussit. ipse urbem ingressus, sicut non magnam, ita exornatam publicis locis et multitudine statuarum munitamque egregie, uix satis credere in tantis rebus sine causa relictis non aliquem subesse dolum. unum diem ad exploranda circa omnia moratus castra mouet; satisque credens in Pieria frumenti copiam fore, eo die ad amnem nomine Mityn processit. postero die progressus Agassas urbem tradentibus sese ipsis recepit; et ut reliquorum Macedonum animos sibi conciliaret, obsidibus contentus sine praesidio relinquere se iis urbem immunesque ac suis legibus uicturos est pollicitus. progressus inde diei iter ad Ascordum flumen posuit castra; et quantum procederet longius a Thessalia, eo maiorem rerum omnium inopiam sentiens, regressus ad Dium est dubitatione omnibus exempta, quid intercluso ab Thessalia patiendum fuisset, cui procul inde abscedere tutum non esset. Perseus coactis in unum omnibus copiis ducibusque increpare praefectos praesidiorum, ante omnes Asclepiodotum atque Hippiam; ab his dicere claustra Macedoniae tradita Romanis esse; cuius culpa reus nemo iustius quam ipse fuisset. consuli postquam ex alto conspecta classis spem fecit cum commeatu naues uenire — ingens enim caritas annonae ac prope inopia erat — , ab inuectis iam portum audit onerarias naues Magnesiae relictas esse. incerto inde, quidnam agendum foret — adeo sine ulla ope hostis, quae adgrauaret, cum ipsa difficultate rerum pugnandum erat — , peropportune litterae a Sp. Lucretio adlatas sunt castella se, quae super Tempe essent et circa Philan, tenere omnia frumentique in iis et aliarum in usum rerum copiam inuenisse.

[8] His magno opere laetus consul ab Dio ad Philan ducit, simul ut praesidium eius firmaret, simul ut militi frumentum, cuius tarda subuectio erat, diuideret. ea profectio famam haudquaquam secundam habuit. nam alii metu recessisse eum ab hoste ferebant, quia manenti in Pieria proelio dimicandum foret, alii ignarum, belli quae in dies fortuna nouaret, ut opperientibus sese rebus, emisisse de manibus ea, quae mox repeti non possent. simul enim cessit possessione Dii, excitauit hostem, ut tunc tandem sentiret recuperanda esse, quae prius culpa amissa forent. audita enim profectione consulis regressus Dium, quae disiecta ac uastata ab Romanis erant, reficit, pinnas moenium decussas reponit, ab omni parte muros firmat; deinde quinque milia passuum ab urbe citra ripam Elpei amnis castra ponit, amnem ipsum transitu perdifficilem pro munimento habiturus. fluit ex ualle Olympi montis, aestate exiguus, hibernis idem incitatus pluuiis et supra rupes ingentis gurgites facit et infra prorutam in mare euoluendo terram praealtas uoragines cauatoque medio alueo ripas utrimque praecipitis. hoc flumine saeptum iter hostis credens extrahere relicum tempus aestatis in animo habebat.

Inter haec consul a Phila Popilium cum duobus milibus armatorum Heracleum mittit. abest a Phila quinque milia ferme passuum, media regione inter Dium Tempeque in rupe amni imminente positum.

[9] Popilius priusquam armatos muris admoueret, misit, qui magistratibus principibusque suaderent, fidem clementiamque Romanorum quam uim experiri mallent. nihil ea consilia mouerunt, quia ignes ad Elpeum ex regiis castris apparebant. tum terra marique — et classis adpulsa ab litore stabat — simul armis, simul operibus machinisque oppugnari coepti. iuuenes etiam quidam Romani ludicro circensi ad usum belli uerso partem humillimam muri ceperunt. mos erat tum, nondum hac effusione inducta bestiis omnium gentium circum complendi, uaria spectaculorum conquirere genera; nam semel quadrigis, semel desultore misso uix unius horae tempus utrumque curriculum conplebat. inter cetera sexageni ferme iuuenes, interdum plures apparatioribus ludis, armati inducebantur. horum inductio ex parte simulacrum decurrentis exercitus erat, ex parte elegantioris [exercitus] quam militaris artis propiorque gladiatorum armorum usum. cum alios decursu edidissent motus, quadrato agmine facto, scutis super capita densatis, stantibus primis, secundis summissioribus, tertiis magis et quartis, postremis etiam genu nixis, fastigatam, sicut tecta aedificiorum sunt, testudinem faciebant. hinc quinquaginta ferme pedum spatio distantes duo armati procurrebant comminatique inter se, ab ima in summam testudinem per densata scuta cum euasissent, nunc uelut propugnantes per oras extremae testudinis, nunc in media inter se concurrentes, haud secus quam stabili solo persultabant. huic testudo similis <humil>limae parti muri admota. cum armati superstantes subissent, propugnatoribus muri fastigio altitudinis aequabantur; depulsisque iis in urbem duorum signorum milites transcenderunt. id tantum dissimile fuit, quod et in fronte extremi et ex lateribus soli non habebant super capita elata scuta, ne nudarent corpora, sed proiecta pugnantium more. ita nec ipsos tela ex muro missa subeuntis laeserunt et testudini iniecta imbris in modum lubrico fastigio innoxia ad imum labebantur. et consul capto iam Heracleo castra eo promouit, tamquam Dium atque inde summoto rege in Pieriam etiam progressurus. sed hiberna iam praeparans uias commeatibus subuehundis ex Thessalia muniri iubet et eligi horreis opportuna loca tectaque aedificari, ubi deuersari portantes commeatus possent.

[10] Perseus tandem  pauore eo, quo attonitus fuerat, recepto animo malle imperiis suis non obtemperatum esse, cum trepidans gazam in mare deici Pellae, Thessalonicae naualia iusserat incendi. Andronicus Thessalonicam missus traxerat tempus, id ipsum, quod accidit, paenitentiae relinquens locum. incautior Nicias Pellae proiciendo pecuniae partem, quae fuerat <ad> Phacum; sed in re emendabili uisus lapsus esse, quod per urinatores omnis ferme extracta est. tantusque pudor regi pauoris eius fuit, ut urinatores clam interfici iusserit, deinde Andronicum quoque et Nician, ne quis tam dementis imperii conscius existeret. inter haec C. Marcius cum classe ab Heracleo Thessalonicam profectus et agrum pluribus locis expositis per litora armatis late uastauit et procurentes ab urbe secundis aliquot proeliis trepidos intra moenia conpulit. iamque ipsi urbi terribilis erat, cum dispositis omnis generis tormentis non uagi modo circa muros, temere adpropinquantes, sed etiam qui in nauibus erant, saxis tormento emicantibus percutiebantur. reuocatis igitur in naues militibus omissaque Thessalonicae oppugnatione Aeniam inde petunt. quindecim milia passuum ea urbs abest, aduersus Pydnam posita, fertilis agro. peruastatis finibus eius legentes oram Antigoneam perueniunt. ibi egressi in terram primo et uastarunt agros passim et aliquantum praedae contulerunt ad naues. dein palatos eos adorti Macedones, mixti pedites equitesque, fugientes effuse ad mare persecuti quingentos ferme occiderunt et non minus ceperunt. nec aliud quam ultima necessitas, cum recipere se tuto ad naues prohiberentur, animos militum Romanorum simul desperatione alia salutis simul indignitate inritauit. redintegrata in litore pugna est; adiuuere, qui in nauibus erant. ibi Macedonum ducenti ferme caesi, par numerus captus. ab Antigonea classis profecta ad agrum Pallenensem escensionem ad populandum fecit. finium is ager Cassandrensius erat, longe fertilissimus omnis orae, quam praeteruecti fuerant. ibi Eumenes rex uiginti tectis nauibus ab Elaea profectus obuius fuit et quinque missae a Prusia rege tectae naues.

[11] Hac uirium accessione animus creuit praetori, ut Cassandream oppugnaret. condita est a Cassandro rege in ipsis faucibus, quae Pallenensem agrum ceterae Macedoniae iungunt, hinc Toronaico, hinc Macedonico saepta m<ari>. eminet namque in altum lingua, in qua sita est, nec minus quam ~inaltus magnitudine Atho mons excurrit, obuersa in regionem Magnesiae duobus inparibus promunturiis, quorum maiori Posideum est nomen, minori Canastraeum. diuisis partibus oppugnare adorti. Romanus ad Clitas, quas uocant, munimenta, ceruis etiam obiectis, ut uiam intercluderet, a Macedonico ad Toronaicum mare perducit. ab altera parte euripus est; inde Eumenes oppugnabat. Romanis in fossa conplenda, quam nuper obiecerat Perseus, plurimum erat laboris. ibi quaerenti praetori, quia nusquam cumuli apparebant, quo regesta e fossa terra foret, monstrati sunt fornices: non ad eandem crassitudinem, qua ueterem murum, sed simplici laterum ordine structos esse. consilium igitur cepit transfosso pariete iter in urbem patefacere. fallere autem ita se posse, si muros a parte alia scalis adortus tumultu iniecto in custodiam eius loci propugnatores urbis auertisset. erant in praesidio Cassandreae praeter non contemnendam iuuentutem oppidanorum octingenti Agrianes et duo milia Penestarum Illyriorum, a Pleurato inde missi, bellicosum utrumque genus. his tuentibus muros, cum subire Romani summa ui niterentur, momento temporis parietes fornicum perfossi urbem patefecerunt. quod si, qui inrumperent, armati fuissent, extemplo cepissent. hoc ubi perfectum esse opus militibus nuntiatum est, clamorem alacres gaudio repente tollunt, alii parte alia in urbem inrupturi.

[12] Hostis primum admiratio cepit, quidnam sibi repentinus clamor uellet. postquam patere urbem accepere praefecti praesidii Pytho et Philippus, pro eo, qui occupasset adgredi, opus factum esse rati, cum ualida manu Agrianum Illyriorumque erumpunt Romanosque, qui alii aliunde coibant conuocabanturque, ut signa in urbem inferrent, inconpositos atque inordinatos fugant persecunturque ad fossam, in quam compulsos ruina cumulant. sescenti ferme ibi interfecti, omnesque prope, qui inter murum fossamque deprenti erant, uulnerantur. ita suo ipse conatu percussus praetor segnior ad alia factus consilia erat. et ne Eumeni quidem simul a mari simul a terra adgredienti quidquam satis procedebat. placuit igitur utrique custodiis firmatis, ne quod praesidium ex Macedonia intromitti posset, quoniam uis aperta non processisset, operibus moenia oppugnare. haec parantibus iis decem regii lembi ab Thessalonica cum delectis Gallorum auxiliaribus missi, cum in salo stantes hostium naues conspexissent, ipsi obscura nocte, simplici ordine, quam poterant proxime litus tenentes, intrarunt urbem. huius noui praesidii fama absistere oppugnatione simul Romanos regemque coegit. circumuecti promunturium ad Toronen classem appulerunt. eam quoque oppugnare adorti, ubi ualida defendi manu animaduenterunt, inrito incepto Demetriadem petunt. ibi cum adpropinquantes repleta moenia armatis uidissent, praeteruecti ad Iolcon classem appulerunt, inde agro uastato Demetriadem quoque aggressuri.

[13] Inter haec et consul, ne segnis sederet tantum in agro hostium, M. Popilium cum quinque milibus militum ad Meliboeam urbem oppugnandam mittit. sita est in radicibus Ossae montis, qua parte in Thessaliam uergit, opportune inminens super Demetriadem. primus aduentus hostium perculit incolas loci; collectis deinde <ab> necopinato pauore animis discurrunt armati ad portas ac moenia, qua suspecti aditus erant, spemque extemplo inciderunt capi primo impetu posse. obsidio igitur parabatur, et opera <ad> oppugnationem fieri coepta. Perseus cum audisset simul Meliboeam a consulis exercitu oppugnari, simul classem Iolci stare, <ut> inde Demetriadem adgrederetur, Euphranorem quendam ex ducibus cum delectis duobus milibus Meliboeam mittit. eidem imperatum, ut, si a Meliboea summouisset Romanos, Demetriadem prius occulto itinere intraret, quam ab Iolco ad urbem castra mouerent Romani. et ab oppugnatoribus Meliboeae, cum in superioribus locis repente apparuisset, cum trepidatione multa relictis opera sunt <ignisque> iniectus. ita a Meliboea abscessum est. Euphranor soluta unius urbis obsidione Demetriadem extemplo ducit. nocte moenia <intrat tantamque fiduciam incolentibus fecit, ut non moenia> modo, sed agros etiam confiderent se a populationibus tueri posse; et eruptiones in uagos populatores non sine uulneribus hostium factae sunt. circumuecti tamen moenia sunt praetor et rex, situm urbis contemplantes, si qua parte temptare aut opere aut ui possent. fama fuit per Cydantem Cretensem et Antimachum, qui Demetriadi praeerat, tractatas inter Eumenen et Persea condiciones amicitiae. ab Demetriade certe abscessum est. Eumenes ad consulem nauigat; gratulatus<que>, quod prospere Macedoniam intrasset, Pergamum in regnum abit. Marcius Figulus praetor parte classis in hiberna Sciathum missa cum reliquis nauibus Oreum Euboeae petit, eam urbem aptissimam ratus, unde exercitibus, qui in Macedonia quique in Thessalia erant, mitti commeatus possent. de Eumene rege longe diuersa tradunt. si Ualerio Antiati credas, nec classe adiutum ab eo praetorem esse, cum saepe eum litteris accersisset, tradit, nec cum gratia ab consule profectum in Asiam, indignatum, quod, ut iisdem castris tenderet, permissum non fuerit; ne ut equites quidem Gallos, quos secum adduxerat, relinqueret, impetrari ab eo potuisse. Attalum fratrem eius et remansisse apud consulem, et sinceram eius fidem aequali tenore egregiamque operam in eo bello fuisse.

[14] Dum bellum in Macedonia geritur, legati Transalpini ab regulo Gallorum — Balanus ipsius traditur nomen; gentis ex qua fuerit, non traditur — Romam uenerunt pollicentes ad Macedonicum bellum auxilia. gratiae ab senatu actae muneraque missa, torquis aureus duo pondo et paterae aureae quattuor pondo, equus phaleratus armaque equestria. secundum Gallos Pamphylii legati coronam auream ex

uiginti milibus Philippeorum factam in curiam intulerunt, petentibusque iis, ut id donum in cella Iouis optimi maximi ponere et sacrificare in Capitolio liceret, permissum; benigneque amicitiam renouare uolentibus legatis responsum et binum milium aeris singulis missum munus. tum ab rege Prusia et paulo post ab Rhodiis de eadem <re> longe aliter disserentes legati auditi sunt. utraque legatio de pace reconcilianda cum rege Perseo egit. Prusiae preces magis quam postulatio fuere, profitentis et ad id tempus se cum Romanis stetisse et, quoad bellum foret, staturum; ceterum cum ad se a Perseo legati uenissent de finiendo cum Romanis bello, eis pollicitum deprecatores apud senatum futurum; petere, si possent inducere in animum, ut finiant iras, se quoque ingratia reconciliatae pacis ponerent. haec regii legati. Rhodii superbe commemoratis <meritis suis> erga populum Romanum et paene uictoriae, utique de Antiocho rege, maiore parte ad se uindicata, adiecerunt: cum pax inter Macedonas Romanosque esset, sibi amicitiam cum rege Perseo coeptam; eam se inuitos, nullo eius in se merito, quoniam ita Romanis uisum sit in societatem se belli trahere, interrupuisse. tertium se annum multa eius incommoda belli sentire mari intercluso; inopem insulam esse nec, nisi maritimis iuuetur commeatibus, colendam. itaque cum id ultra pati non possent, legatos alios ad Persea in Macedoniam misisse, qui ei denuntiarent Rhodiis placere pacem eum componere cum Romanis; se Romam eadem nuntiatum missos. per quos stetisset, quo minus belli finis fieret, aduersus eos quid sibi faciendum esset, Rhodios consideraturos esse. <ne> nunc quidem haec sine indignatione legi audiriue posse certum habeo; inde existimari potest, qui habitus animorum audientibus ea patribus fuerit.

[15] Claudius nihil responsum auctor est, tantum senatus consultum recitatum, quo Caras et Lycios liberos esse iuberet populus Romanus litterasque extemplo ad utramque gentem [sciret indicatum] mitti; qua audita re principem legationis, cuius magniloquentiam uix curia paulo ante ceperat, corruisse. alii responsum esse tradunt, populum Romanum et principio eius belli haud uanis auctoribus conpertum habuisse Rhodios cum Perseo rege aduersus rem publicam suam occulta consilia inisse, et, <si> id ante dubium fuisset, legatorum paulo ante uerba ad certum redegissee, et plerumque ipsam se fraudem, etiamsi initio cautior fuerit, detegere. Rhodios nunc in orbe terrarum arbitria belli pacisque agere; Rhodiorum nutu arma sumpturos positurosque Romanos esse. iam non deos foederum testis, sed Rhodios habituros. itane tandem? nisi pareatur iis exercitusque de Macedonia deportentur, uisuros esse, quid sibi faciendum sit? quid Rhodii uisuri sint, ipsos scire. populum certe Romanum deuicto Perseo, quod prope diem sperent fore, uisurum, ut pro meritis cuiusque in eo bello ciuitatis gratiam dignam referat. munus tamen legatis in singulos binum milium aeris missum est, quod ii non acceperunt.

[16] Litterae deinde <re> citatae Q. Marcii consulis sunt, quemadmodum saltu superato in Macedoniam transisset: ibi et ex aliis locis commeatus se prospectos in hiemem habere et ab Epirotis uiginti milia modium tritici, decem hordei sumpsisse, ut pro eo frumento pecunia Romae legatis eorum curaretur. uestimenta militibus ab Roma mittenda esse; equis ducentis ferme opus esse, maxime Numidi<cis>, nec sibi in his locis ullam copiam esse. senatus consultum, ut ea omnia ex litteris consulis fierent, factum est. Sulpicius praetor sex milia togarum, triginta tunicarum, equos ducentos deportanda in Macedoniam praebendaque arbitrato consulis locauit et legatis Epirotarum pecuniam pro frumento soluit et Onesimum, Pythonis filium, nobilem Macedonem, in senatum introduxit. is pacis semper auctor regi fuerat monueratque, sicut pater eius Philippus institutum usque ad ultimum uitae diem seruaret cotidie, bis in die foederis icti cum Romanis perlegendi, ut eum morem, si non semper, crebro tamen usurparet. postquam detertere eum a bello nequii, primo subtrahere sese per alias atque alias <causas>, ne interesset iis, quae non probabat, coepit; postremo, cum suspectum se esse cerneret et prodicionis interdum crimine insimulari, ad Romanos transfugit <et> magno usui consuli fuit. ea introductus in curiam cum memorasset, senatus in formulam sociorum eum referri iussit, locum, lautia praeberi, agri Tarentini, qui publicus populi Romani esset, ducenta iugera dari, et aedes Tarenti emi. uti ea curaret, C. [17] Iam in exitu annus erat, et propter Macedonici maxime belli curam in sermonibus homines habebant, quos in annum consules ad finiendum tandem id bellum crearent. itaque senatus consultum factum est, ut Cn. Seruilius primo quoque tempore ad comitia habenda ueniret. senatus consultum Sulpicius praetor ad consulem <misit, litterasque allatas a consule> post paucos dies recitauit, quibus <in> ante diem * * <comitia edixit: se ante eum diem> in urbem uenturum. et consul maturauit et comitia eo die, qui dictus erat, sunt perfecta. consules creati L. Baebius urbanam, L. Anicius peregrinam et si quo senatus censuisset, Cn. Octavius classem, P. Fonteius Hispaniam, <M. Aebutius Siciliam,> C. Papirius Sardiniam est sortitus.

[18] Extemplo apparuit omnibus non segniter id bellum L. Aemilium gesturum, praeterquam quod ~aliis uir erat, etiam quod dies noctesque intentus ea sola, quae ad id bellum pertinerent, animo agitabat. iam omnium primum a senatu petit, ut legatos in Macedoniam mitterent ad exercitus uisendos classemque et conperta referenda, quid aut terrestribus aut naualibus copiis opus esset;

praeterea ut explorarent copias regias, quantum possent, qua prouincia nostra, qua hostium foret; utrum intra saltus castra Romani haberent, an iam omnes angustiae exsuperatae, et in aequa loca peruenissent; qui fideles nobis socii, qui dubii suspensaeque ex fortuna fidei, qui certi hostes uiderentur; quanti praeparati commeatus, et unde terrestri itinere, unde nauibus subportarentur; quid ea aestate terra marique rerum gestum esset: ex his bene cognitis certa in futurum consilia capi posse. senatus Cn. Seruilio consuli negotium dedit, ut tris in Macedoniam, quos L. Aemilio uideretur, legaret. legati biduo post profecti Cn. Domitius Ahenobarbus, A. Licinius Nerua, L. Baebius.

Bis in exitu anni eius lapidatum esse nuntiatum est, <semel> in Romano agro, semel in Ueienti. bis nouemdiale sacrum factum est. sacerdotes eo anno mortui sunt P. Quinctilius Uarus flamen Martialis et M. Claudius Marcellus decemuir; in cuius locum Cn. Octauius suffectus. et iam magnificentia crescente notatum est ludis circensibus P. Corneli Scipionis Nasicae et P. Lentuli aedilium curulium sexaginta tres Africanas et quadraginta ursos et elephantos lusisse.

[19] L. Aemilio Paulo C. Licinio consulibus, idibus Martiis, principio insequentis anni, cum in expectatione patres fuissent, maxime quidnam consul de Macedonia, cuius ea prouincia esset, referret, nihil se habere Paulus, quod referret, nondum <cum> legati redissent, dixit. ceterum Brundisi legatos iam esse, bis ex cursu Dyrrachium reiectos. cognitis mox, quae nosci prius in rem esset, relaturum; id fore intra perpaucos dies. et ne quid profectionem suam teneret, pridie idus Apriles Latinis esse constitutam diem. sacrificio rite perfecto et se et Cn. Octauium, simul senatus censuisset, exituros esse. C. Licinio collegae suo fore curae se absente, ut, si qua parari mittique ad id bellum opus sit, parentur mittanturque. interea legationes exterarum nationum audiri posse. primi Alexandrini legati ab Ptolemaeo <et Cleo>patra regibus uocati sunt. sordidati, barba et capillo promisso, cum ramis oleae ingressi curiam procubuerunt, et oratio quam habitus fuit miserabilior. Antiochus Syriae rex, qui obses Romae fuerat, per honestam speciem maioris Ptolemaei reducendi in regnum, bellum cum minore fratre eius, qui tum Alexandriam tenebat, gerens et ad Pelusium nauali proelio <superior> fuerat et tumultuario opere ponte per Nilum facto transgressus cum exercitu obsidione ipsam Alexandream terrebat, nec procul abesse, quin poteretur regno opulentissimo, uidebatur. ea legati querentes orabant senatum, ut opem regno regibusque amicis impigre ferrent. ea merita populi Romani in Antiochum, eam apud omnes reges gentesque auctoritatem esse, ut, si legatos misissent, qui ei nuntiarent non placere senatui sociis regibus bellum fieri, extemplo abscessurus a moenibus Alexandrae abducturusque exercitum in Syriam esset. quod si cunctentur facere, breui extorres regno Ptolemaeum et Cleopatram Romam uenturos, cum pudore quodam populi Romani, quod nullam opem in ultimo discrimine fortunarum tulissent. moti patres precibus Alexandrinorum extemplo C. Popilium Laenatem et C. Decimium et C. Hostilium legatos ad finiendum inter reges bellum miserunt. prius Antiochum, dein Ptolemaeum adire iussi et nuntiare, ni absistatur bello, per utrum stetisset, eum non pro amico nec pro socio habituros esse.

[20] His intra triduum simul cum legatis Alexandrinis profectis legati ex Macedonia quinquatribus ultimis adeo expectati uenerunt, ut, nisi uesper esset, extemplo senatum uocaturi consules fuerint. postero die senatus fuit legatique auditi sunt. ii nuntiant maiore periculo quam emolumento exercitum per inuios saltus in Macedoniam inductum. Pieriam, quo processisset, regem tenere; castra castris prope ita conlata esse, ut flumine Elpeo interiecto arceantur. neque regem pugnandi potestatem facere, nec nostris uim ad cogendum esse. hiemem etiam insuper rebus gerendis interuenisse. in otio militem ali, nec plus quam VI <dierum> frumentum habere. Macedonum dici triginta milia armatorum esse. si Ap. Claudio circa Lychnidum satis ualidus exercitus foret, potuisse eum ancipiti bello distinere regem: nunc et Appium, et <quod> cum eo praesidii sit, in summo periculo esse, nisi propere aut iustus exercitus eo mittatur, aut illi inde deducantur. ad classem se ex castris profectos sociorum naualium partem morbo audisse absumptam, partem, maxime qui ex Sicilia fuerint, domos suas abisse, et homines nauibus deesse; qui sint, neque stipendium accepisse neque uestimenta habere. Eumenen classemque eius, tamquam uento adlatas naues, sine causa et uenisse et abisse; nec animum eius regis constare satis uisum. sicut omnia de Eumene dubia, <ita> Attali egregie constantem fidem nuntiabant.

[21] Legatis auditis tunc de bello referre sese L. Aemilius dixit. senatus decreuit, ut in octo legiones parem numerum tribunorum consules et populus crearent; creari autem neminem eo anno placere, nisi qui honorem gessisset. tum ex omnibus tribunis militum uti L. Aemilius in duas legiones in Macedoniam, quos eorum uelit, eligat, et ut sollemni Latinarum perfecto L. Aemilius consul, Cn. Octavius praetor, cui classis obtigisset, in prouinciam proficiscantur. additus est his tertius L. Anicius praetor, cuius inter peregrinos iurisdictio erat; eum in prouinciam Illyricum circa Lychnidum Ap. Claudio succedere placuit. dilectus cura C. Licinio consuli inposita. is septem milia ciuium Romanorum et equites ducentos scribere iussus et sociis nominis Latini septem milia peditum imperare, quadringentos equites, et Cn. Seruilio Galliam obtinenti prouinciam litteras mittere, ut sescentos equites conscriberet. hunc exercitum ad collegam primo quoque tempore mittere in Macedoniam iussus; neque in ea prouincia plus quam duas legiones esse; eas repleri, ut sena milia peditum, trecenos haberent equites; ceteros pedites <equites>que in praesidiis disponi. qui eorum idonei ad militandum non essent, dimitti. decem praeterea milia peditum imperata sociis et octingenti equites. id praesidii additum Anicio praeter duas legiones, quas portare in Macedoniam est iussus, quina milia peditum et ducenos habentes, trecenos equites. et in classem quinque milia naualium socium sunt scripta. Licinius consul duabus legionibus obtinere prouinciam iussus; eo addere sociorum decem milia peditum et sescentos equites.

[22] Senatus consultis perfectis L. Aemilius consul e curia in contionem processit orationemque talem <habuit>: ‘animaduertisse uideor, Quirites, maiorem mihi sortito Macedoniam prouinciam gratulationem factam, quam cum aut consul sum renuntiatus, aut quo die magistratum inii, neque id ob aliam causam, quam quia bello in Macedonia, quod diu trahitur, existimastis dignum maiestate populi Romani exitum per me inponi posse. deos quoque huic fauisse sorti spero eosdemque in rebus gerendis adfuturos esse. haec partim ominari, partim sperare possum; illud adfirmare pro certo audeo, me omni ope adniscurum esse, <ne> frustra uos hanc spem de me conceperitis. quae ad bellum opus sunt et senatus decreuit, et, quoniam extemplo proficisci placet neque ego in mora sum, C. Licinius collega, uir egregius, aequae enixe parabit ac si ipse id bellum gesturus esset. uos quae scripsero senatui ac uobis, <iis modo credite et cauete ru>mores credulitate uestra alatis, quorum auctor nemo extabit. nam nunc quidem, quod uulgo fieri, hoc praecipue bello, animaduerti, nemo tam famae contemptor est, cuius non debilitari animus possit. in omnibus circulis atque etiam, si dis placet, in conuiuuiis sunt, qui exercitus in Macedoniam ducant, ubi castra locanda sint sciant, quae loca praesidiis occupanda, quando aut quo saltu intranda Macedonia, ubi horrea ponenda, qua terra, mari subuehantur commeatus, quando cum hoste manus conserendae, quando quiesce sit melius. nec, quid faciendum sit, modo statuunt, sed, quidquid aliter, quam ipsi censuere, factum est, consulem ueluti dicta die accusant. haec magna impedimenta res gerentibus <sunt:> neque enim omnes tam firmi et constantis animi contra aduersum rumorem esse possunt, <quam> Q. Fabius fuit, qui suum imperium minui per uanitatem populi maluit, quam secunda fama male rem publicam gerere. non sum is, Quirites, qui non existumem admonendos duces esse: immo eum, qui de sua unius sententia omnia gerat, superbum iudico magis quam sapientem. quid ergo est? primum a prudentibus et proprie rei militaris peritis et usu doctis monendi imperatores sunt; deinde ab iis, qui intersunt gerendis <rebus, qui> loca, qui hostem, qui temporum opportunitatem uident, qui in eodem uelut nauigio participes sunt periculi. itaque si quis est, qui, quod e re publica sit, suadere se mihi in eo bello, quod gesturus sum, confidat, is ne deneget operam rei publicae et in Macedoniam mecum ueniat. naue, equo, tabernaculo, uiatico etiam a me iuuabitur; si quem id facere piget <et> otium urbanum militiae laboribus praeoptat, e terra ne gubernauerit. sermonum satis ipsa praebet urbs; <iis> loquacitatem suam contineat: nos castrensibus consiliis contentos futuros esse sciat.’ ab hoc contione, Latinis, quae pridie kal. Apriles fuerunt, in monte sacrificio rite perpetrato protinus inde et consul et praetor Cn. Octavius in Macedoniam profecti sunt. traditum memoriae est maiore quam solita frequentia prosequentium consulem celebratum, ac prope certa spe ominatos esse homines, finem esse Macedonico bello maturumque reditum cum egregio triumpho consulis fore.

[23] Dum haec in Italia geruntur, Perseus quod iam inchoatum perficere, quia inpena pecuniae facienda erat, non inducebat in animum, ut Gentium Illyriorum regem sibi adiungeret, hoc, postquam intrasse saltum Romanos et adesse discrimen ultimum belli animaduertit, non ultra differendum ratus, cum <per> Hippiam legatum trecenta argenti talenta pactus esset, ita ut obsides ultro citroque darentur, Pantauchum misit ex fidissimis amicis ad ea perficienda. Meteone Labeatidis terrae Pantauchus regi Illyrio occurrit; ibi et iusiurandum ab rege et obsides accepit. missus et a Gentio est legatus nomine Olympio, qui iusiurandum a Perseo obsidesque exigeret. cum eodem ad pecuniam accipiendam missi sunt; et auctore Pantauchus, qui Rhodum legati cum Macedonibus irent, Parmenio et Morcus destinantur. quibus ita mandatum, ut iureiurando obsidibusque et pecunia accepta tum demum Rhodum proficiscerentur: duorum simul regum nomine incitari Rhodios ad bellum Romanum posse. adiunctam ciuitatem, penes quam unam tum rei naualis gloria esset, nec terra nec mari spem relicturam Romanis. uenientibus Illyriis Perseus ab Elpeo amni ex castris cum omni equitatu profectus ad Dium occurrit. ibi ea, quae conuenerant, circumfuso agmine equitum facta, quos adesse foederi sanciendo cum Gentio societatis uolebat rex, aliquantum eam rem ratus animorum iis adiecturam. et obsides in conspectu omnium dati acceptique; et Pellam ad thesauros regiones missis, qui pecuniam acciperent, qui Rhodum irent cum Illyriis legatis Thessalonicae conscendere iussi. ibi Metrodorus erat, qui nuper ab Rhodo uenerat, auctoribusque Dinone et Polyarato, principibus ciuitatis eius, adfirmabat Rhodios paratos ad bellum esse. is princeps iunctae cum Illyriis legationis datus est.

[24] Eodem tempore et ad Eumenen et ad Antiochum communia mandata, quae subicere condicio rerum poterat: natura inimica inter se esse liberam ciuitatem et regem. singulos populum Romanum adgredi et, quod indignum sit, regum uiribus reges oppugnare. Attalo adiutore patrem suum oppressum; Eumene adiuuante et quadam ex parte etiam Philippo, patre suo, Antiochum oppugnatum; in se nunc et Eumenen et Prusian armatos esse. si Macedoniae regnum sublatum foret, proxumam Asiam esse, quam iam ex parte sub specie liberandi ciuitates suam fecerint, deinde Syriam. iam Prusiam Eumeni honore praeferrī, iam Antiochum uictorem ab Aegypto, praemio belli, arceri. haec cogitantem prouidere iubebat, ut aut ad pacem secum faciendam compelleret Romanos aut perseuerantes in bello iniusto communes duceret omnium regum hostes. ad Antiochum aperta mandata erant; ad Eumenen per speciem captiuorum redimendorum missus legatus erat; <re> uera occultiora quaedam agebantur, quae in praesentia inuisum quidem et suspectum Romanis Eumenen falsis grauioribus<que criminibus onerarunt;> proditor enim ac prope hostis habitus, dum inter se duo reges captantes fraude et auaritia certant. Cydas erat Cretensis, ex intimis Eumenis. hic prius ad Amphipolim cum Chimaro quodam populari suo, militante apud Persea, inde postea ad Demetriadem semel cum Menecrate quodam, iterum cum Antimacho, regiis ducibus, sub ipsis moenibus urbis conlocutus fuerat. Herophon quoque, qui tum missus est, duabus ad eundem Eumenen iam ante legationibus functus erat. quae conloquia occulta et legationes infames quidem erant, sed, quid actum esset quidue inter reges conuenisset, ignorabatur. res autem ita sese habuit.

[25] Eumenes neque fauit uictoriae Persei, neque bello eam iuuare <in> animo habuit, non tam quia paternae inter eos inimicitiae erant, quam ipsorum odiis inter se accensae: non ea regum aemulatio, ut aequo animo Persea tantas apisci opes tantamque gloriam, quanta Romanis uictis eum manebat, Eumenes uisurus fuerit. cernebat et Persea iam inde ab initio belli omni modo spem pacis temptasse et in dies magis, quo propior admoueretur terror, nihil neque agere aliud neque cogitare; Romanos quoque, quia traheretur diutius spe ipsorum bellum, et ipsos duces et senatum, non abhorrere a finiendo tam incommodo ac difficili bello. hac utriusque partis uoluntate explorata, quod fieri etiam sua sponte taedio ualidioris, metu infirmioris credebat posse, in eo suam operam uenditare conciliandae gratia pacis cupiit. nam modo ne iuaret bello Romanos terra marique, modo pacis patrandae cum Romanis paciscebatur mercedem: ne bello interesset, mille <talenta, ut pacem conciliaret, mille> et quingenta. in utrumque non fidem modo se, sed obsides quoque dare paratum esse ostendebat. Perseus ad rem inchoandam promptissimus erat cogente metu et de obsidibus accipiendis sine dilatione agebat, conueneratque, ut accepti Cretam mitterentur. ubi ad pecuniae mentionem uentum erat, ibi haesitabat; et utique alteram [in] tanti nominis regibus turpem ac sordidam et danti et magis accipienti mercedem esse aiebat; in spem Romanae pacis non recusare inpensam, sed eam pecuniam perfecta re daturum, interea Samothracae in templo depositurum. ea insula cum ipsius dicionis esset, uidere Eumenes nihil interesse, <ibi> an Pellae pecunia esset; id agere, ut partem aliquam praesentem ferret. ita nequiquam inter se captati nihil praeter infamiam mouerunt.

[26] Nec haec tantum Persei per auaritiam est dimissa res, cum pecunia soluta aut pacem habere per Eumenen, quae uel parte regni redimenda esset, aut deceptus protrahere inimicum mercede onustum et hostes merito ei Romanos posset facere; sed et ante Genti regis parata societas et tum Gallorum effusorum per Illyricum ingens oblatum <auxilium> auaritia dimissum est. ueniebant decem milia equitum, par numerus peditum et ipsorum iungentium cursum equis et in uicem prolapsorum equitum uacuos capientium ad pugnam equos. hi pacti erant eques denos praesentes aureos, pedes quinos, mille dux eorum. uenientibus his Perseus ab Elpeo ex castris profectus obuiam cum dimidia copiarum parte denuntiare per uicos urbesque, quae uiae propincae sunt, coepit, ut commeatus expedirent, frumenti, uini, pecorum ut copia esset. ipse equos phalerasque et sagula donum principibus ferre et paruom auri, quod inter paucos diuideret, multitudinem credens trahi spe posse. ad Almanam urbem peruenit et in ripa fluminis Axi posuit castra. circa Desudabam in Maedica exercitus Gallorum consederat, mercedem pactam opperiens. eo mittit Antigonum, ex purpuratis unum, qui iuberet multitudinem Gallorum ad Bylazora — Paeoniae is locus est — castra mouere, principes ad se uenire frequentes. septuaginta quinque milia ab Axio flumine et castris regis aberant. haec mandata ad eos cum pertulisset Antigonus adiecissetque, per quantam omnium praeparatam cura regis copiam ituri forent quibusque muneribus principes aduenientes uestis, argenti equorumque excepturus rex esset, de his quidem se coram cognituros respondent, illud, quod praesens pepigissent, interrogant, ecquid aurum, quod in singulos pedites equitesque diuidendum esset, secum aduexisset. cum ad id nihil responderetur, Clondicus, regulus eorum, ‘abi, renuntia ergo’ inquit ‘regi, nisi aurum obsidesque acceperissent, nusquam inde Gallos longius uestigium moturos.’ haec relata regi cum esset, aduocato consilio cum, quid omnes suasuri essent, appareret, ipse pecuniae quam regni melior custos institit de perfidia et feritate Gallorum disserere, multorum iam ante cladibus experta: periculosum esse tantam multitudinem in Macedoniam accipere, <ne> grauiores eos socios habeant quam hostes Romanos. quinque milia equitum satis esse, quibus et uti ad bellum possent, et quorum multitudinem ipsi non timeant.

[27] Apparebat omnibus mercedem timeri nec quicquam aliud; sed cum suadere consulenti nemo auderet, remittitur Antigonus, qui nuntiaret quinque milium equitum opera tantum uti regem, non tenere multitudinem aliam. quod ubi audiuerunt barbari, ceterorum quidem fremitus fuit indignantium se frustra excitos sedibus suis; Clondicus rursus interrogat, ecquid ipsis quinque milibus, quod conuenisset, numeraret? cum aduersus id quoque misceri ambages cerneret, inuiolato fallaci nuntio, quod uix sperauerat ipse posse contingere, retro ad Histrum perpopulati Threciam, qua uicina erat uiae, redierunt. quae manus, quieto sedente rege ad Elpeum aduersus Romanos, <per> Perrhaebiae saltum in Thessaliam traducta non agros tantum nudare populando potuit, ne quos inde Romani commeatus expectarent, sed ipsas excindere urbes tenente ad Elpeum Perseo Romanos, ne urbibus sociis opitulari possent. ipsis quoque Romanis de se cogitandum fuisset, quando neque manere amissa Thessalia, unde exercitus alebatur, potuissent, neque progredi, cum ex aduerso castra Macedonum <essent. hoc amisso auxilio Perseus animos Macedonum,> qui ea pependerant spe, haud mediocriter debilitauit. eadem auaritia Gentium regem sibi alienauit. nam cum trecenta talenta Pellae missis a Gentio numerasset, signare eos pecuniam passus <est;> inde decem talenta ad Pantauchum missa, eaque praesentia dari regi iussit; reliquam pecuniam signatam Illyriorum signo portantibus suis praecipit, paruis itineribus ueherent, dein cum ad finem Macedoniae uentum esset, subsisterent ibi ac nuntios ab se opperirentur. Gentius exigua parte pecuniae accepta cum adsidue  Pantaucho ad lacesendos hostili facto Romanos stimularetur, M. Perpennam et L. Petilium legatos, qui tum forte ad eum uenerant, in custodiam coniecit. hoc audito Perseus contraxisse eum necessitatem ratus ad bellandum utique cum Romanis, ad reuocandum, qui pecuniam portabat, misit, uelut nihil aliud agens, quam ut quanta maxima posset praeda ex se uicto Romanis reseruaretur. et ab Eumene Herophon ignotis, quae occulte acta erant, redit. de captiuis actum esse et ipsi euolgauerant et Eumenes consulem uitandae suspicionis causa certiore fecit.

[28] Perseus post reditum ab Eumene Herophontis spe deiectus Antenorem et Callippum praefectos classis cum quadraginta lembis — adiectae ad hunc numerum quinque pristis erant — Tenedum mittit, ut inde sparsas per Cycladas insulas naues, Macedoniam cum frumento petentes, tutarentur. Cassandreae deductae naues in portus primum, qui sub Atho monte sunt, <in>de Tenedum placido mari cum traiecissent, stantis in portu Rhodias apertas naues Eudamumque, praefectum earum, inuiolatos atque etiam benigne appellatos dimiserunt. cognito deinde in latere altero quinquaginta onerarias suarum stantibus in ostio portus Eumenis rostratis, quibus Damius praeerat, inclusas esse, circumuectus propere ac summotis terrore hostium nauibus, onerarias datis, qui prosequerentur, decem lembis in Macedoniam mittit, ita ut in tutum prosecuti redirent Tenedum. nono post die ad classem iam ad Sigeum stantem redierunt. inde Subota — insula est interiecta Elaeae et Chio — traiciunt. forte postero die, quam Subota classis tenuit, quinque et triginta naues, quas hippagogus uocant, ab Elaea profectae cum equitibus Gallis equisque Phanas promunturium Chiorum petebant, unde transmittere in Macedoniam possent. Attalo ab Eumene mittebantur. has naues per altum ferri cum ex specula signum datum Antenori esset, profectus ab Subotis inter Erythrarum promunturium Chiumque, qua artissimum fretum est, iis occurrit. nihil minus credere praefecti Eumenis, quam Macedonum classem in illo uagari mari: nunc Romanos esse, nunc Attalum aut remissos aliquos ab Attalo ex castris Romanis Pergamum petere. sed cum iam adpropinquantium forma lemborum haud dubia esset et concitatio remorum directaeque in se prorae hostis adpropinquare aperuissent, tunc iniecta trepidatio est. cum resistendi spes nulla esset inhabilique nauium genere et Gallis uix quietem ferentibus in mari, pars eorum, qui propiores continentis litori erant, in Erythraeam enarunt, pars uelis datis ad Chium naues eiecere relictisque equis effusa fuga urbem petebant. sed propius urbem lembi accessuque commodiore cum exposuissent armatos, partim in uia fugientes Gallos adepti

Macedones ceciderunt, partim ante portam exclusos. clausurant enim Chii portas ignari, qui fugerent aut sequerentur. octingenti ferme Gallorum occisi, ducenti uiui capti; equi pars in mari fractis nauibus absumpti, parti neruos succiderunt in litore Macedones. uiginti eximiae equos formae cum captiuis eisdem decem lembos, quos ante miserat, Antenor deuehere Thessalonicam iussit et primo quoque tempore ad classem reuerti; Phanis se eos expectaturum. triduum ferme classis ad urbem <stetit>. Phanas inde progressi sunt et spe celerius regressis decem lembis euecti Aegaeo mari Delum traiecerunt.

[29] Dum haec geruntur, legati Romani, C. Popilius et C. Decimius et C. Hostilius, a Chalcide profecti tribus quinquerebus Delum cum uenissent, lembos ibi Macedonum quadraginta et quinque regis Eumenis quinquerebus inuenerunt. sanctitas templi insulaeque inuiolatos praestabat omnes. itaque permixti Romanique et Macedones et Eumenis nauales socii [et] in templo indutias religione loci praebente uersabantur. Antenor, Persei praefectus, cum aliquas alto praeferri onerarias naues ex speculis significatum foret, parte lemborum ipse insequens, parte per Cyclades disposita, praeterquam si quae Macedoniam peterent, omnes aut supprimebat aut spoliabat naues. quibus poterat Popilius <aut suis> aut Eumenis nauibus succurrebat; sed <e>uecti nocte binis aut ternis plerumque lembis Macedones fallebant. per id fere tempus legati Macedones Illyriique simul Rhodum uenerunt, quibus auctoritatem addidit non lemborum modo aduentus passim per Cycladas atque Aegaeum uagantium mare, sed etiam coniunctio ipsa regum Persei Gentique et fama cum magno numero peditum equitumque uenientium Gallorum. et iam cum accessissent animi Dinoni ac Polyarato, qui Persei partium erant, non benigne modo responsum regibus est, <sed> palam pronuntiatum bello finem se auctoritate sua inposituros esse; itaque ipsi quoque reges aequos adhiberent animos ad pacem accipiendam.

[30] Iam ueris principium erat nouique duces in prouincias uenerant, consul Aemilius in Macedoniam, Octavius Oreum ad classem, Anicius in Illyricum, cui bellandum aduersus Gentium <erat. Gentius> patre Pleurato, rege Illyriorum, et matre Eurydica genitus fratres duos, Platorem utroque parente, Carauantium matre eadem natum, habuit. hoc propter ignobilitatem paternam minus suspecto Platorem occidit et duos amicos eius, Ettritum et Epicadum, impigros uiros, quo tutius regnaret. fama fuit Monuni, Dardanorum principis, filiam Etutam pacto fratri eum inuidisse, tamquam his nuptiis adiungenti sibi Dardanorum gentem; et simillimum id uero fecit ducta ea uirgo Platore interfecto. grauis deinde dempto  fratre metu popularibus esse coepit; et uiolentiam insitam ingenio intemperantia uini accendebat. ceterum, sicut ante dictum est, ad Romanum incitatus bellum Lissum omnis copias contraxit. quindecim milia armatorum fuerunt. inde fratre in Cauiorum gentem ui aut terrore subigendam cum mille peditibus et quinquaginta equitibus misso, ipse ad Bassaniam urbem quinque milia ab Lisso ducit. socii erant Romanorum; itaque per praemissos nuntios prius temptati obsidionem pati quam dedere sese maluerunt. Carauantium in Cauiis Durnium oppidum aduenientem benigne accepit; Carauandis, altera urbs, exclusit; et agros eorum <cum> effuse uastaret, aliquot palati milites agrestium concursu interfecti sunt. iam et Ap. Claudius adsumptis ad eum exercitum, quem habebat, Bullinorum et Apolloniatium et Dyrrachinorum auxiliis profectus ex hibernis circa Genusum amnem castra habebat, audito foedere inter Persea et Gentium et legatorum uiolatorum iniuria accensus, bellum haud dubie aduersus eum gesturus. Anicius praetor eo tempore Apolloniae auditis, quae in Illyrico gererentur, praemissisque ad Appium litteris, ut se ad Genusum opperiretur, triduo et ipse in castra uenit et ad ea, quae habebat, auxilia <e> Parthinorum iuuentute <adiunctis> duobus milibus peditum et equitibus ducentis — peditibus Epicadus, equitibus Algalsus praeerat — parabat ducere in Illyricum, maxime ut Bassanitas solueret obsidione. tenuit impetum eius fama lemborum uastantium maritimam oram. octoginta erant lembi, auctore Pantaucho missi a Gentio ad Dyrrachinorum et Apolloniatium agros populandos. tum classis ad * * * * * to eo tradiderunt se.

[31] Deinceps et urbes regionis eius idem faciebant, adiuuante inclinationem animorum clementia <in> omnis et iustitia praetoris Romani. ad Scodram inde uentum est, quod belli caput erat, non eo solum, quod Gentius eam sibi ceperat uelut regni totius arcem, sed etiam quod Labeatium gentis munitissima longe est et difficilis aditu. duo cingunt eam flumina, Clausal a latere urbis, quod in orientem

patet, praefluens, Barbanna ab regione occidentis, ex Labeatide palude oriens. hi duo amnes confluentes incidunt ~Oriundi flumini, quod ortum ex monte Scordo, multis et aliis auctum aquis, mari Hadriatico infertur. mons Scordus, longe altissimus regionis eius, ab oriente Dardanicam subiectam habet, a meridie Macedoniam, ab occasu Illyricum. quamquam munitum situ naturali oppidum erat gensque id tota Illyriorum et rex ipse tuebatur, tamen praetor Romanus, quia prima successerant prospere, fortunam totius rei principia secuturam esse ratus et repentinum ualiturum terrorem, instructo exercitu ad moenia succedit. quod si clausis portis muros portarumque turris dispositi armati defendissent, uano cum incepto moenibus pepulissent Romanos: nunc porta egressi proelium loco aequo maiore animo commiserunt quam sustinuerunt. pulsi enim et fuga conglobati, cum ducenti amplius in ipsis faucibus portae cecidissent, tantum intulerunt terrorem, ut oratores extemplo ad praetorem mitteret Gentius Teuticum et Bellum, principes gentis, per quos indutias peteret, ut deliberare de statu rerum suarum posset. triduo in hoc dato, cum castra Romana quingentos ferme passus ab urbe abessent, nauem conscendit et flumine Barbanna nauigat in lacum Labeatum, uelut secretum locum petens ad consultandum, sed, ut apparuit, falsa spe excitus Carauantium fratrem multis milibus armatorum <co>actis ex ea regione, in quam missus erat, aduentare. qui postquam euanuit rumor, tertio post die nauem eandem secundo anni Scodram demisit; praemissisque nuntiis, ut sibi appellandi praetoris potestas fieret, copia facta in castra uenit. et principium orationis ab accusatione stultitiae orsus suae, postremo ad preces lacrimasque effusus, genibus praetoris accidens in potestatem sese dedit. primo bonum animum habere iussus, ad cenam etiam inuitatus in urbem ad suos redit. et cum praetore eo die honorifice est epulatus, deinde in custodiam C. Cassio tribuno militum traditus, uix gladiatorio accepto, decem talentis, ab rege rex, ut in eam fortunam recideret.

[32] Anicius Scodra recepta nihil prius quam requisitos Petilium Perpennamque legatos ad se duci iussit. quibus splendore suo restituto Perpennam extemplo mittit ad conprehendendos amicos cognatosque regis; qui Meteonem, Labeatium gentis urbem, profectus Etleuam uxorem cum filiis duobus, Scerdilaedo

Pleuratoque, et Carauantium fratrem Scodram in castra adduxit. Anicius bello Illyrico intra triginta dies perfecto nuntium uictoriae Perpennam Romam misit et post dies paucos Gentium regem ipsum cum parente, coniuge ac liberis ac fratre aliisque principibus Illyriorum hoc unum bellum prius perpetratum quam coeptum Romae auditum est.

Quibus diebus haec agebantur, Perseus quoque in magno terrore erat propter aduentum simul Aemili noui consulis, quem cum ingentibus minis aduentare audiebat, simul Octaui praetoris. nec minus terroris a classe Romana et periculo maritumae orae habebat. Thessalonicae Eumenes et Athenagoras praeerant cum paruo praesidio duorum milium caetratorum. eo et Androclem praefectum mittit iussum sub ipsis naualibus castra habere. Aenean mille equites <et> Creon Antigoniensis missi ad tutandam maritumam oram, ut, quocumque litore adplicuisse naues hostium audissent, extemplo ferrent agrestibus opem. quinque milia Macedonum missa ad praesidium Pythoi et Petrae, quibus praepositi erant Histiaeus et Theogenes et Midon. his profectis ripam munire Elpei fluminis adgressus est, quia sicco alueo transiri poterat. huic <rei> ut omnis multitudo uacaret, feminae ex propinquis urbibus coactae cibaria in castra adferebant; miles iussus ex propinquis siluis benigne * * * * .

[33] * * conferre, postremo sequi se utrarios ad mare, quod minus trecentos passus aberat, iussit et in litore alios alibi modicis interuallis fodere. montes ingentis altitudinis spem faciebant, eo magis quia nullos apertos emergerent riuos, occultos contineri latices, quorum uenae in mare permanentes undae miscerentur. uix diducta summa harena erat, cum scaturrig<in>es turbidae primo et tenues emicare, dein liquidam multamque fundere aquam uelut deum dono coeperunt. aliquantum ea quoque res duci famae et auctoritatis apud milites adicit. iussis deinde militibus expedire arma ipse cum tribunis primisque ordinibus ad contemplandos transitus <processit, qua> descensus facilis armatis, qua in ulteriorem ripam minime inicus ascensus esset. his satis exploratis illa quoque <nouauit;> primum, ut ordine ac sine tumultu omnia in agmine ad nutum imperiumque ducis fierent, prouidit: ubi omnibus simul pronuntiaretur, quid fieret, neque omnes exaudirent, incerto imperio accepto alios ab se adicientes plus eo, quod imperatum sit, alios minus facere; clamores deinde dissonos oriri omnibus locis, et prius hostes quam ipsos, quid paretur, scire. placere igitur tribunum militum primo pilo legionis secretum edere imperium, illum et dein singulos proximo cuique in ordine centurioni dicere, quid opus facto sit, siue a primis signis ad nouissimum agmen, siue ab extremis ad primos perferendum imperium sit. uigiles etiam nouo more scutum in uigiliam ferre uetuit: non enim in pugnam uigilem ire, ut armis utatur, sed ad uigilandum, ut, cum senserit hostium aduentum, recipiat se excitetque ad arma alios. scuto prae se erecto stare galeatos; deinde, ubi fessi sint, innixos pilo, capite super marginem scuti posito sopitos stare, ut fulgentibus armis procul conspici ab hoste possint, ipsi nihil prouideant. stationum quoque morem mutauit. armati omnes, et frenatis equis equites, diem totum perstabant; id cum aestiuis diebus urente adsiduo sole fieret, tot horarum aestu et languore ipsos equosque fessos integri saepe adorti hostes uel pauci plures uexabant. itaque ex matutina statione ad meridiem decedi et in postmeridianam succedere alios iussit; ita numquam fatigatos recens hostis adgredi poterat.

[34] Haec cum ita fieri placere contione aduocata pronuntiasset, adiecit urbanae contioni conuenientem orationem: unum imperatorem in exercitu prouidere et consulere, quid agendum sit, debere, nunc per se, nunc cum iis, quos aduocauerit in consilium; qui non sint aduocati, eos nec palam nec secreto iactare consilia sua. militem haec tria curare debere, corpus ut quam ualidissimum et perniciosissimum habeat, arma apta, cibum paratum ad subita imperia; cetera scire de se dis immortalibus et imperatori suo curae esse. in quo exercitu milites consultant, imperator rumoribus uulgi circumagatur, ibi nihil salutare esse. se, quod sit officium imperatoris, prouisurum, ut bene gerendae rei occasionem iis praebeat: illos nihil, quid futurum sit, quaerere, ubi datum signum sit, tum militarem nauare <operam debere.> ab his praeceptis contionem dimisit, uolgo etiam ueteranis fatentibus se illo primum die, tamquam tirones, quid agendum esset in re militari, didicisse. non sermonibus tantum his, cum quanto adsensu audissent uerba consulis, ostenderunt, sed rerum praesens effectus erat. neminem totis mox castris quietum uideres: acuere alii gladios, alii galeas bucculasque [scutorum], alii loricas tergere, alii aptare corpori arma experiri sub his membrorum agilitatem, quater alii pila, alii micare gladiis mucronemque intueri, ut facile quis cerneret, ubi primum conserendi manum cum hoste data occasio esset, aut uictoria egregia aut morte memorabili finituros bellum. Perseus quoque, cum aduentu consulis simul et ueris principio strepere omnia mouerique apud hostes uelut nouo bello cerneret, mota a Phila castra in aduersa ripa posita, nunc ad contemplanda opera sua circumire ducem haud dubie transitus speculant*em, nunc * * * * * Roma>* norum esse.

[35] Quae res Romanis auxit animos. Macedonibus regique eorum haud mediocrem attulit terrorem. et primo suppressere in occulto famam eius rei est conatus, missis, qui Pantauchum inde uenientem adpropinquare castris uetarent. sed iam et pueri quidam uisi ab suis erant inter obsides Illyrios ducti, et quo quaeque accuratius celantur, eo facilius loquacitate regionum ministrorum emanant.

Sub idem tempus Rhodii legati in castra uenerunt cum isdem de pace mandatis, quae Romae ingentem iram patrum excitauerant. multo iniquioribus animis a castrensi consilio auditi sunt. itaque cum <alii legatos in uincula coniciendos censerent,> alii praecipites sine responso agendos e castris, pronuntiauit <consul> post diem quantum decimum se responsum daturum. interim, ut appareret, quantum pacificantium Rhodiorum auctoritas ualuisset, consultare de ratione belli gerendi coepit. placebat quibusdam et maxime minoribus natu per Elpei ripam munitionesque uim facere: confertis et uno <agmine impetum> facientibus resistere Macedonas non posse, ex tot castellis aliquanto altioribus ac munitioribus, quae ualidis praesidiis insedissent, priore anno deiectos. aliis placebat Octauium cum classe Thessalonicam petere et populatione maritumae orae distringere copias regias, ut altero ab tergo se ostendente bello circumactus ad interiorem partem regni tuendam nudare aliqua parte transitus Elpei cogeretur. ipsi natura et operibus inxsuperabilis ripa uidebatur, et praeterquam quod tormenta ubique disposita essent, missilibus etiam melius et certiore ictu hostis uti audierat. alio spectabat mens tota ducis; dimissoque consilio Perrhaebos mercatores Coenum et Menophilum, notae iam sibi et fidei et prudentiae homines, accersitos secreto percunctatur, quales ad Perrhaebiam transitus sint. cum loca non iniqua esse dicerent, praesidiis autem regiis obsideri, spem cepit, si nocte inprouiso ualida manu adgressus necopinantis esset, deici praesidia posse: iacula enim et sagittas et cetera missilia in tenebris, ubi, quid petatur, procul prouideri nequeat, inutilia esse; gladio cominus geri rem in permixta turba, quo miles Romanus uincat. his ducibus usus praetorem Octauium accersitum, exposito, quid pararet, Heracleum cum classe petere iubet et mille hominibus decem dierum cocta cibaria habere. ipse P. Scipionem Nasicam, Q. Fabium Maximum filium suum cum quinque <milibus> delectis militum Heracleum mittit, uelut classem consensuros ad maritumam oram interioris Macedoniae, quod in consilio agitatum erat, uastandam. secreto indicatum cibaria his praeparata ad classem esse, ne quid eos moraretur. inde iussi duces itineris ita diuidere uiam, ut quarta uigilia tertio die Pythoum adoriri possent. ipse postero die, ut detineret regem ab circumspectu rerum aliarum, prima luce medio in alueo cum stationibus hostium proelium commisit; pugnatumque utrumque est leui armatura. nec grauioribus armis in tam inaequali alueo pugnari poterat. descensus ripae utriusque in alueum trecentorum ferme passuum erat; medium spatium torrentis alibi aliter cauati paulo plus quam mille passus patebat. ibi in medio spectantibus utrumque ex uallo castrorum <hinc rege>, hinc consule cum suis legionibus pugnatum est. missilibus procul regia auxilia melius pugnabant; cominus stabilior et tutior aut parma aut scuto Ligustico Romanus erat. meridie fere receptui cani suis consul iussit. ita eo die diremptum proelium est haud paucis utrumque interfectis. sole orto postero die iniritatis certamine animis etiam acrius concursum est. sed Romani non ab iis tantum, cum quibus contractum certamen erat, sed multo magis ab ea multitudine, quae disposita in turribus stabat, omni genere missilium telorum ac saxis maxime uulnerabantur. ubi propius ripam hostium subissent, tormentis missa etiam ad ultimos perueniebant. multo pluribus eo die amissis consul paulo serius recepit suos. tertio die proelio abstinuit, degressus ad imam partem castrorum, ueluti per deuexum in mare brachium transitum temptaturus. Perseus, quod in oculis erat * * * *

integro hosti non abicere; sed tantus ardor in animis ad dimicandum utcumque erat, ut consuli non minore arte ad suos eludendos quam ad hostes opus esset. nondum omnibus instructis instabat tribunis militum, ut maturarent instruere; circumibat ipse ordines; animos militum hortando in pugnam accendebat. ibi primo alacres signum poscebant; deinde, quantum incresceret aestus, et uultus minus uigentes et uoces segniores erant, et quidam incumbentes scutis nixique pilis stabant tum iam aperte primis ordinibus inperat, metarentur frontem castrorum et impedimenta constituerent. quod ubi fieri milites sensere, alii gaudere palam, quod fessos uiae labore flagrantissimo aestu non coegisset pugnare; legati circa imperatorem ducesque externi erant, inter quos et Attalus, omnes adprobantes, dum pugnaturum consulem credebant — neque enim ne his <quidem> cunctationem aperuerat suam — ; tunc mutatione consilii subita cum alii silerent, Nasica unus ex omnibus ausus est monere consulem, ne hostem ludificatum priores imperatores fugiendo certamen manibus emitteret: uereri, ne, <si> nocte abeat, sequendus maximo labore ac periculo in intima Macedoniae sit, aestasque, sicut prioribus ducibus, per calles saltusque Macedonicorum montium uagando circumagatur. se magnopere suadere, dum in campo patenti hostem habeat, adgrediatur, nec oblatam occasionem uincendi amittat. consul nihil offensus libera admonitione tam clari adolescentis ‘et ego’ inquit ‘animum istum habui, Nasica, quem tu nunc habes, et, quem ego nunc habeo, tu habebis. multis belli casibus didici, quando pugnandum, quando abstinendum pugna sit. non operae est stanti nunc in acie docere, quibus de causis hodie quiesse melius sit. rationes alias reposcito; nunc auctoritate ueteris imperatoris contentus eris.’ conticuit adolescens: haud dubie uidere aliqua impedimenta pugnae consulem, quae sibi non apparerent.

[37] Paulus postquam metata castra impedimentaue conlocata animaduertit, ex postrema acie triarios primos subducit, deinde principes, stantibus in prima acie hastatis, si quid hostis moueret, postremo hastatos, ab dextro primum cornu singulorum paulatim signorum milites subtrahens. ita pedites equitibus cum leui armatura ante aciem hosti oppositis sine tumultu abducti, nec ante, quam prima frons ualli ac fossa perducta est, ex statione equites reuocati sunt. rex quoque, cum sine detractatione paratus pugnare eo die fuisset, contentus eo, quod per hostem moram fuisse scirent, et ipse in castra copias reduxit.

Castris permunitis C. Sulpicius Gallus, tribunus militum secundae legionis, qui praetor superiore anno fuerat, consulis permissu ad contionem militibus uocatis pronuntiauit, nocte proxima, ne quis id pro portento acciperet, ab hora secunda usque ad quartam horam noctis lunam defecturam esse. id quia naturali ordine statis temporibus fiat, et sciri ante et praedici posse. itaque quem ad modum, quia certi solis lunaeque et ortus et occasus sint, nunc pleno orbe, nunc senescentem exiguo cornu fulgere lunam non mirarentur, ita ne obscurari quidem, cum condatur umbra terrae, trahere in prodigium debere. nocte, quam pridie nonas Septembres insecuta est dies, edita hora luna cum defecisset, Romanis militibus Galli sapientia prope diuina uideri; Macedonas ut triste prodigium, occasum regni perniciemque gentis portendens, mouit nec aliter uates. clamor ululatusque in castris Macedonum fuit, donec luna in suam lucem emersit.

Postero die — tantus utrique ardor exercitui ad concurrendum fuerat, ut et regem et consulem suorum quidam, quod sine proelio discessum esset, accusarent — regi prompta defensio erat, non eo solum, quod hostis prior aperte pugnam detractans in castra copias reduxisset, sed etiam quod eo loco signa constituisset, quo phalanx, quam inutilem uel mediocris iniquitas loci efficeret, promoueri non posset. consul ad id, quod pridie praetermisisset pugnandi occasionem uidebatur et locum dedisse hosti, si nocte abire uellet, tunc quoque per speciem immolandi terere uidebatur tempus, cum luce prima ad signum propositum pugnae exeundum in aciem fuisset. tertia demum hora sacrificio rite perpetrato ad consilium uocauit; atque ibi, quod rei gerendae tempus esset, loquendo et intempestiue consultando uidebatur quibusdam extrahere. <aduersus eos> sermones talem consul orationem habuit.

[38] 'P. Nasica, egregius adulescens, ex omnibus unus, quibus hesterno die pugnari placuit, denudauit mihi suum consilium; idem postea, ita ut transisse in sententiam meam uideri posset, tacuit. quibusdam aliis absentem carpere imperatorem quam praesentem monere melius uisum est. et tibi, P. Nasica, et quicumque idem, quod <tu>, occultius senserunt, non grauabor reddere dilatae pugnae rationem. nam tantum abest, ut me hesternae quietis paeniteat, ut seruatum a me exercitum eo consilio credam. in qua me opinione sine causa esse ne quis uestrum credat, recognoscat agedum mecum, si uidetur, quam multa pro hoste et aduersus nos fuerint. iam omnium primum, quantum numero nos praestent, neminem uestrum nec ante ignorasse et hesterno die explicatam intuentis aciem animaduertisse certum habeo. ex hac nostra paucitate quarta pars militum praesidio inpedimentis relictæ erat; nec ignauissimum quemque relinqui ad custodiam sarcinarum scitis. sed fuerimus omnes: paruom hoc tandem esse credimus, quod ex his castris, in quibus hac nocte mansimus, exituri in aciem hodierno aut summum crastino die, si ita uidebitur, diis bene iuuantibus sumus? nihilne interest, utrum militem, quem neque uiae labor eo die neque operis fatigauerit, requietum, integrum in tentorio suo arma capere iubeas atque in aciem plenum uirium, uigentem et corpore et animo educas, an longo itinere fatigatum et onere fessum, madentem sudore, arentibus siti faucibus, ore atque oculis repletis puluere, torrente meridiano sole, hosti obicias recenti, requieto, qui nulla re ante consumptas uires ad proelium adferat? quis, pro deum fidem, ita conparatus, uel iners atque inbellis, fortissimum uirum <non> uicerit? quid, quod hostes per summum otium instruxerant aciem, praeparauerant animos, stabant compositi suis quisque ordinibus, nobis tunc repente trepidandum in acie instruenda erat et incompositis concurrendum?

[39] At hercule aciem quidem inconditam inordinatamque habuissemus, <sed> castra munita, prouisam aquationem, tutum ad eam iter praesidiis inpositis, explorata circa omnia; an nihil nostri habentes praeter nudum campum, in quo pugnaremus * * *. maiores uestri castra munita portum ad omnis casus exercitus ducebant esse, unde ad pugnam exirent, quo iactati tempestate pugnae receptum haberent. ideo, cum munimentis ea saepsissent, praesidio quoque ualido firmabant, quod, qui castris exutus erat, etiamsi pugnando acie uicisset, pro uicto haberetur. castra sunt uictori receptaculum, uicto perfugium. quam multi exercitus, quibus minus prospera pugnae fortuna fuit, intra uallum compulsi tempore suo, interdum momento post, eruptione facta uictorem hostem pepulerunt? patria altera militaris est haec sedes, uallumque pro moenibus et tentorium suum cuique militi domus ac penates sunt. sine ulla sede uagi

dimicasset, ut quo <uicti, quo> uictores nos reciperemus? his difficultatibus et impedimentis pugnae illud opponitur: quid, si hostis hac interposita nocte abisset, quantum rursus sequendo eo penitus in ultimam Macedoniam exhauriendum laboris erat? ego autem neque mansurum eum neque in aciem copias educturum fuisse certum habeo, si cedere hinc statuisset. quanto enim facilius abire fuit, cum procul abessemus, quam nunc, cum in ceruicibus sumus, nec fallere nos interdiu aut nocte abeundo <potest? quid au>tem est nobis optatius quam ut, quorum castra praealta fluminis ripa tuta, uallo insuper saepta crebris<que> turribus oppugnare adorti sumus, eos relictis munimentis, agmine effuso abeuntis in patentibus campis ab tergo adoriamur? hae dilatae pugnae ex hesterno die in hodiernum causae fuerunt. pugnare enim et ipsi mihi placet; et ideo, quia per Elpeum amnem saepta ad hostem uia erat, alio saltu deiectis hostium praesidiis nouom iter aperui, neque prius, quam debellauero, absistam.’

[40] Post hanc orationem silentium fuit, partim traductis in sententiam eius, partim uerentibus nequiquam offendere in eo, quod utcumque praetermissum reuocari non posset. ac ne illo ipso quidem die aut consuli aut regi <pugnare placebat, regi,> quod nec fessos, ut pridie, ex uia neque trepidantis in acie instruenda et uixdum compositos adgressurus erat, consuli, quod in nouis castris non ligna, non pabulum conuectum erat, ad quae petenda ex propinquis agris magna pars militum e castris exierat. neutro imperatorum uolente fortuna, quae plus consiliis humanis pollet, contraxit certamen. flumen erat haud magnum propius hostium castra, ex quo et Macedones et Romani aquabantur praesidiis ex utraque ripa positis, ut id facere tuto possent. duae cohortes a parte Romanorum erant, Marrucina et Paeligna, duae turmae Samnitium equitum, quibus praeerat M. Sergius Silus legatus; et aliud pro castris statiuom erat praesidium sub C. Cluuiio legato, tres cohortes, Firmana, Uestina, Cremonensis, duae turmae equitum, Placentina et Aesernina. cum otium ad flumen esset neutris lacescentibus, hora circiter nona iumentum e manibus curantium elapsum in ulteriorem ripam effugit. quod cum per aquam ferme genu tenus altam tres milites sequerentur, Threces duo id iumentum ex medio alueo in suam ripam trahentes <caperent, hos persecuti illi> altero eorum occiso receptoque [eo] iumento ad stationem suorum <se> recipiebant. octingentorum Thracum praesidium in hostium ripa erat. ex his pauci primo, aegre passi popularem in suo conspectu caesum, ad persequendos interfectores fluuium transgressi sunt, dein plures, postremo omnes, et cum praesidio * * * * .

[41] * * proelium ducit. mouebat imperii maiestas, gloria uiri, ante omnia aetas, quod maior sexaginta annis iuuenum munia in parte praecipua laboris periculique capescebat. interuallum, quod inter caetratos et phalanges erat, inpleuit legio atque aciem hostium interruptit. a tergo caetrati erant, frontem aduersus clupeatos habebat; chalcaspides appellabantur. secundam legionem L. Albinus consularis ducere aduersus leucaspidem phalangem iussus; ea media acies hostium fuit. in dextrum cornu, unde circa fluuium commissum proelium erat, elephantos inducit et alas sociorum; et hinc primum fuga Macedonum est orta. nam sicut pleraque noua conmenta mortalium in uerbis uim habent, experiendo, cum agi, non, quem ad modum agatur, edisseri oportet, sine ullo effecto euanescunt, ita tum elephantomachae nomen tantum sine usu fuerunt. elephantorum impetum subsecuti sunt socii nominis Latini pepuleruntque laeuom cornu. in medio secunda legio inmissa dissipauit phalangem. neque ulla euidentior causa uictoriae fuit, quam quod multa passim proelia erant, quae fluctuantem turbantur primo, deinde disiecerunt phalangem, cuius confertae et intentis horrentis hastis intolerabiles uires sunt; si carptim adgrediendo circumagere immobilem longitudine et grauitate hastam cogas, confusa strue implicantur; si uero aut ab latere aut ab tergo aliquid tumultus increpuit, ruinae modo turbantur, sicut tum aduersus cateruatim incurrentes Romanos et interrupta multifariam acie obuiam ire cogebantur; et Romani, quacumque data interualla essent, insinuabant ordines suos. qui si uniuersa acie in frontem aduersus instructam phalangem concurrissent, quod Paelignis principio pugnae incaute congressis aduersus caetratos euenit, induissent se hastis nec confertam aciem sustinuissent.

[42] Ceterum sicut peditum passim caedes fiebant, nisi qui abiectis armis fugerunt, sic equitatus prope integer pugna excessit. princeps fugae rex ipse erat. iam a Pydna cum sacris alis equitum Pellam petebat; confestim eos Cotys sequebatur Odrysarumque equitatus.

ceterae quoque Macedonum alae integris abibant ordinibus, quia interiecta peditum acies, cuius caedes uictores tenebat, inmemores fecerat sequendi equites. diu phalanx a fronte, a lateribus, ab tergo caesa est. postremo qui ex hostium manibus elapsi erant, inermes ad mare fugientes, quidam aquam etiam ingressi, manus ad eos, qui in classe erant, tendentes, suppliciter uitam orabant; et cum scaphas concurrere undique ab nauibus cernerent, ad excipiendos sese uenire rati, ut caperent potius quam occiderent, longius in aquam, quidam etiam natantes, progressi sunt. sed cum hostiliter <e> scaphis caederentur, retro, qui poterant, nando repetentes terram in aliam foediorum pestem incidebant; elephantum enim ab rectoribus ad litus acti exeuntis obtrebant elidebantque. facile conuenit ab Romanis numquam una acie tantum Macedonum interfectum. caesa enim ad uiginti milia hominum sunt; ad sex <milia>, qui Pydnam ex acie perfugerant, uiui in potestatem peruenerunt, et uagi ex fuga quinque milia hominum capta. ex uictoribus ceciderunt non plus centum, et eorum multo maior pars Paeligni; uulnerati aliquanto plures sunt. quod si maturius pugnari coeptum esset, ut satis diei uictoribus ad persequendum superesset, deletae omnes copiae forent: nunc imminens nox et fugientes texit et Romanis pigritiem ad sequendum locis ignotis fecit.

[43] Perseus ad Pieriam siluam uia militari frequenti agmine equitum et regio comitatu fugit. simul in siluam uentum est, ubi plures diuersae semitae erant, et nox adpropinquabat, cum perpaucis maxime fidis uia deuertit. equites sine duce relictii alii alia in ciuitates suas dilapsi sunt; perpauci inde Pellam celerius quam ipse Perseus, quia recta <et> expedita uia ierant, peruenerunt. rex ad mediam ferme noctem errore et uariis difficultatibus uiae est uexatus; in regia Perseo, qui Pellae praeerant, Euctus <Eulaeus>que <et> regii pueri praesto erant. contra ea amicorum, qui alii alio casu seruati ex proelio Pellam uenerant, cum saepe arcessiti essent, nemo ad eum uenit. tres erant tantum cum eo fugae comites, Euander Cretensis, Neo Boeotus et Archidamus Aetolus. cum iis iam metuens, ne, qui uenire ad se abnuerent, maius aliquid mox auderent, quarta uigilia profugit. secuti eum sunt admodum quingenti Cretenses. petebat Amphipolim; sed nocte a Pella exierat, properans ante lucem Axium amnem traicere, eum finem sequendi propter difficultatem transitus fore ratus

Romanis.

[44] Consulem, cum se in castra uictor recepisset, ne sincero gaudio frueretur, cura de minore filio stimulabat. P. Scipio is erat, Africanus et ipse postea deleta Carthagine appellatus, naturalis consulis Pauli filius, adoptione Africani nepos. is septimum decimum tunc annum agens, quod ipsum curam augebat, dum effuse sequitur hostes, in partem aliam turba ablatum erat; et serius cum redisset, tunc demum, recepto sospite filio, uictoriae tantae gaudium consul sensit. Amphipolim cum iam fama pugnae peruenisset concursusque matronarum in templum Dianae, quam Tauropolon uocant, ad opem exposcendam fieret, Diodorus, qui praeerat urbi, metuens, ne Thraces, quorum duo milia in praesidio erant, urbem in tumultu diriperent, ab subornato ab se per fallaciam in tabellarii speciem litteras in foro medio accepit. scriptum in iis erat ad Emathiam classem Romanam adpulsam esse agrosque circa uexari; orare praefectos Emathiae, ut praesidium aduersus populos mittat. his lectis hortatur Thraces, ut ad tuendam Emathiae oram proficiscantur: magnam eos caedem praedamque palatis passim per agros Romanis facturos. simul eleuat famam aduersae pugnae: quae si uera foret, alium super alium recentes ex fuga uenturos fuisse. per hanc causam Thracibus ablegatis, simul transgressos eos Strymonem uidit, portas clausit.

[45] Tertio die Perseus, quam pugnatum erat, Amphipolim uenit. inde oratores cum caduceo ad Paulum misit. interim Hippas et Midon et Pantauchus, principes amicorum regis, Beroea, quo ex acie confugerant, ipsi ad consulem profecti Romanis se dedunt. hoc idem et alii deinceps metu perculsi parabant facere. consul nuntiis uictoriae Q. Fabio filio et L. Lentulo et Q. Metello cum litteris Romam missis spolia iacentis hostium exercitus peditibus concessit, equitibus praedam circumiecti agri, dum ne amplius duabus noctibus a castris abessent. ipse propius mare ad Pydnam castra mouit. Beroea primum, deinde Thessalonica et Pella et deinceps omnis ferme Macedonia intra biduum dedita. Pydnaci, qui proximi erant, nondum miserant legatos; multitudo incondita plurimum simul gentium turbaque, <quae> ex acie fuga in unum compulsa erat, consilium et consensum ciuitatis inpediebat; nec clausae modo portae, sed etiam inaedificatae erant. missi Midon et Pantauchus sub muros ad conloquium Solonis, qui praesidio praeerat; per eum emittitur militaris turba. oppidum deditum militibus datur diripiendum. Perseus una tantum spe Bisaltarum auxilii temptata, ad quos nequiquam miserat legatos, in contionem processit Philippum secum filium habens, ut et ipsos Amphipolitanos et equitum peditumque, qui aut se persecuti aut fuga eodem delati erant, adhortando animos confirmaret. sed aliquotiens dicere incipientem cum lacrimae praepedissent, quia ipse hiscere nequii, Euandro Cretensi editis, quae agi cum multitudine uellet, de templo descendit. multitudo, sicut ad conspectum regis fletumque tam miserabilem et ipsa ingemuerat lacrimaueratque, ita Euandri orationem aspernabatur; et quidam ausi sunt media ex contione succlamare ‘abite hinc, ne, qui pauci supersumus, propter uos pereamus.’ horum ferocia uocem Euandri clausit. rex in<de> domum se recepit pecuniaque et auro argentoque in lembos, qui in Strymone stabant, delatis et ipse ad flumen descendit. Thraces nauibus se committere non ausi domos dilapsi et alia militaris generis turba; Cretenses spe pecuniae secuti. et quoniam in diuidendo plus offensionum quam gratiae erat, quinquaginta talenta iis posita sunt in ripa diripienda. ab hac direptione cum per tumultum naues conscenderent, lembum unum in ostio amnis multitudine grauatum merserunt. Galepsum eo die, postero Samothracam, quam petebant, perueniunt; ad duo milia talentum peruecta eo dicuntur.

[46] Paulus per omnes deditas ciuitates dimissis, qui praeessent, ne qua iniuria in noua pace uictis fieret, retentisque apud se caduceatoribus regis P. Nasicam, ignarus fugae regis, Amphipolim misit cum modica peditum equitumque manu, simul ut Sinticen euastaret et ad omnes conatus regi impedimento esset. inter haec Meliboea a Cn. Octauio capitur diripiturque; ad Aeginium, ad quod oppugnandum Cn. Anicius legatus missus erat, ducenti eruptione ex oppido facta amissi sunt ignaris Aeginiensibus debellatum esse. consul a Pydna profectus cum toto exercitu die altero Pellam peruenit et cum castra mille passus inde posuisset, per aliquot dies ibi statua habuit, situm urbis undique aspiciens, quam non sine causa delectam esse regiam <anim>aduertit. sita est in tumulo uergente in occidentem hibernum; cingunt paludes inexsuperabilis altitudinis aestate et hieme, quas restagnantes faciunt <amnes. arx> Phacus in ipsa palude, qua proxima urbi est, uelut insula eminet, aggeri operis ingentis imposita, qui et murum sustineat et umore circumfusae paludis nihil laedatur. muro urbis coniuncta procul uidetur; diuisa est intermurali amni et eadem ponte iuncta, ut nec oppugnante externo aditum ab ulla parte habeat, nec, si quem ibi rex includat, ullum nisi per facillimae custodiae pontem effugium. et gaza regia in eo loco erat; sed tum nihil praeter trecenta talenta, quae missa Gentio regi, deinde retenta fuerant, inuentum est. per quos dies ad Pellam statua fuerunt. legationes frequentes, quae ad gratulandum conuenerant, maxime ex Thessalia, auditae sunt. nuntio deinde accepto Persea Samothracam traiecisse, profectus a Pella consul quartis castris Amphipolim peruenit. effusa omnis obuiam turba cuius indicio erat non bono ac iusto rege orba * * .

LIBER XLV

[1] Victoriae nuntii, Q. Fabius et L. Lentulus et Q. Metellus, quanta potuit adhiberi festinatio, celeriter Romam cum uenissent, praeceptam tamen eius rei laetitiam inuenerunt. quarto post die, quam cum rege est pugnatum, cum in circo ludi fierent, murmur repente populi tota spectacula peruasit pugnatum in Macedonia et deuictum regem esse; dein fremitus increuit; postremo clamor plausus<que> uelut certo nuntio uictoriae allato est exortus. mirari magistratus et quaerere auctorem repentinae laetitiae; qui postquam nullus erat, euanuit quidem tamquam certae rei gaudium, omen tamen laetum insidebat animis. quod postquam ueris nuntiis Fabi Lentulique et Metelli aduentu firmatum est, cum uictoria ipsa, tum augurio animorum suorum laetabantur. et altera traditur circensis turbae non minus similis ueri laetitia. ante diem quintum decimum kalendas Octobres, ludorum Romanorum secundo die, C. Licinio consuli ad quadrigas mittendas escendenti tabellarius, qui se ex Macedonia uenire diceret, laureatas litteras <reddidisse> dicitur. quadrigis missis consul currum conscendit et, cum per circum reueheretur ad foros publicos, laureatas tabellas populo ostendit. quibus conspectis repente inmemor spectaculi populus in medium decurrit. eo senatum consul uocauit recitatisque tabellis ex auctoritate patrum pro foris publicis denuntiauit populo L. Aemilium collegam signis conlatis cum rege Perseo pugnasse; Macedonum exercitum caesum fusumque; regem cum paucis fugisse; ciuitates omnes Macedoniae in dicionem populi Romani uenisse. his auditis clamor cum ingenti plausu ortus; ludis relictis domos magna pars hominum ad coniuges liberos<que> laetum nuntium portabant. tertius decimus dies erat ab eo, quo in Macedonia pugnatum est.

[2] Postero die senatus in curia habitus, supplicationesque decretae et senatus consultum factum est, ut consul, quos praeter milites sociosque nauales coniuratos haberet, dimitteret: de militibus sociisque naualibus dimittendis referretur, cum legati ab L. Aemilio consule, a quibus praemissus tabellarius esset, <uenissent>. ante diem sextum kal. Octobres hora fere secunda legati urbem ingressi sunt; ingentem secum occurrentium, quacumque ibant, prosequentiumque trahentes turbam in forum perrexerunt. senatus forte in curia erat; eo legatos consul introduxit. ibi tantum temporis retenti, dum exponerent, quantaе regiaе <copiae> peditum equitumque fuissent, quot milia ex iis caesa, quot capta forent, quam paucorum militum iactura tanta hostium strages facta, quam praeceps rex fugisset; existimari Samothraciam petiturum; paratam classem ad persequendum esse, neque terra neque mari elabi posse. eadem haec paulo post in contionem traducti exposuerunt; renouataque laetitia, cum consul edixisset, ut omnes aedes sacrae aperirentur, pro se quisque ex contione ad gratias agendas ire dis, ingentique turba non uirorum modo sed etiam feminarum conpleri tota urbe deorum immortalium templa. senatus reuocatus in curiam supplicationes ob rem egregie gestam ab L. Aemilio consule in quinque dies circa omnia puluinaria decreuit hostiisque maioribus sacrificari iussit. naues, quae in Tiberi paratae instructaeque stabant, ut, si res posceret, in Macedoniam mitterentur, subduci et in naualibus conlocari, socios naualis dato annuo stipendio dimitti et cum iis omnes, qui in consulis uerba iurauerant; et quod militum Corcyrae, Brundisi, ad mare superum aut in agro Larinati esset — omnibus his locis dispositus exercitus fuerat, cum quo, si res posceret, C. Licinius collegae ferret opem — , hos omnes milites dimitti placuit. supplicatio pro contione populo indicta est ex ante diem quintum idus Octobres cum eo die in quinque dies.

[3] Ex Illyrico duo legati, C. Licinius Nerua et P. Decius, nuntiarunt exercitum Illyriorum caesum, Gentium regem captum, in ditione populi Romani [et] Illyricum esse. ob eas res gestas ductu auspicioque L. Anici praetoris senatus in triduum supplicationes decreuit. indictae a consule sunt in ante <diem> quartum et tertium et pridie idus Nouembres.

Tradidere quidam legatos Rhodios nondum <di>missos post uictoriam nuntiatam uelut ad ludibrium stolidae superbiae in senatum uocatos esse; ibi Agepolim, principem eorum, ita locutum: missos esse legatos ab Rhodiis ad pacem inter Romanos et Persea faciendam, quod id bellum graue atque incommodum Graeciae omni, sumptuosum ac damnosum ipsis Romanis esset. fortunam populi Romani bene fecisse, quod finito aliter bello gratulandi sibi de uictoria egregia Romanis opportunitatem dedisset. haec ab Rhodio dicta. responsum ab senatu esse: Rhodios nec utilitatum Graeciae cura neque inpensarum populi Romani, sed pro Perseo legationem eam misisse. nam si ea fuisset cura, quae simularetur, tum mittendos legatos fuisse, cum Perseus in Thessaliam exercitu inducto per biennium Graecas urbes alias obsideret, alias denuntiatione armorum terreret; tum nullam pacis ab Rhodiis mentionem factam. postquam superatos saltus transgressosque in Macedoniam Romanos audissent et inclusum teneri Persea, tunc Rhodios legationem misisse, non ad ullam aliam rem quam ad Persea ex imminente periculo eripiendum. cum hoc responso legatos dimissos.

[4] Per eosdem dies et M. Marcellus, ex prouincia Hispania decedens Marcolica nobili urbe capta, decem pondo auri et argenti ad summam sestertii deciens <in> aerarium rettulit.

Paulus Aemilius consul cum castra, ut supra dictum est, ad Siras terrae Odomanticae haberet, litterae ab rege Perseo per ignobiles tres legatos <ei allatae sunt. quos cum flentes ac sordidatos> cerneret, et ipse inlacrimasse dicitur sorti humanae, quod, qui paulo ante non contentus regno Macedoniae Dardanos Illyriosque oppugnasset, Bastarnarum <ac>ciuisset auxilia, is tum amisso exercitu, extorris regno, in paruam insulam compulsus, supplex, fani religione, non uiribus suis tutus esset. sed postquam regem Persea consuli Paulo salutem legit, miserationem omnem stultitia ignorantis fortunam suam exemit. itaque, quamquam in reliqua parte litterarum minime regiae preces erant, tamen sine responso ac sine litteris ea legatio dimissa est. sensit Perseus, cuius nominis obliuiscendum uicto esset; itaque alterae litterae cum priuati nominis titulo missae et petiere et impetrauere, ut aliqui ad eum mitterentur, cum quibus loqui de statu et condicione suae fortunae posset. missi sunt tres legati, P. Lentulus, A. Postumius Albinus, A. Antonius. nihil ea legatione perfectum est, Perseo regium nomen omni ui amplectente, Paulo, ut se suaque omnia in fidem et clementiam populi Romani permitteret, tendente.

[5] <quae> dum aguntur, classis Cn. Octaui Samothracam est adpulsa. is quoque praesenti admoto terrore modo minis, modo spe perlicere, ut se traderet, <cum> conaretur, adiuuuit in hoc eum res seu casu contracta seu consilio. L. Atilius, inlustris adulescens, cum in contione esse populum Samothracum animum aduertisset, a magistratibus petit, ut sibi paucis adloquendi populi potestatem facerent. permisso ‘utrum nos, hospites Samothraces, uere accepimus an falso sacram hanc insulam et augusti totam atque inuiolati soli esse?’ cum creditae sanctitati adsentirentur omnes, ‘cur igitur’ inquit ‘polluit eam homicida, sanguine regis Eumenis uiolauit, et, cum omnis praefatio <sacro>rum eos, quibus non sint purae manus, sacris arceat, uos penetralia uestra contaminari cruento latronis corpore sinetis?’ nobilis fama erat apud omnes Graeciae ciuitates Eumenis regis per Euandrum Delphis prope perpetrata caedes. itaque, praeterquam quod in potestate Romanorum sese insulamque totam et templum cernebant esse, ne inmerito quidem ea sibi exprobrari rati, Theondan, qui summus magistratus apud eos erat — regem ipsi appellant —, ad Persea mittunt, qui nuntiaret argui caedis Euandrum Cretensem; esse autem iudicia apud sese more maiorum comparata de iis, qui incestas manus intulisse intra terminos sacros templi dicantur; si confideret Euander innoxium se rei capitalis argui, ueniret ad causam dicendam; si committere se iudicio non auderet, liberaret religione templum ac sibimet ipse consuleret. Perseus seuocato Euandro iudicium subeundi nullo pacto <aucto>r esse: nec causa nec gratia parem fore. suberat et ille metus, ne damnatus auctorem se nefandi facinoris protraheret. reliqui quid esse, nisi ut fortiter moriatur? nihil palam abnuere Euander; sed cum ueneno se malle mori quam ferro dixisset, occulte fugam parabat. quod cum renuntiatum regi esset, metuens, ne tamquam a se subtracto poenae reo iram Samothracum in se conuerteret, interfici Euandrum iussit. qua perpetrata temere caede subit extemplo animum, in se nimirum receptam labem, quae Euandri fuisset; ab illo Delphis uulneratum Eumenen, ab se Samothracae Euandrum occisum; ita duo sanctissima in terris templa se uno auctore sanguine humano uiolata. huius rei crimen corrupto pecunia Theonda auertit, ut renuntiaret populo Euandrum sibi ipsum mortem conscisse.

[6] Ceterum tanto facinore in unicum relictum amicum admisso, per tot casus expertum proditumque, quia non prodiderat, omnium ab se abalienauit animos. pro se quisque transire ad Romanos; fugaeque consilium capere solum prope relictum coegerunt; Oroandem <deni>que Cretensem, cui nota Threciae ora erat, quia mercaturas in ea regione fecerat, appellat, ut se sublatum <in> lembum ad Cotym deueheret. Demetrium est portus in promunturio quodam

Samothracae; ibi lembus stabat. sub occasum solis deferuntur, quae ad usum necessaria erant; deferitur et pecunia, quanta clam deferri poterat. rex ipse nocte media cum tribus consciis fugae <per> posticum aedium in propincuum cubiculo hortum atque inde maceriam aegre transgressus ad mare peruenit. Oroandes tantum <moratus>, dum pecunia deferretur, primis tenebris soluerat nauem ac per altum Cretam petebat. postquam in portu nauis non inuenta est, uagatus Perseus aliquamdiu in litore, postremo timens lucem iam adpropinquantem, in hospitium redire non ausus in latere templi prope angulum obscurum delituit. pueri regii apud Macedonas uocabantur principum liberi ad ministerium electi regis; ea cohors persecuta regem fugientem ne tum quidem abscedebat, donec iussu Cn. Octaui pronuntiatum est per praeconem regios pueros Macedonasque alios, qui Samothracae essent, si transirent ad Romanos, incolumitatem libertatemque et sua omnia seruatuuros, <quae> aut secum haberent aut in Macedonia reliquissent. ad hanc uocem transitio omnium facta est, nominaque dabant ad C. Postumium tribunum militum. liberos quoque paruos regios Ion Thessalonicensis Octauio tradidit, nec quisquam praeter Philippum, maximum natu e filiis, cum rege relictus. tum sese filiumque Octauio tradidit, fortunam deosque, quorum <in> templo erat, nulla ope supplicem iuuantis accusans. in praetoriam nauem inponi iussus, eodem et pecunia, quae superfuit, delata est; extemploque classis Amphipolim repetit. inde Octauius regem in castra ad consulem misit praemissis litteris, ut in potestate eum esse et adduci sciret.

[7] Secundam eam Paulus, sicut erat, uictoriam ratus uictimas cecidit eo nuntio, et consilio aduocato <litteras> praetoris cum recitasset, Q. Aelium Tuberone obuiam regi misit, ceteros manere in praetorio frequentis iussit. non alias ad ullum spectaculum tanta multitudo occurrit. patrum aetate Syphax rex captus in castra Romana adductus erat; praeterquam quod nec sua nec gentis fama comparandus, ~tunc quod accessio Punici belli fuerat, sicut Gentius Macedonici: Perseus caput belli erat, nec ipsius tantum patris auique <ceterorumque>, quos sanguine et genere contingebat, fama conspectum eum efficiebat, sed effulgebant Philippus ac magnus Alexander, qui summum imperium in orbe terrarum Macedonum fecerant. pullo amictu <cum> filio Perseus ingressus est castra nullo suorum alio comite, qui socius calamitatis miserabiliorem eum faceret. progredi prae turba occurrentium ad spectaculum non poterat, donec a consule lictores missi sunt, qui summoto iter ad praetorium facerent. consurrexit consul [et] iussis sedere aliis progressusque paulum introeunti regi dextram porrexit summittentemque se ad pedes sustulit nec attingere genua passus introductum in tabernaculum aduersus aduocatos in consilium considerare iussit.

[8] Prima percontatio fuit, qua subactus iniuria contra populum Romanum bellum tam infesto animo suscepisset, quo se regnumque suum ad ultimum discrimen adduceret? cum responsum expectantibus cunctis terram intuens diu tacitus fleret, rursus consul: ‘si iuuenis regnum accepisses, minus equidem mirarer ignorasse te, quam grauis aut amicus aut inimicus esset populus Romanus; nunc uero, cum et bello patris tui, quod nobiscum gessit, interfuisses, et pacis postea, quam cum summa fide aduersus eum coluimus, meminisses, <quod fuit> consilium, quorum et uim <in> bello et fidem in pace expertus esses, cum iis tibi bellum esse quam pacem malle?’ nec interrogatus nec accusatus cum responderet, ‘utcumque tamen haec, siue errore humano seu casu seu necessitate inciderunt, bonum animum habe. multorum regum populorum<que> casibus cognita populi Romani clementia non modo spem tibi, sed prope certam fiduciam salutis praebet.’ haec Graeco sermone Perseo; Latine deinde suis ‘exemplum insigne cernitis’ inquit ‘mutationis rerum humanarum. uobis hoc praecipue dico, iuuenes. ideo in secundis rebus nihil in quemquam superbe ac uiolenter consulere decet nec praesenti credere fortunae, cum, quid uesper ferat, incertum sit. is demum uir erit, cuius animum neque prosperae <res> flatu suo efferent nec aduersae infringent.’ consilio dimisso tuendi cura regis Q. Aelio mandatur. eo die et inuitatus ad consulem Perseus et alius omnis ei honos habitus est, qui haberi in tali fortuna poterat. exercitus deinde in hiberna dimissus est.

[9] Maximam partem copiarum Amphipolis, reliquas propinquae urbes acceperunt.

Hic finis belli, cum quadriennium continuum bellatum esset, inter Romanos ac Persea fuit idemque finis incluti per Europae plerumque atque Asiam omnem regni. uicensimum ab Carano, qui primus regnabat, Persea numerabant. Perseus Q. Fulvio <L.> Manlio consulibus regnum accepit, a senatu rex est appellatus M. Iunio A. Manlio consulibus; regnavit undecim annos. Macedonum <gens> obscura admodum fama usque ad Philippum, Amyntae filium, fuit; inde ac per eum crescere cum coepisset, Europae se tamen finibus continuit, Graeciam omnem et partem Threciae atque Illyrici amplexa. superfudit deinde se in Asiam, et tredecim annis, quibus Alexander regnavit, primum omnia, qua Persarum prope immenso spatio imperium fuerat, suae dicionis fecit; Arabas hinc Indiamque, qua terrarum ultimos finis rubrum mare amplectitur, peragravit. tum maximum in terris Macedonum regnum nomenque; inde morte Alexandri distractum <in> multa regna, dum ad se quisque opes rapiunt, laceratis uiribus a summo culmine fortunae ad ultimum finem centum quinquaginta annos stetit.

[10] Victoriae Romanae fama cum peruasisset in Asiam, Antenor, qui cum classe lemborum ad Phanas stabat, Cassandriam inde traiecit. C. Popilius, qui Deli in praesidio nauibus Macedoniam petentibus erat, postquam debellatum in Macedonia et statione summos hostium lembos audiuit, dimissis et ipse Attali nauibus ad susceptam legationem peragendam nauigare Aegyptum pergit, ut prius occurrere Antiocho posset, quam ad Alexandriae moenia accederet. cum praeterueherentur Asiam legati et Loryma uenissent, qui portus uiginti paulo amplius milia ab Rhodo abest, ex aduerso urbi ipsi positus, principes Rhodiorum occurrunt — iam enim eo quoque uictoriae fama perlata erat — orantes, ut Rhodum deueherentur: pertinere id ad famam salutemque ciuitatis, noscere ipsos omnia, quae acta essent <quae>que agerentur Rhodi, et conperta per se, non uolgata fama Romam referre. diu negantes perpulerunt, ut moram nauigationis breuem pro salute sociae urbis paterentur. postquam Rhodum uentum est, in contionem quoque eos iidem precibus pertraxerunt. aduentus legatorum auxit potius timorem ciuitati quam minuit; omnia enim Popilius, quae singuli uniuersique eo bello hostiliter dixerant fecerantque, rettulit, et uir asper ingenio augebat atrocitatem eorum, quae dicerentur, uultu truci et accusatoria uoce, ut, cum propriae simultatis nulla causa cum ciuitate ei esset, ex unius senatoris Romani acerbitate, qualis in se uniuersi senatus animus esset, coniectarent. C. Decimi moderatio<r oratio> fuit, qui in plerisque eorum, quae commemorata a Popilio essent, culpam non penes populum, sed penes paucos concitores uolgi esse dixit: eos, uenalem linguam habentis, decreta plena regiae adsentationis fecisse et eas legationes misisse, quarum Rhodios semper non minus puderet quam paeniteret. quae omnia, si sana mens populo foret, in capita noxiorum uersura. cum magno adsensu auditus est, non magis eo, quod multitudinem noxa leuabat, quam quod culpam in auctores uerterat. itaque cum principes Rhodiorum Romanis responderent, nequaquam tam grata oratio eorum fuit, qui, quae Popilius obiecerat, diluere utcumque conati sunt, quam eorum, qui Decimio in auctoribus ad piaculum noxae obiciendis adsensi sunt. decretum igitur extemplo, ut, qui pro Perseo aduersus Romanos dixisse quid aut fecisse conuincerentur, capitis condemnarentur. excesserant urbe sub aduentum Romanorum quidam, alii mortem sibi consciuerunt. legati non ultra quam quinque dies Rhodi morati Alexandream proficiscuntur. nec eo segnius iudicia ex decreto coram iis facto Rhodii exercebant; quam perseuerantiam in exequenda re tam Decimi lenitas quam <Popili effecerat asperitas>.

[11] <Cum> haec gererentur, Antiochus frustra temptatis moenibus Alexandriae abscesserat ceteraque Aegypto potitus, relicto Memphi maiore Ptolemaeo, cui regnum quaeri suis uiribus simulabat, ut uictorem mox adgrederetur, in Syriam exercitum abduxit. nec huius uoluntatis eius ignarus Ptolemaeus, dum contritum obsidionis metu minorem fratrem haberet, posse se recipi Alexandriae et sorore adiuuante et non repugnantibus fratris amicis ratus primum ad sororem, deinde ad fratrem amicosque eius non prius destitit mittere, quam pacem cum iis confirmaret. suspectum Antiochum effecerat, quod cetera Aegypto sibi tradita Pelusi ualidum relictum erat praesidium. apparebat claustra Aegypti teneri, ut, cum uellet, rursus exercitum induceret; bello intestino cum fratre eum exitum fore, ut uictor fessus certamine nequaquam par Antiocho futurus esset. haec prudenter animaduersa  maiore cum adsensu minor frater quique cum eo erant acceperunt; soror plurimum adiuuit non consilio modo, sed etiam precibus. itaque consentientibus cunctis pace facta Alexandream recipitur, ne multitudine quidem aduersante, quae in bello non per obsidionem modo, sed etiam, postquam amoenibus abscessum est, quia nihil ex Aegypto subuehebatur, omnium rerum adenuata inopia erat. his cum laetari Antiochum conueniens esset, si reducendi eius causa exercitum Aegyptum induxisset, quo specioso titulo ad omnis Asiae et Graeciae ciuitates legationibus recipiendis litterisque dimittendis usus erat, adeo est offensus, ut multo acrius infestiusque aduersus duos, quam ante aduersus unum pararet bellum. Cyprum extemplo classem misit; ipse primo uere cum exercitu Aegyptum petens in Coelen Syriam processit. circa Rhinocolura Ptolemaei legatis agentibus gratias, quod per eum regnum patrium recepisset, petentibusque, ut suum munus tueretur et diceret potius, quid fieri uellet, quam hostis ex socio factus ui atque armis ageret, respondit non aliter neque classem reuocaturum neque exercitum reducturum, nisi sibi et tota Cypro et Pelusio agroque, qui circa Pelusiaceum ostium Nili esset, cederetur; diemque praestituit, intra quam de condicionibus peractis responsum acciperet.

[12] Postquam dies data induitiis praeteriit, nauigantibus ostio Nili ad Pelusium <praefectis ipse> per deserta Arabiae <est profectus receptusque et ab iis, qui> ad Memphim incolebant, et ab ceteris Aegyptiis, partim uoluntate partim metu, ad Alexandream modicis itineribus descendit. ad Eleusinem transgresso flumen, qui locus quattuor milia ab Alexandria abest, legati Romani occurrerunt. quos cum aduenientis salutasset dextramque Popilio porrigeret, tabellas ei Popilius <senatus consultum> scriptum habentis tradit atque omnium primum id legere iubet. quibus perlectis cum se consideraturum adhibitis amicis, quid faciendum sibi esset dixisset, Popilius pro cetera asperitate animi uirga, quam in manu gerebat, circumscripsit regem ac ‘priusquam hoc circulo excedas’ inquit ‘redde responsum, senatui quod referam.’ obstupefactus tam uiolento imperio parumper cum haesitasset, ‘faciam’ inquit ‘quod censet senatus.’ tum demum Popilius dextram regi tamquam socio atque amico porrexit. die deinde finita cum excessisset Aegypto Antiochus, legati concordia etiam auctoritate sua inter fratres firmata, inter quos uixdum conuenerat pax, Cyprum nauigant et inde, quae iam uicerat proelio Aegyptias naues, classem Antiochi dimittunt. clara ea per gentis legatio fuit, quod haud dubie adempta Antiocho Aegyptus habenti iam redditumque patrium regnum stirpi Ptolemaei fuerat. consulum eius anni sicut alterius clarus consulatus insigni uictoria, ita alterius obscura fama, quia materiam res gerendi non habuit. iam primum cum legionibus ad conueniendum <diem> edixit, non auspicato templum intrauit. uitio diem dictam esse augures, cum ad eos relatum esset, decreuerunt. profectus in Galliam circa Macros campos ad montis Siciminam et Papinum statua habuit; deinde circa eadem loca cum sociis nominis Latini hibernabat; legiones Romanae, quod uitio dies exercitui ad conueniendum dicta erat, Romae manserant. et praetores praeter C. Papirium Carbonem, cui Sardinia euenerat, in prouincias iere. eum ius dicere Romae — nam eam quoque sortem habebat — inter ciues et peregrinos patres censuerant.

[13] Et Popilius et ea legatio, quae missa ad Antiochum erat, Romam redit; rettulit controuersias inter reges sublatas esse exercitumque ex Aegypto in Syriam reductum. post ipsorum regum legati uenerunt: Antiochi legati referentes omni uictoria potiore pacem regi, senatui quae placuisset, uisam, eumque haud secus quam deorum imperio legatorum Romanorum iussis paruissse; gratulati dein de uictoria sunt, quam ope s<ua>, si quid imperatum foret, adiuturum regem fuisse. Ptolemaei legati communi nomine regis et Cleopatrae gratias egerunt: plus eos senatui populoque Romano quam parentibus suis, plus quam diis immortalibus debere, per quos obsidione miserrima liberati essent, regnum patrium prope amissum <recepissent. responsum> ab senatu est Antiochum recte atque ordine fecisse, quod legatis paruisset, gratumque id esse senatui populoque Romano: regibus Aegypti Ptolemaeo Cleopatraeque, si quid per se boni commodique euenisset, id magno opere senatum laetari, daturumque operam, ut regni sui maximum semper praesidium positum esse in fide populi Romani ducant. munera legatis ut ex instituto mittenda curaret, C. Papirio praetori mandatum. litterae deinde <e> Macedonia allatae, quae uictoriae laetitiam geminarent: Persea regem in potestatem consulis uenisse. dimissis legatis <regiis> disceptatum inter Pisanos Lunensesque legatos est, Pisanis querentibus agro se a colonis Romanis pelli, Lunensibus adfirmantibus eum, de quo agatur, ab triumuiris agrum sibi adsignatum esse. senatus, qui de finibus cognoscerent statuerentque, quinque uiros misit Q. Fabium Buteonem, P. Cornelium Blasionem, T. Sempronium Muscam, L. Naeuium Balbum, C. Apuleium Saturninum.

Et ab Eumene et ab Attalo et ab Athenaeo fratribus communis

legatio de uictoria gratulatum uenit. et Masgabae, regis Masinissae filio, Puteolis naue egresso praesto fuit obuiam missus cum pecunia L. Manlius quaestor, qui Romam eum publico sumptu perduceret. aduenienti extemplo senatus datus est. ibi adulescens ita locutus est, ut, quae rebus grata erant, gratiora uerbis faceret. commemorauit, quot pedites equitesque, quot elephantos, quantum frumenti eo quadriennio pater suus in Macedoniam misisset: duas res ei rubori fuisse, unam, quod rogasset eum per legatos senatus, quae ad bellum opus essent, et non inperasset, alteram, quod pecuniam ei pro frumento misisset. Masinissam meminisse <se> regnum a populo Romano partum auctumque et multiplicatum habere; usu regni contentum scire dominium et ius eorum, qui dederint, esse. sumere itaque eos de se, non rogare aequom esse, neque emere ea ex fructibus agri ab se dati, * * * quae ibi proueniant. id Masinissae satis esse et fore, quod populo Romano supereset. cum iis mandatis a patre profectum postea consecutos equites, qui deuictam Macedoniam nuntiarent gratularique senatui iuberent et indicare tantae eam rem laetitiae patri suo esse, ut Romam uenire uelit Iouique optimo maximo in Capitolio sacrificare et grates agere; id, nisi molestum sit, ut ei permittatur, ab senatu petere.

[14] Responsum regulo est facere patrem eius Masinissam, quod uirum gratum bonumque facere deceat, ut pretium honoremque debito beneficio addat. et populum Romanum ab eo bello Punico forti fidelique opera adiutum, et illum fauente populo Romano regnum adeptum; aequatis iis postea trium regum bellis deinceps omnibus eum functum officiis. uictoria uero populi Romani laetari eum regem mirum non esse, qui sortem omnem fortunae regnique sui cum rebus Romanis miscuisset. grates deis pro uictoria apud suos penates ageret; Romae filium pro eo acturum. gratulatum quoque satis suo ac patris nomine esse. ipsum relinquere regnum et Africa excedere, praeterquam quod illi inutile esset, non esse e re publica populi Romani senatum censere. petenti Masgabae, ut Hanno, Hamilcaris filius, obses in locum * <exigeretur, responsum est haud aequum uideri senatum a Carthaginensibus obsides arbitrio Masinissae> exigere. munera ex senatus consulto emere regulo quaestor iussus ex centum pondo argenti et prosequi eum Puteolos omnemque sumptum, quoad in Italia esset, praebere et duas naues conducere, quibus ipse comitesque eius in Africam deueherentur; et comitibus omnibus, liberis seruisque, uestimenta data. haud ita multo post de altero Masinissae filio Misagene litterae adlatae sunt, missum eum ab L. Paulo post deuictum Persea in Africam cum equitibus suis; nauigantem dispersa classe in Hadriatico mari Brundisium tribus nauibus aegrum delatum. <ad> eum cum isdem muneribus, quae data Romae fratri eius erant, L. Stertinius quaestor Brundisium missus <iussus>que curare, ut aedes hospi<tio> * * * *

[15] In quattuor urbanas tribus discripti erant libertini praeter eos, quibus filius quinquenni maior ex se natus esset, — eos, ubi proxumo lustro censi essent, censeri iusserunt — et eos, qui praedium praediaue rustica pluris sestertium triginta milium haberent, * * * censendi ius factum est. hoc cum ita seruatum esset, negabat Claudius suffragii lationem iniussu populi censorem cuiquam homini, nedum ordini uniuerso adimere posse. neque enim, si tribu mouere possit, quod sit nihil aliud quam mutare iubere tribum, ideo omnibus quinque et triginta tribubus emouere posse, id esse ciuitatem libertatemque eripere, non, ubi censeatur, finire, sed censu excludere. haec inter ipsos disceptata; postremo eo descensum est, ut ex quattuor urbanis tribubus unam palam in atrio Libertatis sortirentur, in quam omnes, qui seruitutem seruissent, conicerent. Esquilinae sors exiit: in ea Ti. Gracchus pronuntiauit libertinos omnis censeri placere. magno ea res honori censoribus apud senatum fuit. gratiae actae et Sempronio, qui in bene coepto perseuerasset, et Claudio, qui non inpedisset. plures quam ab superioribus et senatu moti sunt et equos uendere iussi. omnes iidem ab utroque et tribu moti et aerarii facti; neque ullius, quem alter notararat, <ab> altero leuata ignominia. petentibus, ut ex instituto ad sarta tecta exigenda et ad opera, quae locassent, probanda anni et sex mensum tempus prorogaretur, Cn. Tremellius tribunus, quia lectus non erat in senatum intercessit.

Eodem anno C. Cicereius aedem Monetae <in monte> Albano dedicauit quinquennio post, quam uouit. flamen Martialis inauguratus est eo anno L. Postumius Albinus.

[16] Q. Aelio M. Iunio consulibus de prouinciis referentibus censuere patres duas prouincias Hispaniam rursus fieri, quae una per bellum Macedonicum fuerat; et Macedoniam Illyricumque eosdem,

L. Paulum et L. Anicium, obtinere, donec de sententia legatorum res et bello turbatas et <in> statum alium ex regno formandas conposuissent. consulibus Pisae et Gallia decretae cum binis <legionibus quinum milium et ducenorum> peditum et equitum quadringenorum. praetorum sortes fuere, Q. Cassi urbana, M'. Iuuenti Talnae inter peregrinos, Ti. Claudii Neronis Sicilia, Cn. Fului Hispania citerior, <ulterior> C. Licinii Neruae. A. Manlius Torquatus Sardinia obuenerat: <at> nequirit ire in prouinciam, ad res capitalis quaerendas ex senatus consulto retentus. de prodigiis deinde nuntiatis senatus est consultus. aedes deum Penatium in Uelia de caelo tacta erat et in oppido Mineruo duae portae et muri aliquantum. Anagninae terra pluerat et Lanuui fax in caelo uisa erat; et Calatiae in publico agro M. Ualerius ciuis Romanus nuntiabat e foco suo sanguinem per triduum et duas noctes manasse. ob id maxime decemuiris libros adire iussi supplicationem in diem unum populo edixerunt et quinquaginta capris in foro sacrificauerunt. et aliorum prodigiorum causa diem alterum supplicatio circa omnia puluina fuit et hostiis maioribus sacrificatum est et urbs lustrata. item, quod ad honorem deum immortalium pertineret, decreuit senatus, ut, quoniam perduelles superati, Perseus et Gentius reges cum Macedonia atque Illyrico in potestate populi Romani essent, ut, quanta dona Ap. Claudio M. Sempronio consulibus ob deuictum Antiochum regem data ad omnia puluina essent, tanta Q. Cassius et M'. Iuuentius praetores curarent danda.

[17] Legatos deinde, quorum de sententia imperatores L. Paulus, L. Anicius conponerent res, decreuerunt decem in Macedoniam, quinque <in> Illyricum. in Macedoniam primi nominati: A. Postumius Luscus, C. Claudius, ambo illi censorii, <Q. Fabius Labeo, Q. Marcius Philippus,> C. Licinius Crassus, collega in consulatu Pauli; tum prorogato imperio prouinciam Galliam habebat. his consularibus addidit Cn. Domitium Ahenobarbum, Ser. Cornelium Sullam, L. Iunium, T. Numisium Tarquiniensem, A. Terentium Uarronem. <in> Illyricum autem hi nominati: P. Aelius Ligus consularis, C. Cicereius et Cn. Baebius Tampilus — hic priore anno, Cicereius multis ante annis praetor fuerat — , P. Terentius Tuscianus, P. Manilius. moniti deinde consules a patribus, ut, quoniam alterum ex his succedere C. Licinio, qui legatus nominatus erat, in Gallia oporteret, primo <quoque> tempore prouincias aut compararent inter se aut sortirentur, sortiti sunt. M. Iunio Pisae obuenerunt, quem, priusquam in prouinciam iret, legationes, quae undique Romam gratulatum conuenerant, introducere in senatum placuit, Q. Aelio <Gallia>. ceterum quamquam tales uiri mitterentur, quorum de consilio sperari posset imperatores nihil indignum nec clementia nec grauitate populi Romani decreturos esse, tamen in senatu quoque agitata sunt summa consiliorum, ut inchoata omnia legati ab domo ferre ad imperatores possent.

[18] Omnium primum liberos esse placebat Macedonas atque Illyrios, ut omnibus gentibus appareret arma populi Romani non liberis seruitutem, sed contra seruientibus libertatem adferre, ut et, in libertate gentes quae essent, tutam eam sibi perpetuamque sub tutela <populi Romani> esse, et, quae sub regibus uiuerent, et in praesens tempus mitiores eos iustioresque respectu populi Romani habere se crederent et, si quando bellum cum populo Romano regibus fuisset suis, exitum eius uictoriam Romanis adlaturum, sibi libertatem. metalli quoque Macedonici, quod ingens uectigal erat, locationes praediorumque rusticorum tolli placebat; nam neque sine publicano exerceri posse et, ubi publicanus esset, ibi aut ius publicum uanum aut libertatem sociis nullam esse. ne ipsos quidem Macedonas id exercere posse; ubi in medio praeda administrantibus esset, ibi numquam causas seditionum et certaminis defore. <denique ne, si> commune concilium gentis esset, improbus uulgi adsentator aliquando libertatem salubri moderatione datam ad licentiam pestilentem traheret, in quattuor regiones describi Macedoniam, ut suum quaeque concilium haberet, placuit et dimidium tributum, quam quod regibus ferre soliti erant, populo Romano pendere. similia his et <in> Illyricum mandata. cetera ipsis imperatoribus legatisque relictis, in quibus praesens tractatio rerum certiora subiectura erat consilia.

[19] Inter multas regum gentiumque et populorum legationes Attalus, frater regis Eumenis, maxime conuertit in se omnium oculos animosque. exceptus enim est ab iis, qui simul eo bello militauerant, haud paulo benignius, quam si ipse rex Eumenes uenisset. adduxerant eum duae in speciem honestae res, una gratulatio conueniens in ea uictoria, quam ipse adiuuisset, altera querimonia Gallici tumultus acceptaeque cladis, qua regnum in dubium

adductum esset. suberat et secreta spes honorum praemiorumque ab senatu, quae uix salua pietate ei contingere poterant. <erant> enim quidam Romanorum quoque non boni auctores, qui spe cupiditatem eius elicerent: eam opinionem de Attalo et Eumene Romae esse, tamquam de altero Romanis certo amico, altero nec Romanis nec Persei fido socio. itaque uix statui posse, utrum, quae pro se, an, quae contra fratrem petiturus esset, ab senatu magis inpetrabilia forent; adeo uniuersos omnia et huic tribuere et illi uero negare. eorum hominum, ut res docuit, Attalus erat, qui, quantum spes spopondisset, cuperent, ni unius amici prudens monitio uelut frenos animo eius gestienti secundis rebus inposuisset. Stratius cum eo fuit medicus, ad id ipsum a non securo Eumene Romam missus speculator rerum, quae a fratre agerentur, monitorque fidus, si decedi fide uidisset: is ad occupatas iam aures sollicitatumque iam animum cum uenisset, adgressus tempestiuis sermonibus rem prope prolapsam restituit, aliis alia regna creuisse rebus dicendo: regnum eorum nouum, nullis uetustis fundatum opibus, fraterna stare concordia, quod unus nomen regium et praecipuum capitis insigne gerat, omnes fratres regnent. Attalum uero, qui aetate proximus sit, quis non pro rege habeat? neque eo solum, quia tantas praesentes eius opes cernat, sed quod haud ambiguum <sit> prope diem regnaturum; eam infirmitatem aetatemque Eumenis esse nullam stirpem liberum habentis; necdum enim agnouerat eum, qui postea regnauit. quid adtinere uim adferre rei sua sponte ad eum mox uenturae? accessisse etiam nouam tempestatem regno tumultus Gallici, cui uix consensu et concordia regum resisti queat; si uero ad externum bellum domestica seditio adiciatur, sisti non posse. nec aliud eum, quam, ne frater in regno moriatur, sibi ipsi spem propinquam regni erepturum. si utraque gloriosa res esset, et seruasse fratri regnum et eripuisse, seruati tamen regni, quae iuncta pietati sit, potioem laudem <futuram> fuisse. sed enim uero cum detestabilis altera res et proxima parricidio sit, quid ad deliberationem dubii superesse? utrum enim partem regni petiturum esse, an totum erepturum? si partem, ambo infirmos distractis uiribus et omnibus iniuriis pro<palam> obnoxios fore; si totum, priuaturne ergo maiorem fratrem, an exulem <esse> illa aetate, illa corporis infirmitate, an <ad> ultimum mori iussurum? egregium enim, ut fabulis traditus impiorum fratrum euentus taceatur, Persei exitum uideri, qui ex fraterna caede raptum diadema in templo Samothracum, uelut praesentibus dis exigentibus poenas, ad pedes uictoris hostis prostratus posuerit. eos ipsos, qui non illi amici, sed Eumeni infesti stimulent eum, pietatem constantiamque laudaturos, si fidem ad ultimum fratri praestitisset.

[20] Haec plus ualuere in Attali animo. itaque introductus in senatum gratulatus uictoriam est; sua merita eo bello fratrisque, si qua erant, et Gallorum defectionem, quae nuper ingenti motu facta erat, exposuit; petit, ut legatos mitteret ad eos, quorum auctoritate ab armis auocarentur. his pro regni utilitate editis mandatis, Aenum sibi et Maroneam petit. ita destituta eorum spe, qui fratre accusato partitionem regni petiturum crediderant, curia excessit. [ut] raro alias quisquam rex aut priuatus tanto fauore tantoque omnium adsensu est auditus: omnibus honoribus muneribusque <et> praesens est cultus et proficiscentem prosecuti sunt. inter multas Asiae Graeciaeque legationes Rhodiorum maxime legati ciuitatem conuerterunt. nam cum primo in ueste candida uisi essent, quod et gratulantis decebat, et, si sordidam uestem habuissent, lugentium Persei casum praebere speciem poterant, postquam consulti ab M. Iunio consule patres stantibus in comitio legatis, an locum, lautia senatumque darent, nullum hospitale ius in iis esse seruandum censuerunt, egressus e curia consul, cum Rhodii gratulatum se de uictoria purgatumque ciuitatis crimina dicentes uenisse petissent, ut senatus sibi daretur, pronuntiat sociis et amicis et alia comiter atque hospitaliter praestare Romanos et senatum dare consuesse: Rhodios non ita meritos eo bello, ut amicorum sociorum<que> numero habendi sint; his auditis prostrauerunt se omnes humi consulemque et cunctos, qui aderant, orantes, ne noua falsaque crimina plus obesse Rhodiis aecum censerent quam antiqua merita, quorum ipsi testes essent. extemplo ueste sordida sumpta domos principum cum precibus ac lacrimis circumibant orantes, ut prius cognoscerent causam quam condemnarent.

[21] M'. Iuuentius Talna praetor, cuius inter ciues et peregrinos iurisdictio erat, populum aduersus Rhodios incitabat rogationemque promulgauerat, ut Rhodiis bellum indiceretur, et ex magistratibus eius anni deligerent, qui ad id bellum cum classe mitteretur, se eum sperans futurum esse. huic actioni M. Antonius et M. Pomponius tribuni plebis aduersabantur. sed et praetor nouo maloque exemplo rem ingressus erat, quod non ante consulto senatu, non consulibus certioribus factis de sua unius sententia rogationem ferret, uellent iuberentne Rhodiis bellum indici, cum antea semper prius senatus de bello consultus esset, deinde <ex auctoritate> patrum ad populum latum, et tribuni plebis, cum ita traditum esset, ne quis prius intercederet legi, quam priuatis suadendi dissuadendique legem potestas facta esset, eoque persaepe euenisset, ut et, qui non professi essent se intercessuros, animaduersis uitiis legis ex oratione dissuadentium intercederent, et, qui ad intercedendum uenissent, desisterent uicti auctoritatibus suadentium legem. tum inter praetorem tribunosque omnia intempestiue agendi certamen erat: tribuni festinationem praetoris ante tempus intercedendo * * * in aduentum im<peratoris> * *

[22] ‘ * * est. peccauerimusne adhuc dubium est; poenas, ignominias omnes iam patimur. antea, Carthaginensibus uictis, Philippo, Antiocho superatis, cum Romam uenissemus, ex publico hospitio in curiam gratulatum uobis, patres conscripti, ex curia in Capitolium ad deos uestros dona ferentes <escendebamus;> nunc ex sordido deuersorio, uix mercede recepti ac prope hostium more extra urbem manere iussi, in hoc squalore uenimus in curiam Romanam Rhodii, quos prouinciis nuper Lycia atque Caria, quos praemiis atque honoribus amplissimis donastis. et Macedonas Illyriosque liberos esse, ut audimus, iubetis, cum seruierint, antequam uobiscum bellarent — nec cuiusquam fortunae inuidemus, immo agnoscimus clementiam populi Romani — : Rhodios, qui nihil aliud quam quieuerunt hoc bello, hostes ex sociis facturi estis? certe iidem uos estis Romani, qui ideo felicia bella uestra esse, quia iusta sint, prae uobis fertis, nec tam exitu eorum, quod uincatis, quam principiis, quod num<quam> sine causa suscipiatis, gloriamini. Messana in Sicilia oppugnata Carthaginenses, Athenae oppugnatae et Graecia in seruitutem petita et adiutus Hannibal pecunia auxiliis Philippum hostem fecerunt. Antiochus ipse ultro, ab Aetolis, hostibus uestris, accersitus, ex Asia classe in Graeciam traiecit; Demetriade et Chalcide et saltu Thermopylarum occupato de possessione imperii uos deicere <est> conatus. cum Perseo socii uestri oppugnati, aut interfecti reguli principesque gentium aut populorum causa belli uobis fuere. quem tandem titulum nostra calamitas habitura est, si perituri sumus? nondum segrego ciuitatis causam a Polyarato et Dinone, ciuibus nostris, et iis, quos ut traderemus uobis, adduximus. si omnes Rhodii aequae noxii essemus, quod nostrum in hoc bello crimen esset? Persei partibus fauimus et, quemadmodum Antiochi Philippique bello pro uobis aduersus reges, sic nunc pro rege aduersus uos stetimus. quemadmodum soleamus socios iuuare et quam inpigre capessere bella, C. Liuium, L. Aemilium Regillum interrogate, qui classibus uestris in Asia praefuerunt. numquam uestrae naues pugnauere sine nobis. <nos> nostra classe pugnauimus semel ad Samum, iterum in Pamphylia aduersus Hannibalem inperatorem; quae uictoria nobis eo gloriosior est, quod, cum ad Samum magnam partem nauium aduersa pugna et egregiam iuuentutem amissemus, ne tanta quidem clade territi iterum ausi <sumus> regiae classi ex Syria uenienti obuiam ire. haec non gloriandi causa rettuli — neque enim ea nunc nostra est fortuna — , sed ut admonerem, quemadmodum adiuuare socios solerent Rhodii.’

[23] ‘Praemia et <Philippo et> Antiocho deuictis amplissima accepimus a uobis. si, quae uestra nunc est fortuna deum benignitate et uirtute uestra, ea Persei fuisset, et praemia petitem ad uictorem regem uenissemus in Macedoniam, quid tandem diceremus? pecuniane a nobis adiutum an frumento? auxiliis terrestribus an naualibus? quod praesidium tenuisse nos? ubi pugnasse aut sub illius ducibus <aut> per nos ipsos? si quaereret, ubi miles noster, ubi nauis intra praesidia sua fuisset, quid responderemus? causam fortasse diceremus apud uictorem, quem ad modum apud uos dicimus. hoc enim legatos utroque <de> pace mittendo consecuti sumus, ut ne ab utraque parte gratiam iniremus, ab altera etiam crimen et periculum esset. quamquam Perseus uere obiceret, id quod uos non potestis, patres conscripti, nos principio belli misisse ad uos legatos, qui pollicerentur uobis, quae ad bellum opus essent; nauibus, armis, iuuentute <nos> nostra, sicut prioribus bellis, ad omnia paratos fore. ne praestaremus, per uos stetit, qui de quacumque causa tum aspernati nostra auxilia estis. neque fecimus igitur quicquam tam<quam> hostes, neque bonorum sociorum defuimus officio, sed a uobis prohibiti praestare fuimus. “quid igitur? nihilne factum neque dictum est in ciuitate uestra, Rhodii, quod nolletis, quo merito offenderetur populus Romanus?" hinc iam non, quod factum est, <sum> defensurus — non adeo insanio — , sed publicam causam a priuatorum culpa segregaturus. nulla est ciuitas, quae non et improbos ciues aliquando et imperitam multitudinem semper habeat. etiam apud uos fuisse audiui, qui adsentando multitudini grassarentur, et secessisse aliquando a uobis plebem nec in potestate uestra rem publicam fuisse. si hoc in hac tam bene morata ciuitate accidere potuit, mirari quisquam potest aliquos fuisse apud nos, qui regis amicitiam petentes plebem nostram consiliis deprauarent? qui tamen nihil ultra ualuerunt, quam ut in officio cessaremus. non praeteribo id, quod grauissimum est in hoc bello crimen ciuitatis nostrae: legatos eodem tempore et ad uos et ad Persea de pace misimus; quod infelix consilium furiosus, ut postea audiui, orator stultissimum fecit, quem sic locutum constat, tamquam C. Popilius legatus Romanus, quem ad summouendos a bello Antiochum et Ptolemaeum reges misistis, loqueretur. sed tamen ea siue superbia, siue stultitia appellanda est, eadem, quae apud uos, et apud Persea fuit. tam ciuitatum quam singulorum hominum mores sunt: gentes quoque aliae iracundae, aliae audaces, quaedam timidae, in uinum, in Uenerem proniores aliae sunt. Atheniensium populum fama est celerem et supra uires audacem esse ad conandum, Lacedaemoniorum cunctatorem et uix in ea, quibus fidit, ingredientem. non negauerim et totam Asiae regionem inaniora parere ingenia, et nostrorum tumidiorem sermonem esse, quod excellere inter finitimas ciuitates uideamur, et id ipsum non tam uiribus nostris quam uestris honoribus ac iudiciis. satis quidem et tunc in praesentia castigata illa legatio erat, cum tam tristi responso uestro dimissa. si tum parum ignominiae pensum est, haec certe tam miserabilis ac supplex legatio etiam insolentioris, quam illa fuit, legationis satis magnum piaculum esset. superbiam, uerborum praesertim, iracundi oderunt, prudentes inrident, utique si inferioris aduersus superiorem est; capitali poena nemo umquam dignam iudicauit. id enim uero periculum erat, ne Romanos Rhodii contemnerent. etiam deos aliqui uerbis ferocioribus increpant, nec ideo quemquam fulmine ictum audimus.'

non perniciem ciuitatis meruerunt? uoluntatis nostrae tacitae uelut litem aestimari uestris inter uos sermonibus audio, patres conscripti: fauisse nos regi et illum uincere maluisse. ideo bello persequendos esse credunt alii; <alii> uestrum uoluisse quidem nos hoc, non tamen ob id bello persequendos esse: neque moribus neque legibus ullius ciuitatis ita comparatum esse, ut, si qui uelit inimicum perire, si nihil fecerit, quo id fiat, capitis damnetur. his, qui nos poena, non crimine liberant, gratiam quidem habemus; ipsi nobis hanc dicimus legem: si omnes uoluimus, quod arguimur — non distinguimus uoluntatem a facto —, omnes plectamur: si alii principum nostrorum uobis, alii regi fauerunt, non postulo, ut propter nos, qui partium uestrarum fuimus, regis fautores salui sint; illud deprecor, ne nos propter illos pereamus. non estis uos illis infestiores, quam ciuitas est ipsa; et hoc quia sciebant, plerique eorum aut profugerunt aut mortem sibi consciuerunt; alii damnati a nobis in potestate uestra erunt, patres conscripti. ceteri Rhodii sicut gratiam nullam meriti hoc bello, ita ne poenam quidem sumus. priorum nostrorum benefactorum cumulus hoc, quod nunc cessatum in officio est, expleat. cum tribus regibus gessistis bella per hos annos; ne plus obsit nobis, quod uno bello cessauimus, quam quod duobus bellis pro uobis pugnauimus. Philippum, Antiochum, Persea tamquam tris sententias ponite: duae nos absoluunt, una dubia est; ut grauior sit, illi de nobis <si> iudicarent, damnati essemus; uos iudicatis, patres conscripti, sit Rhodus in terris an funditus deleatur; non enim de bello deliberatis, patres conscripti, quod inferre potestis, gerere non potestis, cum nemo Rhodiorum arma aduersus uos <sit> laturus. si perseuerabitis in ira, tempus a uobis petemus, quo hanc funestam legationem domum referamus; omnia libera capita, quidquid Rhodiorum uirorum feminarum est, cum omni pecunia nostra naues conscendamus ac relictis penatibus publicis priuatisque Romam ueniemus et omni auro et argento, quidquid publici, quid<quid> priuati est, in comitio, in uestibulo curiae uestrae cumulado, corpora nostra coniugumque ac liberorum uestrae potestati permittemus, hic passuri, quodcumque patiendum erit; procul ab oculis nostris urbs nostra diripiatur, incendatur. hostis Rhodios esse Romani iudicare <possunt, facere non> possunt; est enim et nostrum aliquod de nobis iudicium, quo numquam iudicabimus nos uestros hostis, nec quicquam hostile, etiam si omnia patiemur, faciemus.’

[25] Secundum talem orationem uniuersi rursus prociderunt supplices ramosque oleae iactantes; tandem excitati curia excesserunt. tunc sententiae interrogari coeptae. infestissimi Rhodiis erant, qui consules praetoresue aut legati gesserant in Macedonia bellum. plurimum causam eorum adiuit M. Porcius Cato, qui, asper ingenio, tum lenem mitemque senatorem egit. non inseram simulacrum ueri copiose, quae dixerit, referendo: ipsius oratio scripta extat, Originum quinto libro inclusa. Rhodiis responsum ita redditum est, ut nec hostes fierent nec socii permanerent. Philocrates et Astymedes principes legationis erant. partim cum Philocrate renuntiare Rhodum legationem placuit, partim cum Astymede Romae subsistere, <qui,> quae agerentur, scirent certioresque suos facerent. in praesentia deducere ante certam diem ex Lycia Cariaque iusserunt praefectos. haec Rhodum nuntiata, quae per se tristia fuissent, quia maioris mali leuatus erat timor, cum bellum timuissent, in gaudium uerterunt. itaque extemplo coronam uiginti milium aureorum decreuerunt; Theodotum, praefectum classis, in eam legationem miserunt. societatem ab Romanis ita uolebant peti, ut nullum de ea re scitum populi fieret aut litteris mandaretur, quod, nisi impetrarent, maior a repulsa ignominia esset. praefecti classis id unius erat ius, ut agere de ea re sine rogatione ulla perlata posset. nam ita per tot annos in amicitia fuerant, ut sociali foedere se cum Romanis non inligarent, ob nullam aliam causam, quam ne spem regibus absciderent auxilii sui, si quid opus esset, neu sibi ipsis fructus ex benignitate et fortuna eorum percipiendi. tunc utique petenda societas uidebatur, non quae tutiores eos ab aliis faceret — nec enim timebant quemquam praeter Romanos — , sed quae ipsis Romanis minus suspectos. sub idem fere tempus et Caunii desciuere ab iis, et Mylassenses Euromensium oppida occuparunt. non ita fracti animi ciuitatis erant, ut non sentirent, si Lycia et Caria ademptae ab Romanis forent, cetera aut se ipsa per defectionem liberarent aut a finitumis occuparentur, includi se insulae paruae et sterilis agri litoribus, quae nequaquam alere tantae urbis populum posset. missa igitur iuuentute propere et Caunios, quamquam Cibratarum ascuerant auxilia, coegerunt imperio parere; et Mylassenis Alabandensisque, qui Euromensium prouinciam ademptum et ipsi coniuncto exercitu uenerant, circa Orthosiam acie uicerunt.

[26] Dum haec ibi, alia in Macedonia, alia Romae <in Asia> geruntur, interim <in> Illyrico L. Anicius rege Gentio, sicut ante dictum est, in potestatem redacto Scodrae, quae regia fuerat, praesidio inposito Gabinium praefecit, Rhizoni et Olcinio, urbibus opportunis, C. Licinium. praepositis his Illyrico, reliquo exercitu in Epirum est profectus. ubi prima Phanote ei dedita est omni multitudine cum infulis obuam effusa. hinc praesidio inposito in Molossidem transgressus, cuius omnibus oppidis praeter Passaronem et Tecmonem et Phylacen et Horreum receptis primum ad Passaronem ducit. Antinous et Theodotus principes eius ciuitatis erant, insignes et fauore Persei et odio aduersus Romanos, iidem uniuersae genti auctores desciscendi ab Romanis. hi conscientia priuatae noxae, quia ipsis nulla spes ueniae erat, ut communi ruina patriae opprimerentur, clauserunt portas, multitudinem, ut mortem seruituti praeponerent, hortantes. nemo aduersus praepotentis uiros hiscere audebat; tandem Theodotus quidam, nobilis et ipse adulescens, cum maior a Romanis metus timorem a principibus suis uicisset, ‘quae uos rabies’ inquit ‘agitat, qui duorum hominum noxae ciuitatem accessionem facitis? equidem pro patria qui letum oppetissent, saepe fando audiui: <qui> patriam pro se perire aecum censerent, hi primi inuenti sunt. quin aperimus portas et imperium accipimus, quod orbis terrarum accepit?’ haec dicentem cum multitudo sequeretur, Antinous et Theodotus in primam stationem hostium inruperunt atque ibi offerentes se ipsi uolneribus interfecti; urbs dedita est Romanis. simili pertinacia Cephalonis principis clausum Tecmonem ipso interfecto per deditionem recepit. nec Phylace nec Horreum oppugnationem tulerunt. pacata Epiro diuisisque in hiberna copiis per opportunas urbes, regressus ipse in Illyricum Scodrae, quo quinque legati ab Roma uenerant, euocatis ex tota prouincia principibus conuentum habuit. ibi pro tribunali pronuntiavit de sententia consilii senatum populumque Romanum Illyrios esse liberos iubere: praesidia ex omnibus oppidis, arcibus, castellis sese deducturum. non solum liberos, sed etiam immunes fore Issenses et Taulantios, Dassaretiorum Pirustas, Rhizonitas, Olciniatas, quod incolumi Gentio ad Romanos defecissent. Daorsis quoque immunitatem dare, quod relicto Carauantio cum armis ad

Romanos transissent. [27] Dum haec in Illyrico geruntur, Paulus ante aduentum decem legatorum Q. Maximum filium iam ab Roma regressum ad Aeginium et Agassas diripiendas mittit, Agassas, quod, cum Marcio consuli tradidissent urbem petita ultro societate Romana, defecerant rursus ad Persea; Aeginiensium nouum crimen erat: famae de uictoria Romanorum fidem non habentes in quosdam militum urbem ingressos hostiliter saeuierant. ad Aeniorum quoque urbem diripiendam L. [30] Haec pronuntiata primo die conuentus uarie adfecerunt animos. libertas praeter spem data adrexit et leuatum annum uectigal; regionatim commercio interruptis ita uideri lacerata <Macedonia>, tamquam animali in artus alterum alterius indigentis distracto: adeo, quanta Macedonia esset, quam diuisui facilis, quam se ipsa quaeque contenta pars esset, Macedones quoque ignorabant. pars prima Bisaltas habet, fortissimos uiros — trans Nessum amnem incolunt et circa Strymonem — , et multas frugum proprietates et metalla et opportunitatem Amphipolis, quae obiecta claudit omnes ab oriente sole in Macedoniam aditus. secunda pars celeberrimas urbes Thessalonicen <et> Cassandream habet, ad hoc Pallenen, fertilem ac frugiferam terram; maritimas quoque opportunitates ei praebent portus ad Toronen ac montem Atho Aeneam<que> et Acanthum, alii <ad Thessaliam> insulamque Euboeam, alii ad Hellespontum opportune uersi. tertia regio nobilis urbes Edessam et Beroeam et Pellam habet et Uettiorum bellicosam gentem, incolas quoque permultos Gallos et Illyrios, inpigros cultores. quartam regionem Eordaei et Lyncestae et Pelagones incolunt; iuncta his Atintania et Tymphaeis et Elimiotis. frigida haec omnis duraque cultu et aspera plaga est; cultorum quoque ingenia terrae similia habet. ferociores eos et accolae barbari faciunt, nunc bello exercentes, nunc in pace miscentes ritus suos. diuisa itaque Macedonia partium usibus separatis, quanta uniuersa <esset>, ostendit.

[31] Macedoniae formula dicta cum leges quoque se daturum ostendisset, Aetoli deinde citati. in qua cognitione magis utra pars Romanis, utra regi fauisset quaesitum est, quam utra fecisset iniuriam aut acceperisset; noxa liberati interfectores; exilium pulsus aequae ratum fuit ac mors interfectis; A. Baebius unus est damnatus, quod milites Romanos praeuisset ad ministerium caedis. hic euentus Aetolorum causae in omnibus Graeciae gentibus populisque eorum, qui partis Romanorum fuerant, inflauit ad intolerabilem superbiam animos et obnoxios pedibus eorum subiecit, quos aliqua parte suspicio fauoris in regem contigerat. tria genera principum in ciuitatibus erant, duo, quae adulando aut Romanorum imperium aut

Claudius et Cn. Domitius, ut ipsi edicto euocarent. id duabus de causis factum, una, quod fiducia plus animorumque esse Achaeis ad non parendum credebant et forsitan etiam in periculo fore Callicraten et ceteros criminum auctores delatoresque; altera, cur praesentes euocarent, causa erat, quod ex aliis gentibus principum litteras deprensas in commentariis regiis habebant, in Achaeis caecum erat crimen nullis eorum litteris inuentis. Aetolis dimissis Acarnanum citata gens. in his nihil nouatum, nisi quod Leucas exempta est Acarnanum concilio. quaerendo deinde latius, qui publice aut priuatim partium regis fuissent, in Asiam quoque cognitionem extendere et ad Antissam in Lesbo insula dirundam <ac> traducendos Methymnam Antissaeos Labeonem miserunt, quod Antenorem, regium praefectum, quo tempore cum lembis circa Lesbum esset uagatus, portu receptum commeatibus iuuissent. duo securi percussi uiri insignes, Andronicus, Andronici filius, Aetolus, quod patrem secutus arma contra populum Romanum tulisset, et Neo Thebanus, quo auctore societatem cum Perseo iunxerant.

[32] His rerum externarum cognitionibus interpositis Macedonum rursus aduocatum concilium; pronuntiatum, quod ad statum Macedoniae pertinebat, senatores, quos synhedros uocant, legendos esse, quorum consilio res publica administraretur. nomina deinde

sunt recitata principum Macedonum, quos cum liberis maioribus quam quindecim annos natis praecedere in Italiam placeret. id, prima specie saeuom, mox apparuit multitudini Macedonum pro libertate sua esse factum. nominati sunt enim regis amici purpuratique, duces exercituum, praefecti nauium aut praesidorum, seruire regi humiliter, aliis superbe imperare adsueti; praediuites alii, alii, quos fortuna non aequarent, his sumptibus pares; regius omnibus uictus uestitusque, nulli ciuilis animus, neque legum neque libertatis aequae patiens. omnes igitur, qui in aliquis ministeriis regiis, etiam qui in legationibus fuerant, iussi Macedonia excedere atque in Italiam ire: qui non paruisset imperio, mors denunciata. leges Macedoniae dedit cum tanta cura, ut non hostibus uictis, sed sociis bene meritis dare uideretur, et quas ne usus quidem longo tempore, qui unus est legum corrector, experiendo argueret. ab seriis rebus ludicrum, quod ex multo ante praeparato et in Asiae ciuitates et ad reges missis, qui denuntiarent, et, cum circumiret ipse Graeciae ciuitates, indixerat principibus, magno apparatu Amphipoli fecit. nam et artificum omnis generis, qui ludicram artem faciebant, ex toto orbe terrarum multitudo et athletarum et nobilium equorum conuenit et legationes cum uictimis et quidquid aliud deorum hominumque causa fieri magnis ludis in Graecia solet, ita factum est, ut non magnificentiam tantum, sed prudentiam in dandis spectaculis, ad quae rudes tum Romani erant, admirarentur. epulae quoque legationibus paratae et opulentia et cura eadem. uulgo dictum ipsius ferebant et conuiuium instruere et ludos parare eiusdem esse, qui uincere bello sciret.

[33] Edito ludicro [omnis generis] clupeisque aereis in naues inpositis cetera omnis generis arma cumulata <in> ingentem aceruum, precatus Martem, Mineruam Luamque matrem et ceteros deos, quibus spolia hostium dicare ius fasque est, ipse imperator face subdita succendit; deinde circumstantes tribuni militum pro se quisque ignes coniecerunt. notata est in illo conuentu Europae Asiaeque, undique partim ad gratulationem, partim ad spectaculum contracta multitudine, tantis naualibus terrestribusque exercitibus, ea copia rerum, ea uilitas annonae, ut et priuatis et ciuitatibus et gentibus dona data pleraque eius generis sint ab imperatore, non in usum modo praesentem, sed etiam quod domos aueherent. spectaculo fuit ei, quae uenerat, turbae non scaenicum magis ludicrum, non certamina hominum aut curricula equorum, quam praeda Macedonica omnis, ut uiseretur, exposita, statuarum tabularumque <et> textilium et uasorum ex auro et argento et aere et ebore factorum ingenti cura in ea regia, ut non in praesentem modo speciem, qualibus referta regia Alexandreae erat, sed in perpetuum usum fierent. haec in classem inposita deuehenda Romam Cn. Octauio data. Paulus benigne legatis dimissis transgressus Strymonem mille passuum ab Amphipoli castra posuit; inde profectus Pellam quinto die peruenit. praetergressus urbem, ad Pellaeum, quod uocant, biduum moratus, P. Nasicam et Q. Maximum filium cum parte copiarum ad depopulandos Illyrios, qui Persea iuuerant bello, misit iussos ad Oricum sibi occurrere; ipse Epirum petens quintis decimis castris Passaronem peruenit.

[34] Haud procul inde Anici castra aberant. ad quem litteris missis, ne quid ad ea, quae fierent, moueretur; senatum praedam Epiri ciuitatium, quae ad Persea defecissent, exercitui dedisse suo, missis centurionibus in singulas urbes, qui se dicerent ad praesidia deducenda uenisse, ut liberi Epirotae sicut Macedones essent, denos principes ex singulis euocauit ciuitatibus; quibus cum denuntiasset, ut aurum atque argentum in publicum proferretur, per omnes ciuitates cohortes dimisit. ante in ulteriores quam in propiores profecti, ut uno die in omnes perueniretur. edita tribunis centurionibusque erant, quae agerentur. mane omne aurum argentumque conlatum; hora quarta signum ad diripiendas urbes datum est militibus; tantaque praeda fuit, ut in equitem quadringeni denarii, peditibus duceni diuiderentur, centum quinquaginta milia capitum humanorum abducerentur. muri deinde direptarum urbium diruti sunt; ea fuere oppida circa septuaginta. uendita praeda omnis, inde ea summa militi numerata est. Paulus ad mare Oricum descendit nequaquam, ut ratus erat, expletis militum animis, qui, tamquam nullum in Macedonia gessissent bellum, expertis regiae praedae esse indignabantur. Orici cum missas cum Scipione Nasica Maximoque filio copias iuuenisset, exercitu in naues inposito in Italiam traiecit. et post paucos dies Anicius conuentu reliquorum Epirotarum Acarnanumque acto iussisque in Italiam sequi principibus, quorum cognitionem causae <senatui> reseruauerat, et ipse nauibus expectatis, quibus usus Macedonicus exercitus erat, in Italiam traiecit.

Cum haec in Macedonia Epiroque gesta sunt, legati, qui cum Attalo ad finiendum bellum inter Gallos et regem Eumenem missi erant, in Asiam peruenerant. indutiis per hiemem factis et Galli domos abierant et rex in hiberna concesserat Pergamum grauique morbo aeger fuerat. uer primum eos domo exciuit iamque Synnada peruenerant et Eumenes ad Sardis undique exercitum contraxerat. ibi Romani cum et Solouettium, ducem Gallorum, ~Synnades adlocutus ettalus cum eis profectus, sed castra Gallorum intrare eum non placuit, ne animi ex disceptatione inritarentur. P. Licinius consularis <cum> regulo Gallorum est locutus rettulitque ferociorem eum deprecando factum, ut mirum uideri possit inter tam opulentos reges, Antiochum Ptolemaeumque, tantum legatorum Romanorum uerba ualuisset, ut extemplo pacem facerent, apud Gallos nullius momenti fuisse.

[35] Romam primum reges captiui, Perseus et Gentius, in custodiam cum liberis abducti, dein turba alia captiuorum, tum quibus Macedonum denuntiatum erat, ut Romam uenirent, principum<que> Graeciae; nam ii quoque non solum praesentes exciti erant, sed etiam, si qui apud reges esse dicebantur, litteris arcessiti sunt. Paulus ipse post dies paucos regia naue ingentis magnitudinis, quam sedecim uersus remorum agebant, ornata Macedonicis spoliis non insignium tantum armorum, sed etiam regionum textilium, aduerso Tiberi ad urbem est subuectus, completis ripis obuiam effusa multitudine. paucos post dies Anicius et Octauius classe sua aduecti. tribus iis omnibus decretus est ab senatu triumphus mandatumque Q. Cassio praetori, cum tribunis plebis ageret, ex auctoritate patrum rogationem ad plebem ferrent, ut iis, quo die urbem triumphantes inueherentur, imperium esset. intacta inuidia media sunt: ad summa ferme tendit. nec de Anici nec de Octaui triumpho dubitatum est; Paulum, cui ipsi quoque se comparare erubuissent, obtrectatio carpsit. antiqua disciplina milites habuerat; de praeda parcius, quam sperauerant ex tantis regiis opibus, dederat nihil relicturis, si auiditati indulgeretur, quod in aerarium deferret. totus Macedonicus exercitus imperatori ita * * * neglegenter adfuturus comitiis ferendae legis. sed eos Ser. Sulpicius Galba, qui tribunus militum secundae legionis in Macedonia fuerat, priuatim imperatori inimicus, prensando ipse et per suae legionis milites sollicitando stimulauerat, ut frequentes ad suffragium adessent. imperiosum ducem et malignum antiquando rogationem, quae de triumpho eius ferretur, ulciscerentur. plebem urbanam secuturam esse militum iudicia. pecuniam illum dare non potuisse: militem honorem dare posse. ne speraret ibi fructum gratiae, ubi non meruisset.

[36] His incitatis cum in Capitolio rogationem eam Ti. Sempronius tribunus plebis ferret et priuatis <de> lege dicendi locus esset <et> ad suadendum, ut in re minime dubia, haud quisquam procederet, Ser. Galba repente processit et a tribunis postulauit, ut, quoniam hora iam octaua diei esset, nec satis temporis ad demonstrandum haberet, cur L. Aemilium non iuberent triumphare, in posterum diem differrent et mane eam rem agerent: integro sibi die ad causam eam orandam opus esse. cum tribuni dicere eo die, si quid uellet, iuberent, in noctem rem dicendo extraxit referendo admonendoque exacta acerbe munia militiae; plus laboris, plus periculi, quam desiderasset res, iniunctum; contra in praemiis, in honoribus omnia artata; militiamque, si talibus succedat ducibus, horridiorem asperiores<que> bellantibus, eandem uictoribus inopem atque inhonoratam futuram. Macedonas in meliore fortuna quam milites Romanos esse. si frequentes postero die ad legem antiquandam adessent, intellecturos potentis uiros non omnia in ducis, aliquid et in militum manu esse. his uocibus incitati postero die milites tanta frequentia Capitolium conpleuerunt, ut aditus nulli praeterea ad suffragium ferendum esset. intro uocatae primae tribus cum antiquarent, concursus in Capitolium principum ciuitatis factus est, indignum facinus esse clamitantium L. Paulum tanti belli uictorem despoliari triumpho: obnoxios imperatores tradi licentiae atque auaritiae militari. iam nunc nimis saepe per ambitionem peccari; quid, si domini milites imperatoribus imponantur? in Galbam pro se quisque probra ingerere. tandem hoc tumultu sedato M. Seruilius, qui consul et magister equitum fuerat, ut de integro eam <rem> agerent ab tribunis petere, dicendique sibi ad populum potestatem facerent. tribuni cum ad deliberandum secessissent, uicti auctoritatibus principum de integro agere coeperunt reuocatuosque se easdem tribus pronuntiarunt, si M. Seruilius aliique priuati, qui dicere uellent, dixissent.

Quirites, si ex alia re nulla aestimari posset, uel hoc satis erat, quod, cum tam seditiosos et leues milites, tam nobilem, tam temerarium, tam eloquentem ad instigandam multitudinem inimicum in castris haberet, nullam in exercitu seditionem habuit. eadem seueritas imperii, quam nunc oderunt, tum eos continuit. itaque antiqua disciplina habiti <neque dixerunt seditiose quicquam> neque fecerunt. Seruius quidem Galba, si in L. Paulo accusando tirocinium ponere et documentum eloquentiae dare uoluit, non triumphum impedire debuit, quem, si nihil aliud, senatus iustum esse iudicauerat, sed postero die quam triumphatum esset, priuatum eum <cum> uisurus esset, nomen deferret et legibus interrogaret; aut serius paulo, cum primum magistratum ipse cepisset, diem diceret inimico <et> eum ad populum accusaret. ita et pretium recte facti triumphum haberet L. Paulus pro egregie bello gesto et poenam, si quid et uetere gloria sua et noua indignum fecisset. sed uidelicet, cui <nullum> crimen, nullum probrum dicere poterat, eius obtrectare laudes uoluit. diem integrum hesterno die <ad> accusandum L. Paulum petit: quattuor horas, quantum supererat diei, dicendo absumpsit. quis umquam tam nocens reus fuit, cuius uitia uitae tot horis expromi non possent? quid interim obiecit, quod L. Paulus, si causam dicat, negatum uelit? duas mihi aliquis contiones parumper faciat, unam militum Macedonicorum, puram alteram et integrioris iudicii a fauore et odio, uniuersi populi Romani; apud contionem togatam et urbanam prius reus agatur. quid apud Quirites Romanos, Ser. Galba, diceres? illa enim tibi tota abscisa oratio esset “in statione seuerius et intentius stetisti; uigiliae acerbius et diligentius circumitae sunt; operis plus quam antea fecisti, cum ipse imperator ut exactor circumiret; eodem die et iter fecisti et in aciem ex itinere exi<sti; ne> uictorem quidem te adquiescere passus est; statim ad persequendos hostes duxit. cum te praeda partienda locupletem facere posset, pecuniam regiam translaturus in triumpho est et in aerarium laturus,” haec sicut ad militum animos stimulandos aliquem aculeum habent, qui parum licentiae, parum auaritiae suae inseruitum censent, ita apud populum Romanum nihil ualuissent, qui, ut uetera atque audita a parentibus suis non repetat, quae ambitione imperatorum clades acceptae sint, quae seueritate imperii uictoriae partae, proximo certe Punico bello, quid inter M. Minucium magistrum equitum et Q.

Fabium Maximum dictatorem interfuerit, meminit. itaque <apparuisset neque> accusatorem hiscere potuisse et superuacaneam defensionem Pauli fuisse. transeatur ad alteram contionem; nec Quirites uos, sed milites uideor appellaturus, si nomen hoc saltem ruborem incutere et uerecundiam aliquam imperatoris uiolandi adferre possit.’

[38] ‘Equidem ipse aliter adfectus animo sum, qui apud exercitum mihi loqui uidear, quam paulo ante eram, cum ad plebem urbanam spectabat oratio. quid autem dicitis, milites? aliquis est Romae, praeter Persea, qui triumphari de Macedonibus nolit: et eum non isdem manibus discerpitis, quibus Macedonas uicistis? uincere uos prohibuisset, si potuisset, qui triumphantis urbem inire prohibet. erratis, milites, si triumphum imperatoris tantum et non militum quoque et uniuersi populi Romani esse decus censetis. non unius in hoc Pauli * * *. multi etiam, qui ab senatu non inpetrarunt triumphum, in monte Albano triumpharunt; nemo L. Paulo magis eripere decus perfecti belli Macedonici potest quam C. Lutatio primi Punici belli, quam P. Cornelio secundi, * * * quam illi, qui triumphauerant; nec L. Paulum minorem aut maiorem imperatorem triumphus faciet — , militum magis in hoc uniuersi<que> populi Romani fama agitur, primum ne inuidiae et ingrati animi aduersus clarissimum quemque ciuem opinionem habeat et imitari in hoc populum Atheniensem lacerantem inuidia principes suos uideatur. satis peccatum in Camillo a maioribus uestris est, quem tamen ante receptam per eum a Gallis urbem uiolarunt; satis nuper  uobis in P. Curius tantum nec P. Cornelius, sed Romani triumpharunt. militum quidem propria est cum Samothracen peteret, dissipatum tradunt; eoque id mirabilius erat, quod tantum pecuniae intra triginta annos post bellum Philippi cum Romanis partim ex fructu metallorum, partim ex uestigalibus aliis coaceruatum fuerat. itaque admodum inops pecuniae Philippus, Perseus contra praediues bellare cum Romanis coepit. ipse postremo Paulus in curru, magnam cum dignitate alia corporis, tum senecta ipsa maiestatem prae se ferens; <post> currum inter alios inlustres uiros filii duo, <Q.> Maximus et P. Antonio tribuno plebis contione, cum de suis rebus gestis more ceterorum imperatorum edissereret, memorabilis eius oratio et digna Romano principe fuit.

[41] 'Quamquam, et qua felicitate rem publicam administrauerim, et <quae> duo fulmina domum meam per hos dies perculerint, non ignorare uos, Quirites, arbitror, cum spectaculo uobis nunc triumphus meus, nunc funera liberorum meorum fuerint, tamen paucis, quaeso, sinatis me cum publica felicitate conparare eo, quo debeo, animo priuatam meam fortunam. profectus ex Italia classem a Brundisio sole orto solui; nona diei hora cum omnibus meis nauibus Corcyram tenui. inde quinto die Delphis Apollini pro me exercitibusque et classibus uestris sacrificauit. a Delphis quinto die in castra perueni: ubi exercitu accepto, mutatis quibusdam, quae magna impedimenta uictoriae erant, progressus, quia inexpugnabilia <castra> hostium erant neque cogi pugnare poterat rex, inter praesidia eius saltum ad Petram euasi et ad Pydnam regem acie uici; Macedoniam in potestatem populi Romani redege et, quod bellum per quadriennium tres ante me consules ita gesserunt, ut semper successoribus traderent grauius, id ego quindecim diebus perfeci. aliarum deinde secundarum rerum uelut prouentus secutus: ciuitates omnes Macedoniae se dediderunt, gaza regia in potestatem uenit, rex ipse tradentibus prope ipsis dis in templo Samothracum cum liberis est captus. mihi quoque ipsi nimia iam fortuna uideri eoque suspecta esse. maris pericula timere coepi in tanta pecunia regia in Italiam traicienda et uictore exercitu transportando. postquam omnia secundo nauium cursu in Italiam peruenerunt neque erat, quod ultra precarer, illud optaui, ut, cum ex summo retro uolui fortuna consuisset, mutationem eius domus mea potius quam res publica sentiret. itaque defunctam esse fortunam publicam mea tam insigni calamitate spero, quod triumphus meus, uelut ad ludibrium casuum humanorum, duobus funeribus liberorum meorum est interpositus. et cum ego et Perseus nunc nobilia maxime sortis mortalium exempla spectemur, illi, qui ante se captiuos <captiuus> ipse duci liberos uidit, incolumes tamen eos habet: ego, qui de illo triumphauis, ab alterius funere filii curram <escendi, alterum rediens> ex Capitolio prope iam expirantem <in>ueni; neque ex tanta stirpe liberum superest, qui L. Aemili Pauli nomen ferat. duos enim tamquam ex magna progenie liberorum in adoptionem datos Cornelia et Fabia gens habent: Paulus in domo praeter senem nemo superest. sed hanc cladem domus meae uestra felicitas et secunda fortuna publica consolatur.’

Cn. Octavius kalendis Decembribus de rege Perseo naualem triumphum egit. is triumphus sine captiuis fuit, sine spoliis. dedit sociis naualibus in singulos denarios septuagenos quinos, gubernatoribus, qui in nauibus fuerant, duplex, magistris nauium quadruplex. senatus deinde habitus est. patres censuerunt, ut Q. Cassius Persea regem cum Alexandro filio Albam in custodiam duceret; comites, pecuniam, argentum, instrumentum, quod haberet, nihil <detrahens habere sineret; Bithys, filius Cotyis,> regis Thracum, <cum> obsidibus in custodiam Carseolos est missus. ceteros captiuos, qui in triumpho ducti erant, in carcerem condi placuit. paucos post dies, quam haec <sunt> acta, legati ab Cotye, rege Thracum, uenerunt pecuniam ad redimendum filium aliosque obsides adportantes. eis in senatum introductis et id ipsum argumenti praetendentibus orationi, non sua uoluntate Cotyn bello iuuisse Persea, quod obsides dare coactus esset, orantibusque, ut eos pretio, quantum ipsi statuissent patres, redimi paterentur, responsum ex auctoritate senatus est, populum Romanum meminisse amicitiae, quae cum Cotye maioribusque eius et gente Thracum fuisset. obsides datos crimen, non criminis defensionem esse, cum Thracum genti ne quietus quidem Perseus, nedum bello Romano occupatus timendus fuerit. ceterum, etsi Cotys Persei gratiam praetulisset amicitiae populi Romani, magis, quid se dignum esset, quam quid merito eius fieri posset, aestimaturum, filium atque obsides ei remissurum. beneficia gratuita esse populi Romani; pretium eorum malle relinquere in accipientium animis quam praesens exigere. legati tres nominati, T. Quinctius Flaminius, C. Licinius Nerua, M. Caninius Rebilus, qui obsides in Thraciam reducerent; et Thracibus munera data in singulos binum milium aeris. Bithys cum ceteris obsidibus a Carseolis accersitus ad patrem cum legatis missus. naues regiae captae de Macedonibus inuisitatae ante magnitudinis in campo Martio subductae sunt.

[43] Haerente adhuc non in animis modo, sed paene in oculis memoria Macedonici triumphi L. Anicius Quirinalibus triumphauit de rege Gentio Illyriisque. similia omnia magis uisa hominibus quam paria: minor ipse imperator, et nobilitate Anicius cum Aemilio et iure imperii praetor cum consule conlatus; non Gentius Perseo, non Illyrii Macedonibus, non spolia spoliis, non pecunia pecuniae, non dona donis comparari poterant. itaque sicut praeefulgebat huic triumphus recens, ita apparebat ipsum per se intuentibus nequaquam esse contemnendum. perdomuerat intra paucos dies terra marique ferocem, locis munimentisque fretam gentem Illyriorum; regem regiaeque omnes stirpis ceperat. transtulit in triumpho multa militaria signa spoliaque alia et supellectilem regiam, auri pondo uiginti et septem, argenti decem et nouem pondo, denarium decem tria milia et centum uiginti milia Illyrici argenti. ante currum ducti Gentius rex cum coniuge et liberis et Carauantius, frater regis, et aliquot nobiles Illyrii. de praeda militibus in singulos quadragenos quinos denarios, duplex centurioni, triplex equiti, sociis nominis Latini quantum ciuibus, et sociis naualibus dedit quantum militibus. laetior hunc triumphum est secutus miles, multisque dux ipse carminibus celebratus. sestertium ducentiens ex ea praeda redactum esse auctor est Antias, praeter aurum argentumque, quod in aerarium sit latum; quod quia unde redigi potuerit non apparebat, auctorem pro re posui. rex Gentius cum liberis et coniuge et fratre Spoletium in custodiam ex senatus consulto ductus, ceteri captiui Romae in carcerem coniecti; recusantibusque custodiam Spoletinis Iguuium reges traducti. relicum ex Illyrico praedae ducenti uiginti lembi erant; de Gentio rege captos eos Corcyraeis et Apolloniatis et Dyrrhachinis Q. Cassius ex senatus consulto tribuit.

[44] Consules eo anno agro tantum Ligurum populato, cum hostes exercitus numquam eduxissent, nulla re memorabili gesta Romam ad magistratus subrogandos redierunt et primo comitiali die consules crearunt M. Claudium Marcellum, C. Sulpicium Gallum, deinde praetores postero die L. Iulium, L. Apuleium Saturninum, A. Licinium Neruam, P. Rutilium Caluum, P. Quinctilium Uarum, M. Fonteium. his praetoribus duae urbanae prouinciae sunt decretae, duae Hispaniae, Sicilia ac Sardinia.

Intercalatum eo anno; postridie Terminalia <kal.> intercalariae fuerunt. augur eo anno mortuus est C. Claudius; in eius locum augures legerunt T. Quinctium Flamininum. et flamen Quirinalis mortuus Q. Fabius Pictor.

Eo anno rex Prusia uenit Romam cum filio Nicomede. is magno comitatu urbem ingressus ad forum a porta tribunalque <Q.> Cassi praetoris perrexit concursuque undique facto deos, qui urbem Romam incolerent, senatumque et populum Romanum salutatum se dixit uenisse et gratulatum, quod Persea Gentiumque reges uicissent, Macedonibusque et Illyriis in dicionem redactis auxissent imperium. cum praetor senatum ei, si uellet, eo die daturum dixisset, biduum petit, quo templa deum urbemque et hospites amicosque uiseret. datus, qui circumduceret eum, <L.> Cornelius Scipio quaestor, qui et Capuam ei obuiam missus fuerat; et aedes, quae ipsum comitesque eius benigne reciperent, conductae. tertio post die senatum adit; gratulatus uictoriam est; merita sua in eo bello commemorauit; petiit, ut uotum sibi soluere, Romae in Capitolio decem maiores hostias et Praeneste unam Fortunae, liceret — ea uota pro uictoria populi

Romani esse — , et ut societas secum renouaretur agerque sibi de rege Antiocho captus, quem nulli datum  populo Romano Galli possiderent, daretur. filium postremo Nicomedem senatui commendauit. omnium, qui in Macedonia imperatores fuerant, fauore est adiutus. itaque cetera, quae petebat, concessa; de agro responsum est legatos ad rem inspiciendam missuros; <si> is ager populi Romani fuisset nec cuiquam datus esset, dignissimum eo dono Prusiam habituros esse: si autem Antiochi non fuisse et eo ne populi quidem Romani factum appareret aut datum Gallis esse, ignoscere Prusiam debere, si ex nullius iniuria quidquam ei datum uellet populus Romanus. ne cui detur quidem, gratum esse donum posse, quod eum, qui det, ubi uelit, ablaturum esse sciat. filii Nicomedis commendationem accipere. quanta cura regum amicorum liberos tueatur populus Romanus, documento Ptolemaeum, Aegypti regem, esse. cum hoc responso Prusias est dimissus. munera ei ex * * sestertiis iussa dari et uasorum argenteorum pondo quinquaginta. et filio regis Nicomedi ex ea summa munera dari censuerunt, ex qua Masgabae, filio regis Masinissae, data essent; et ut uictimae aliaque, quae ad sacrificium pertinerent, seu Romae seu Praeneste immolare uellet, regi ex publico sicut magistratibus Romanis praeberentur; et ut ex classe, quae Brundisi esset, naues longae uiginti adsignarentur, quibus uteretur; donec ad classem dono datam ei rex peruenisset, L. Cornelius Scipio ne ab eo abscederet sumptumque ipsi et comitibus praeberet, donec nauem conscendisset. mire laetum ea benignitate in se populi Romani regem fuisse ferunt; munera sibi ipsi emi non sisse, filium iussisse donum populi Romani accipere. haec de Prusia nostri scriptores. Polybius eum regem indignum maiestate nominis tanti tradit; pilleatum, capite raso, obuiam <ire> legatis solitum libertumque se populi Romani ferre: ideo insignia ordinis eius gerere; Romae quoque, cum ueniret in curiam, summississe se et osculo limen curiae contigisse et deos seruatores suos senatum appellasse aliamque orationem non tam honorificam audientibus quam sibi deformem habuisse. moratus circa urbem triginta haud amplius dies in regnum est profectus, actumque in Asia bellum inter Eumenen et Gallos in . . . it.

Hic temptandae scientiae Atti Navi auguris causa fertur consuluisse eum, an id de quo cogitaret effici posset; quod cum ille fieri posse dixisset, iussisse eum novacula cotem praecidere, idque ab Atto protinus factum.

[Regnavit annis XXIII. Eo regnante Lucumo, Demarati Corinthi filius, a Tarquinis, Etrusca civitate, Romam venit et in amicitiam Anci receptus Tarquini Prisci nomen ferre coepit et post mortem Anci regnum excepit. Centum in patres allegit, Latinos subegit, ludos in circo edidit, equitum centurias ampliavit, urbem muro circumdedit, cloacas fecit.] Occisus est ab Anci filiis, cum regnasset annis XXXVIII.

Successit ei Servius Tullius, natus ex captiva nobili Corniculana, cui puero athuc in cunis posito caput arsisse traditum erat. Is census primum egit, lustrum condidit, quo censa LXXX milia esse dicuntur, pomerium protulit, colles urbi adiecit Quirinalem, Viminalem, Aesquilinum, templum Dianae cum Latinis in Aventino fecit. Interfectus est a Lucio Tarquinio, Prisci filio, consilio filiae suae Tulliae, cum regnasset annis XLIII.

Post hunc L. Tarquinius Superbus neque patrum neque populi iussu regnum invasit. Is armatos circa se in custodiam sui habuit. Bellum cum Vulscis gessit et ex spoliis eorum templum in Capitolio Iovi fecit. Gabios dolo in potestatem suam redegit. Huius filiis Delphos profectis et consulentibus quis eorum Romae regnaturus esset, dictum est eum regnaturum qui primum matrem osculatus esset. Quod responsum cum ipsi aliter interpretarentur, Iunius Brutus, qui cum his profectus erat, prolapsus se simulavit et terram osculatus est; idque factum eius eventus conprobavit. Nam cum inpotenter se gerendo Tarquinius Superbus omnes in odium sui adduxisset, ad ultimum propter expugnatam nocturna vi a Sexto filio eius Lucretiae pudicitiam, quae ad se vocato patre Tricipitino et viro Collatino obtestata ne inulta mora eius esset cultro se interfecit, Bruti opera maxime expulsus est, cum regnasset annos XXV. Tum consules primi creati sunt L. Iunius Brutus L. Tarquinius Collatinus.

Brutus iureiurando populum adstrinxit neminem Romae regnare passuros. Tarquinium Collatinum collegam suum propter adfinitatem Tarquiniolorum suspectum coegit consulatu se abdicare et civitate cedere. Bona regum diripi iussit, agrum Marti consecravit, qui campus Martius nominatus est. Adulescentes nobiles, in quibus suos quoque et fratris filios, quia coniuraverant de recipiendis regibus, securi percussit. Servo indici, cui Vindicio nomen fuit, libertatem dedit; ei cuius nomine vindicta appellata.

Cum adversus reges, qui contractis Veientum et Tarquiniensium copiis bellum intulerant, exercitum duxisset, in acie cum Arrunte filio Superbi commortuus est; eumque matronae anno luxerunt.

P. Valerius consul legem de provocatione ad populum tulit. Capitolium dedicatum est.

Porsenna, Clusinatorum rex, bello pro Tarquinis suscepto cum ad Ianiculum venisset, ne Tiberim transiret virtute Coclitis Horati prohibitus est, qui, dum alii pontem Sublicium rescindunt, solus Etruscos sustinuit et ponte rupto armatus in flumen se misit et ad suos transnavit. Accessit alterum virtutis exemplum in Mucio. Qui cum ad feriendum Porsennam castra hostium intrasset, occiso scriba, quem regem esse existimaverat, comprehensus inpositam manum altaribus, in quibus sacrificatum erat, exuri passus est dixitque tales CCC esse. Quorum admiratione coactus Porsenna pacis condiciones ferre bellum omisit acceptis obsidibus. Ex quibus virgo una Cloelia deceptis custodibus per Tiberim ad suos transnavit et cum reddita esset, a Porsenna honorifice remissa equestri statua donata est.

Adversus Tarquinium Superbum cum Latinorum exercitu bellum inferentem Aulus Postumius dictator prospere pugnavit.

Appius Claudius ex Sabinis Romam transfugit. Ob hoc Claudia tribus adiecta est numerusque tribuum ampliatus est, ut essent XXI.

Plebs cum propter nexos ob aes alienum in Sacrum montem secessisset, consilio Meneni Agrippae a seditione revocata eat. Idem Agrippa cum decessisset, propter paupertatem publico impendio elatus est. Tribuni plebis quinque creati sunt.

Oppidum Vulscorum Corioli captum est virtute et opera Cn. Marci, qui ob hoc Coriolanus vocatus est.

T. Latinius, vir de plebe, cum in visu admonitus ut de quibusdam religionibus ad senatum perferret id neglexisset, amisso filio pedibus debilis factus, postquam delatus ad senatum lectica eadem illa indicaverat, usu pedum recepto domum reversus est.

Cum Cn. Marcius Coriolanus, qui in exilium erat pulsus, dux Vulacorum factus exercitum hostium urbi admovisset, et missi ad eum primum legati, postea sacerdotes frustra deprecati essent ne bellum patriae inferret, Veturia mater et Volumnia uxor impetraverunt ab eo, ut recederet.

Lex agraria primum lata est.

Spurius Cossius consularis regni crimine damnatus est necatusque.

Opillia virgo Vestalis ob incestum viva defossa est.

Cum vicini Veientes incommodi magis quam graves essent, familia Fabiorum id bellum gerendum depoposcit misitque in id trecentos et sex armatos, qui ad Cremeram praeter unum ab hostibus caesi sunt.

Appius Claudius cos. cum adversus Vulscos contumacia exercitus male pugnatum esset, decimum quemque militum fuste percussit.

Res praeterea adversus Vulscos et Hernicos et Veientes et seditiones inter patres plebemque continet.

Seditiones de agrariis legibus fuere. Capitolium ab exulibus et servis occupatum caesis his receptum est.

Census bis actus est. Priore lustro censa sunt civium capita +VIII milia DCCXIII+ praeter orbos orbasque, sequenti CXVII milia CCXVIII.

Cum adversus Aequos male gesta res esset, L. Quintius Cincinnatus dictator factus, cum rure intentus operi rustico esset, ad id bellum gerendum arcessitus est. Is victos hostes sub iugum misit.

Tribunorum plebis numerus ampliatus est, ut essent X, tricesimo sexto anno [a] primis tribunis plebis.

Petitis per legatos et adlatis Atticis legibus ad constituendas eas proponendasque X viri pro consulibus sine ullis aliis magistratibus creati altero et trecentesimo anno quam Roma condita erat, et ut a regibus ad consules, ita a consulibus ad X viros imperium translatum. Hi X tabulis legum positis cum modeste se in eo honore gessissent et ob id in alterum quoque annum eundem esse magistratum placuisset, duabus tabulis ad X adiectis cum complura inpotenter fecissent, magistratum noluerunt deponere et in tertium annum retinuerunt, donec invisio eorum imperio finem adtulit libido Appi Claudii. Cum Antiochus, Syriae rex, Ptolemaeum et Cleopatram, Aegypti reges, obsideret et missis ad eum a senatu legatis, qui iuberent ab solo regis absisteret, editisque mandatis consideraturum se quid faciendum esset respondisset, unus ex legatis Popilius uirga regem circumscripsit iussitque, ante quam circulo excederet, responsum daret. Qua asperitate effecit ut Antiochus bellum omitteret.

Legationes gratulantium populorum atque regum in senatu admissae, Rhodiorum, qui eo bello contra populum R. fauerant, exclusa. Postera die cum de eo quaereretur ut his bellum indiceretur, causam in senatu patriae suae legati egerunt; nec tamquam socii, nec tamquam hostes dimissi.

Macedonia in prouinciae formam redacta Aemilius Paulus repugnantibus militibus ipsius propter minorem praedam et contradicente Seruio Sulpicio Galba triumphauit et Persen cum tribus filiis duxit ante currum. Cuius triumphi laetitia ne solida ei contingeret, duorum filiorum funeribus insignita est, quorum alterius mors triumphum patris praecessit, alterius secuta est.

Hunc Antiochum puerum cum Lysia tutore Demetrius, Seleuci filius, qui Romae obses fuerat, clam, quia non dimittebatur, a Roma . . . interemit et ipse in regnum receptus.

Lustrum a censoribus conditum est. Censa sunt ciuium capita CCCXXIII milia.

Semina tertii Punici belli referuntur. Cum in finibus Carthaginiensium ingens Numidarum exercitus duce Arcobarzane, Syphacis nepote, diceretur esse, M. Porcius Cato suasit ut Carthaginiensibus, qui exercitum specie contra Masinissam, re contra Romanos accitum in finibus haberent, bellum indiceretur. Contra dicente P. Cornelio Nasica placuit legatos mitti Carthaginem, qui specularentur quid ageretur. Castigato senatu Carthaginiensium, quod contra foedus et exercitum et nauales materias haberent, pacem inter eos et Masinissam facere uoluerunt, Masinissa agro, de quo lis erat, cedente. Sed Gisco, Hamilcaris filius, homo seditiosus, qui tum in magistratu erat, cum senatus pariturum se iudicio legatis dixisset, ita populum concitauit bellum aduersus Romanos suadendo, ut legatos, quo minus uiolarentur, fuga explicuerit. Id nuntiantes infestum iam senatum Carthaginiensibus infestiores fecerunt.

M. Porcius Cato filii in praetura mortui funus tenuissimo ut potuit (nam pauper erat) sumptu fecit.

Andriscus, qui se Persei filium, regis quondam Macedoniae, ingenti adseueratione mentiretur, Romam missus.

M. Aemilius Lepidus, qui princeps senatus sextis iam censoribus lectus erat, antequam expiraret, praecepit filiis lecto se strato linteis sine purpura efferrent, in reliquum funus ne plus quam aeris decies consumerent: imaginum specie, non sumptibus nobilitari magnorum uirorum funera solere.

De ueneficiis quaesitum: Publilia et Licinia, nobiles feminae, quae uiros suos consulares necasse insimulabantur, cognita causa, cum praetori praedes uades dedissent, cognatorum decreto necatae sunt.

Gulussa, Masinissae filius, nuntiauit Carthagine dilectus agi, classem conparari et haud dubie bellum strui. Cum Cato suaderet ut his bellum indiceretur, P. Cornelio Nasica dicente nihil temere faciendum, placuit X legatos mitti exploratum.

L. Licinius Lucullus A. Postumius Albinus coss. cum dilectum seuerè agerent nec quemquam gratia dimitterent, ab tribunis pl., qui pro amicis suis uacationem impetrare non poterant, in carcerem coniecti sunt. Cum Hispaniense bellum parum prospere aliquotiens gestum ita confudisset ciuitatem Romanam, ut ne hi quidem inuenirentur qui aut tribunatum exciperent aut legati ire uellent, P. Cornelius Aemilianus processit et excepturum se militiae genus, quodcumque imperatum esset, professus est. Quo exemplo omnes ad studium militandi concitauit.

Lucullus cos., cum Claudius Marcellus, cui successerat, pacasse omnes Celtiberiae populos uideretur, Vaccaeos et Cantabros et alias incognitas adhuc in Hispania trentes subegit. Ibi P. Cornelius Scipio Aemilianus, L. Pauli filius, Africani nepos, set adoptiuus, prouocatorem barbarum tribunus militum occidit et in expugnatione Intercatiae urbis maius etiam nunc periculum adiit. Nam murum primus transcendit.

Seruius Sulpicius Galba praetor male aduersus Lusitanos pugnavit. Cum legati ex Africa cum oratoribus Carthaginiensium et Gulussa, Masinissae filio, redissent dicerentque et exercitum se et classem Carthagine deprehendisse, perrogari sententias placuit.

Catone et aliis principibus senatus suadentibus ut in Africam confestim transportaretur exercitus, quoniam Cornelius Nasica dicebat nondum sibi iustam causam belli uideri, placuit ut bello abstinerent, si Carthaginienses classem exussissent et exercitum dimisissent ; si minus, proximi consules de bello Punico referrent.

Cum locatum a censoribus theatrum exstrueretur, P. Cornelio Nasica auctore tamquam inutile et nociturum publicis moribus ex S. C. destructum est populusque aliquamdiu stans ludos spectauit.

Carthaginienses cum aduersus foedus bellum Masinissae intulissent, uicti ab eo annos habente XCII et sine pulpamine mandere et siccum gustare panem tantum solito insuper Romanum bellum meruerunt.

Motus praeterea Syriae et bella inter reges gesta referuntur. Inter quos motus Demetrius, Syriae rex, occisus est.

Tertii Punici belli initium altero et sescentesimo ab Vrbe condita anno, intra quintum annum, quam erat coeptum, consummati.

Inter M. Porcium Catonem et Scipionem Nasicam, quorum alter sapientissimus uir in ciuitate habebatur, alter optimus uir etiam iudicatus a senatu erat, diuersis certatum sententiis est, Catone suadente bellum et ut tolleretur deletereturque Carthago, Nasica dissuadente. Placuit tamen, quod contra foedus naues haberent, quod exercitum extra fines duxissent, quod socio populi R. et amico Masinissae arma intulissent, quod filium eius Gulussam, qui cum legatis Romanis erat, in oppidum non recepissent, bellum his indici.

Prius quam ullae copiae in naues imponerentur, Vticenses legati Romam uenerunt se suaque omnia dedentes. Ea legatio uelut omen grata patribus, acerba Carthaginiensibus fuit.

Ludi Diti patri ad Tarentum ex praecepto librorum facti, qui ante annum centesimum primo Punico bello, quingentesimo et altero anno ab urbe condita facti erant.

Legati XXX Romam uenerunt, per quos se Carthaginienses dedebant. Catonis sententia euicit ut in decreto perstaretur et ut consules quam primum ad bellum proficerentur. Qui ubi in Africam transierunt, acceptis quos imperauerant CCC obsidibus et armis omnibus instrumentisque belli, si qua Carthagine erant, cum ex auctoritate patrum iuberent ut in alium locum, dum a mari X milia passuum ne minus remotum, oppidum facerent, indignitate rei ad bellandum Carthaginienses compulerunt.

Obsideri obpugnarique coepta est Carthago a L. Marcio M'. Manilio coss. In qua obpugnatione cum neglectos ab una parte muros duo tribuni temere cum cohortibus suis inrupissent et ab oppidanis grauitur caederentur, a Scipione Orfiniato expliciti sunt. Per quem et castellum Romanorum, quod nocte expugnabant, paucis equitibus iuuantibus liberatum est castrorumque, quae Carthaginienses omnibus copiis ab urbe pariter egressi obpugnabant, liberatorum is ipse praecipuam gloriam tulit.

Praeterea cum ab inrita obpugnatione Carthaginis consul (alter enim Romam ad comitia ierat) exercitum duceret aduersus Hasdrubalem (cum ampla manu saltum iniquum insederat) suasit primo consuli ne tam iniquo loco confligeret. Victus deinde conplurium, qui et prudentiae et uirtuti eius inuidebant, sententiis et ipse saltum ingressus est. Cum, sicut praedixerat, fusus fugatusque esset Romanus exercitus et duae cohortes ab hoste obsiderentur, cum paucis equitum turmis in saltum reuersus liberauit eas et incolumes reduxit. Quam uirtutem eius et Cato, uir promptioris ad uituperandum linguae, in senatu sic prosecutus est ut diceret reliquos, qui in Africa militarent, umbras uolitare, Scipionem uigere, et populus R. eo fauore complexus ut comitiis plurimae eum tribus consulem scriberent, cum hoc per aetatem non liceret.

Cum L. Scribonius tr. pl. rogationem promulgasset, ut Lusitani, qui in fidem populo R. dediti ab Seruio Galba in Galliam uenissent, in libertatem restituerentur, M. Cato acerrime suasit. Extat oratio in Annalibus ipsius inclusa.

Q. Fuluius Nobilior ei, saepe ab eo in senatu laceratus, respondit pro Galba; ipse quoque Galba cum se damnari uideret, complexus duos filios praetextatos et Sulpicii Galli filium, cuius tutor erat, ita miserabiliter pro se locutus est ut rogatio antiquaretur. Exstant tres orationes eius, duae aduersus Libonem tr. pl. rogationemque eius habitae de Lusitanis, una contra L. Cornelium Cethegum, in qua Lusitanos prope se castra habentis caesos fatetur, quod compertum habuerit, equo atque homine suo ritu immolatis per speciem pacis adoriri exercitum suum in animo habuisse. Andriscus quidam, ultimae sortis homo, Persei se regis filium ferens et mutato nomine

Philippus uocatus cum ab urbe Romana, quo illum Demetrius, Syriae rex, ob hoc ipsum mendacium miserat, clam profugisset, multis ad falsam eius fabulam uelut ad ueram coeuntibus, contracto exercitu totam Macedoniam aut uoluntate incolentium aut armis occupauit. Fabulam autem talem finxerat:

“Ex paelice se et Perseo rege ortum traditum educandum Cretensi cuidam esse, ut in belli casus quod ille cum Romanis gereret, aliquod uelut semen regiae stirpis exstaret. Hydramyti se educatum usque ad XII aetatis annum, patrem eum esse credentem a quo educaretur, ignarum generis fuisse sui. Adfecto deinde eo, cum prope ad ultimum finem uitae esset, detectam tandem sibi originem suam falsaeque matri libellum datum signo Persei regis signatum, quem sibi traderet, cum ad puberem aetatem uenisset, obtestationesque ultimas adiectas, ut res in occultato ad id tempus seruaretur. Pubescenti libellum traditum in quo relictis sibi duo thesauri a patre dicerentur. Tum scienti mulierem se subditum esse, uerum stirpem ignoranti edidisse genus atque obtestatam, ut prius quam manaret ad Eumenen res, Perseo inimicum, excederet his locis, ne interficeretur. Eo se exterritum, simul sperantem aliquod a Demetrio auxilium in Syriam se contulisse atque ibi primum quis esset palam expromere ausum.”

Thessalia, cum et illam inuadere armis atque occupare Pseudophilippus uellet, per legatos Romanorum auxiliis Achaeorum defensa est. Prusias, rex Bithyniae, omnium humillimorumque uitiorum, a Nicomede filio adiuuante Attalo, rege Pergami, occisus, habebat alterum filium, qui pro superiore ordine dentium enatum habuisse unum os continens dicitur. Cum III legati ad pacem inter Nicomedem et Prusiam faciendam ab Romanis missi essent, cum unus ex his multis cicatricibus sartum caput haberet, alter pedibus aeger esset, tertius ingenio socors haberetur, M. Cato dixit “eam in legationem, nec caput nec pedes nec cor habere.”

In Syria, quae eo tempore stirpe generis parem Macedonum regis, inertia socordiaque similem Prusiae regem habebat, iacente eo in ganea et lustris Hammonius regnabat, per quem et amici omnes regis et Laodice regina et Antigonos, Demetri filius, occisi sunt.

Masinissa, Numidia rex, maior XC annis decessit, uir insignis.

Inter cetera iuuenalia opera, quae ad ultimum edidit adeo etiam neruis in senecta uirgit, ut post sextum et octogesimum annum filium genuerit. Inter tres liberos eius (maximus natu Micipsa, Gulussa, Mastanabal, qui etiam Graecis litteris eruditus erat) P. Scipio Aemilianus, cum commune his regnum pater reliquisset et diuidere eos arbitro Scipione iussisset, partes administrandi regni diuisit. Item Phameae Hamilconi, praefecto equitum Carthaginiensium, uiro forti et cuius praecipua opera Poeni utebantur, persuasit ut ad Romanos cum equitatu suo transiret. Ex tribus legatis qui ad Masinissam missi erant, M. Claudius Marcellus cohorta tempestate fluctibus obrutus est.

Carthaginienses Hasdrubalem, Masinissae nepotem, quem praetorem habebant, hominem proditoris suspectum, in curia occiderunt ; quae suspicio inde manauit, quod propinquus esset Gulussae Romanorum auxilia iuuantis. P. Scipio Aemilianus cum aedilitatem peteret, consul a populo dictus. Quoniam per annos consuli fieri non licebat, cum magno certamine suffragantis plebis et repugnantibus ei aliquamdiu patribus, legibus solutus et consul creatus.

M^o. Manilius aliquot urbes circumpositas Carthagini expugnauit.

Pseudophilippus in Macedonia, caeso cum exercitu P. Iuuentio praetore, ab Q. Caecilio uictus captusque est, et reuicta Macedonia.

Carthago, in circuitum XXIII milia patens, magno labore obsessa et per partes capta est; primum a Mancino legato, deinde a Scipione cos., cui extra sortem Africa prouincia data erat. Carthaginienses portu nouo, quia uetus obstructus a Scipione erat, facto et contracta clam exiguo tempore ampla classe infeliciter nauali proelio pugnaverunt. Hasdrubalis quoque, ducis eorum, castra ad Nopherim oppidum loco difficili sita cum exercitu deleta sunt a Scipione, qui tandem expugnauit septingentesimo anno quam erat condita.

Spoliorum maior pars Siculis, quibus ablata erant, reddita.

Ultimo urbis excidio cum se Hasdrubal Scipioni dedisset, uxor eius, quae paucis ante diebus de marito impetrare non potuerat ut ad uictorem transfugerent, in medium se flagrantis urbis incendium cum duobus liberis ex arce praecipitauit.

Scipio exemplo patris sui, Aemili Pauli, qui Macedoniam uicerat, ludos fecit transfugasque ac fugitiosos bestiis obiecit.

Belli Achaici semina referuntur haec, quod legati Romani ab Achaeis pulsati sint Corinthi, missi ut eas ciuitates, quae sub ditione Philippi fuerant, ab Achaico concilio secernerent.

Cum Achaeis, qui in auxilio Boeotos et Chalcidenses habebant, Q. Caecilius Metellus ad Thermopylas bello confluxit. Quibus uictis dux eorum Critolaus mortem sibi ueneno consciuit. In cuius locum Diaeus, Achaici motus primus auctor, ab Achaeis dux creatus ad Isthmon a L. Mummius cos. uictus est. Qui omni Achaia in deditionem accepta Corinthon ex S. C. diruit, quia ibi legati Romani uiolati erant. Thebae quoque et Chalcis, quae auxilio fuerant, dirutae. Ipse L. Mummius abstinentissimum uirum egit, nec quicquam ex his operibus ornamentisque quae praediues Corinthos habuit in domum eius peruenit.

Q. Caecilius Metellus de Andrisco triumphauit, P. Cornelius Scipio Aemilianus de Carthagine et Hasdrubale.

Viriathus in Hispania, primum ex pastore uenator, ex uenatore latro, mox iusti quoque exercitus dux factus, totam Lusitaniam occupauit, M. Vetilius praetorem fuso eius exercitu cepit, post quem C. Plautius praetor nihilo felicius rem gessit; tantumque terroris is hostis intulit ut aduersus eum consulari opus esset et duce et exercitu.

Praeterea motus Syriae et bella inter reges gesta referuntur.

Alexander, homo ignotus et incertae stirpis, occiso, sicut ante dictum est, Demetrio rege in Syria regnabat. Hunc Demetrius, Demetri filius, qui a patre quondam ob incertos belli casus ablegatus Cnidon fuerat, contempta socordia inertiaque eius, adiuuante Ptolemaeo, Aegypti rege, cuius filiam Cleopatram in matrimonium acceperat, bello interemit. Ptolemaeus grauiter in caput uulneratus inter curationem, dum ossa medici terebrare conantur, expirauit, atque in locum eius frater minor Ptolemaeus qui Cyrenis regnabat, successit. Demetrius ob crudelitatem quam in suos per tormenta exercebat, ab Diodoto quodam, uno ex subiectis, qui Alexandri filio bimulo admodum regnum adserebat, bello superatus Seleuceam confugit. referuntur.

L. Mummius de Achaeis triumphauit, signa aerea marmoreaque et tabulas pictas in triumpho tulit.

Appius Claudius cos. Salassos, gentem Alpinam, domuit.

Alter Pseudophilippus in Macedonia a L. Tremellio quaestore cum exercitu caesus est.

Q. Caecilius Metellus procos. Celtiberos cecidit et a Q. Fabio procos. magna pars Lusitaniae expugnatis aliquot urbibus recepta est. Acilius senator Graece res Romanas scribit.

Q. Pompeius cos. in Hispania Termestinos subegit. Cum isdem et Numantinis pacem a populo R. infirmatam fecit.

Lustrum a censoribus conditum est. Censa sunt ciuium capita CCCXXVIII milia CCCXLII.

Cum Macedonum legati questum de D. Iunio Silano praetore uenissent, quod acceptis pecuniis prouinciam spoliasset, et senatus de querellis eorum uellet cognoscere, T. Manlius Torquatus, pater Silani, petiit impetravitque ut sibi cognitio mandaretur; et domi causa cognita filium condemnauit abdicauitque. Ac ne funeri quidem eius, cum suspendio uitam finisset, interfuit sedensque domi potestatem consultantibus ex instituto fecit.

Q. Fabius procos. rebus in Hispania prospere gestis labem imposuit pace cum Viriatho aequis condicionibus facta.

Viriathus a proditoribus, consilio Seruili Caepionis, interfectus est et ab exercitu suo multum comploratus ac nobiliter sepultus, uir duxque magnus et per XIII annos quibus cum Romanis bellum gessit, frequentius superior.

P. Cornelio Nasica, cui cognomen Serapion fuit ab inidente Curiatio trib. pleb. impositum, et Dec. Iunio Bruto coss. dilectum habentibus in conspectu tironum res saluberrimi exempli facta est: nam C. Matienius accusatus est apud tribunos pl., quod exercitum ex Hispania deseruisset, damnatusque sub furca diu uirgis caesus est et sestertio nummo ueniit.

Tribuni pleb. quia non inpetrarent ut sibi denos quos uellent milites eximere liceret, consules in carcerem duci iusserunt.

Iunius Brutus cos. in Hispania iis qui sub Viriatho militauerant agros et oppidum dedit, quod uocatum est Valentia.

M. Popilius a Numantinis, cum quibus pacem factam inritam fieri senatus censuerat, cum exercitu fusus fugatusque est.

C. Hostilio Mancino cos. sacrificante pulli ex cauea euolauerunt; conscendenti deinde in nauem, ut in Hispaniam proficisceretur, accidit uox: "Mane, Mancine". Quae auspicia tristia fuisse euentu probatum est. Victus enim a Numantinis et castris exutus, cum spes nulla seruandi exercitus esset, pacem cum his fecit ignominiosam, quam ratam esse senatus uetuit. XXXX milia Romanorum ab IIII milibus Numantinorum uicta erant.

Decimus Iunius Lusitaniam expugnationibus urbium usque ad Oceanum perdomuit, et cum flumen Obliuionem transire nollent, raptum signifero signum ipse transtulit et sic ut transgrederentur persuasit.

Alexandri filius, rex Syriae, X annos admodum habens, a Diodoto, qui Tryphon cognominabatur, tutore suo, per fraudem occisus est corruptis medicis qui illum calculi dolore consumi ad populum mentiti, dum secant, occiderunt.

Decimus Iunius Brutus in Hispania ulteriore feliciter aduersus Gallaecos pugnavit.

Dissimili euentu M. Aemilius Lepidus procos. aduersus Vaccaeos rem gessit, clademque similem Numantinae passus est.

Ad exsoluendum foederis Numantini religione populum Mancinus, cum huius rei auctor fuisset, deditus Numantinis non est receptus.

Lustrum a censoribus conditum est. Censa sunt ciuium capita CCCXVII milia DCCCCXXXIII.

Fuluius Flaccus cos. Vardeos in Illyrico subegit.

M. Cosconius praetor in Thracia cum Scordiscis prospere pugnavit. Cum bellum Numantinum uitio ducum non sine pudore publico duraret, delatus est ultro Scipioni Africano a senatu populoque R. consulatus; quem cum illi capere ob legem, quae uetabat quemquam iterum consulem fieri, non liceret, sicut priori consulatu legibus solutus est.

Bellum seruile in Sicilia ortum cum opprimi a praetoribus non potuisset, C. Fuluius cos. mandatum est. Huius belli initium fuit Eunus seruus, natione Syrus, qui contracta agrestium seruorum manu et solutis ergastulis iusti exercitus numerum impleuit. Cleon quoque alter seruus ad LXX milia seruorum contraxit, et iunctis copiis aduersus exercitum Romanum bellum saepe gesserunt.

Scipio Africanus Numantiam obsedit et corruptum licentia luxuriaque exercitum ad seuerissimam militiae disciplinam reuocauit. Omnia deliciarum instrumenta recidit, duo milia scortorum a castris eiecit, militem cotidie in opere habuit et XXX dierum frumentum ad septenos uallos ferre cogebat. Aegre propter onus incedenti dicebat: “cum gladio te uallare scieris, uallum ferre desinito”; alii scutum parum habiliter ferenti, “amplius eum scutum iusto ferre, neque id se reprehendere, quando melius scuto quam gladio uteretur “. Quem militem extra ordinem deprehendit, si Romanus esset, uitibus, si extraneus, uirgis cecidit. Iumenta omnia, ne exonerarent militem, uendidit. Saepe aduersus eruptiones hostium feliciter pugnavit. Vaccaei obsessi liberis coniugibusque trucidatis ipsi se interemerunt.

Scipio amplissima munera missa sibi ab Antiocho, rege Syriae, cum celare aliis imperatoribus regum munera mos esset, pro tribunali accepturum se esse dixit omniaque ea quaestorem referre in publicas tabulas iussit: ex his se uiris fortibus dona esse daturum. Cum undique Numantiam obsidione clusisset et obsessos fame uideret urgeri, hostes qui pabulatum exierant, uetuit occidi, quia diceret uelocius eos absumpturos frumenti quod haberent, si plures fuissent.

Tib. Sempronius Gracchus trib. pleb. cum legem agrariam ferret aduersus uoluntatem senatus et equestris ordinis: nequis ex publico agro plus quam mille iugera possideret, in eum furorem exarsit ut M. Octauio collegae causam diuersae partis defendenti potestatem lege lata abrogaret, seque et C. Gracchum fratrem et Appium Claudium socerum triumuiros ad diuidendum agrum crearet. Promulgauit et aliam legem agrariam, qua sibi latius agrum patefaceret, ut idem triumuiroi iudicarent, qua publicus ager, qua priuatus esset. Deinde cum minus agri esset quam quod diuidi posset sine offensa etiam plebis, quoniam eos ad cupiditatem amplum modum sperandi incitauerat, legem se promulgaturum ostendit ut his, qui Sempronia lege agrum accipere deberent, pecunia quae regis Attali fuisset diuideretur. Heredem autem populum Romanum reliquerat Attalus, rex Pergami, Eumenis filius.

Tot indignitatibus commotus grauiter senatus, ante omnis T. Annii consularis. Qui cum in senatu in Gracchum perorasset, raptus ab eo ad populum delatusque plebi, rursus in eum pro rostris contionatus est. Cum iterum trib. pleb. creari uellet Gracchus, auctore P. Cornelio Nasica in Capitolio ab optimatibus occisus est, ictus primum fragmentis subselli, et inter alios qui in eadem seditione occisi erant insepultus in flumen proiectus.

Res praeterea in Sicilia uario euentu aduersus fugitiuos gestas continet.

Numantini fame coacti ipsi se per uicem traicientes trucidauerunt, captam urbem Scipio Africanus deleuit et de ea triumphauit XIII anno post Carthaginem deletam.

P. Rupilius cos. in Sicilia cum fugitiuis debellauit.

Aristonicus, Eumenis regis filius, Asiam occupauit, cum testamento Attali regis legata populo R. libera esse deberet. Aduersus eum P. Licinius Crassus cos., cum idem pontifex max. esset, quod numquam antea factum erat, extra Italiam profectus proelio uictus et occisus est. M. Perperna cos. uictum Aristonicum in deditionem accepit.

Q. Pompeius Q. Metellus, tunc primum uterque ex plebe facti censores, lustrum condiderunt. Censa sunt ciuium capita CCCXVIII milia DCCCXXIII praeter pupillos, pupillas et uiduas.

Q. Metellus censor censuit ut cogerentur omnes ducere uxores liberorum creandorum causa. Extat oratio eius, quam Augustus Caesar, cum de maritandis ordinibus ageret, uelut in haec tempora scriptam in senatu recitauit.

C. Atinius Labeo trib. pleb. Q. Metellum censorem, a quo in senatu legendo praeteritus erat, de Saxo deici iussit ; quod ne fieret, ceteri tribuni plebis auxilio tuerunt.

Cum Carbo trib. plebi rogationem tulisset, ut eumdem tribunum pleb., quotiens uellet, creare liceret, rogationem eius P. Africanus grauissima oratione dissuasit ; in qua dixit Ti. Gracchum iure caesum uideri. C. Gracchus contra suasit rogationem, sed Scipio tenuit.

The Biography

Casa Romuli, Palatine Hill, Rome — the Casa Romuli (hut of Romulus) is the reputed dwelling-place of the legendary founder and first king of Rome, Romulus (c. 771-717 BC). It is situated on the south-western corner of the Palatine hill, where it slopes down towards the Circus Maximus, near the so-called "Steps of Cacus". The 'history' of Romulus is narrated in the first book of Livy's history.

LIVY'S HISTORY by Duffield Osborne

Of the lost treasures of classical literature, it is doubtful whether any are more to be regretted than the missing books of Livy. That they existed in approximate entirety down to the fifth century, and possibly even so late as the fifteenth, adds to this regret. At the same time it leaves in a few sanguine minds a lingering hope that some unvisited convent or forgotten library may yet give to the world a work that must always be regarded as one of the greatest of Roman masterpieces. The story that the destruction of Livy was effected by order of Pope Gregory I, on the score of the superstitions contained in the historian's pages, never has been fairly substantiated, and therefore I prefer to acquit that pontiff of the less pardonable superstition involved in such an act of fanatical vandalism. That the books preserved to us would be by far the most objectionable from Gregory's alleged point of view may be noted for what it is worth in favour of the theory of destruction by chance rather than by design.

Here is the inventory of what we have and of what we might have had. The entire work of Livy — a work that occupied more than forty years of his life — was contained in one hundred and forty-two books, which narrated the history of Rome, from the supposed landing of Æneas, through the early years of the empire of Augustus, and down to the death of Drusus, B.C. 9. Books I-X, containing the story of early Rome to the year 294 B.C., the date of the final subjugation of the Samnites and the consequent establishment of the Roman commonwealth as the controlling power in Italy, remain to us. These, by the accepted chronology, represent a period of four hundred and sixty years. Books XI-XX, being the second "decade," according to a division attributed to the fifth century of our era are missing. They covered seventy-five years, and brought the narrative down to the beginning of the second Punic war. Books XXI-XLV have been saved, though those of the fifth "decade" are imperfect.

They close with the triumph of Æmilius, in 167 B.C., and the reduction of Macedonia to a Roman province. Of the other books, only a few fragments remain, the most interesting of which (from Book CXX) recounts the death of Cicero, and gives what appears to be a very just estimate of his character. We have epitomes of all the lost books, with the exception of ten; but these are so scanty as to amount to little more than tables of contents. Their probable date is not later than the time of Trajan. To summarize the result, then, thirty-five books have been saved and one hundred and seven lost — a most deplorable record, especially when we consider that in the later books the historian treated of times and events whereof his means of knowledge were adequate to his task.

TITUS LIVIUS was born at Patavium, the modern Padua, some time between 61 and 57 B.C. Of his parentage and early life nothing is known. It is easy to surmise that he was well born, from his political bias in favour of the aristocratic party, and from the evident fact of his having received a liberal education; yet the former of these arguments is not at all inconsistent with the opposite supposition, and the latter should lead to no very definite conclusion when we remember that in his days few industries were more profitable than the higher education of slaves for the pampered Roman market. Niebuhr infers, from a sentence quoted by Quintilian, that Livy began life as a teacher of rhetoric. However that may be, it seems certain that he came to Rome about 30 B.C., was introduced to Augustus and won his patronage and favour, and after the death of his great patron and friend retired to the city of his birth, where he died, 17 A.D. It is probable that he had fixed the date of the Emperor's death as the limit of his history, and that his own decease cut short his task.

No historian ever told a story more delightfully. The available translations leave much to be desired, but to the student of Latin Livy's style is pure and simple, and possesses that charm which purity and simplicity always give. If there is anything to justify the charge of "Patavinity," or provincialism, made by Asinius Pollio, we, at least, are not learned enough in Latin to detect it; and Pollio, too, appears to have been no gentle critic if we may judge by his equally severe strictures upon Cicero, Cæsar, and Sallust. This much we know: the Patavian's heroes live; his events happen, and we are carried along upon their tide. Our sympathies, our indignation, our enthusiasm, are summoned into being, and history and fiction appear to walk hand in hand for our instruction and amusement. In this latter word — fiction — lies the charge most often and most strongly made against him — the charge that he has written a story and no more; that with him past time existed but to furnish materials "to point a moral or adorn a tale." Let us consider to what extent this is true, and, if true, in what measure the author has sinned by it or we have lost.

No one would claim that the rules by which scientific historians of to-day are judged should be applied to those that wrote when history was young, when the boundaries between the possible and the impossible were less clearly defined, or when, in fact, such boundaries hardly existed in men's minds. In this connection, even while we vaunt, we smile. After all, how much of our modern and so-called scientific history must strike the reasoning reader as mere theorizing or as special pleading based upon the slenderest evidence! Among the ancients the work of the historians whom we consider trustworthy — such writers, for instance, as Cæsar, Thucydides, Xenophon, Polybius, and Tacitus — may be said to fall generally within Rawlinson's canons 1 and 2 of historical criticism — that is, (1) cases where the historian has personal knowledge concerning the facts whereof he writes, or (2) where the facts are such that he may reasonably be supposed to have obtained them from contemporary witnesses. Canon 2 might be elaborated and refined very considerably and perhaps to advantage. It naturally includes as sources of knowledge — first, personal interviews with contemporary witnesses; and, second, accesses to the writings of historians whose opportunities brought them within canon 1. In this latter case the evidence would be less convincing, owing to the lack of opportunity to cross-question, though even here apparent lack of bias or the existence of biased testimony on both sides, from which a judicious man might have a fair chance to extract the truth, would go far to cure the defect.

The point, however, to which I tend is, that the portions of Livy's history from which we must judge of his trustworthiness treat, for the most part, of periods concerning which even his evidence was of the scantiest and poorest description. He doubtless had family records, funeral panegyrics, and inscription — all of which were possibly almost as reliable as those of our own day. Songs sung at festivals and handed down by tradition may or may not be held more truthful. These he had as well; but the government records, the ancient fasti, had been destroyed at the time of the burning of the city by the Gauls, and there is no hint of any Roman historian that lived prior to the date of the second Punic war. Thus we may safely infer that Livy wrote of the first five hundred years without the aid of any contemporary evidence, either approximately complete or ostensibly reliable. With the beginning of the second Punic war began also the writing of history. Quintus Fabius Pictor had left a work, which Polybius condemned on the score of its evident partiality. Lucius Cincius Alimentus, whose claim to knowledge if not to impartiality rests largely on the fact that he was captured and held prisoner by Hannibal, also left memoirs; but Hannibal was not famous for treating prisoners mildly, and the Romans, most cruel themselves in this respect, were always deeply scandalized by a much less degree of harshness on the part of their enemies. Above all, there was Polybius himself, who perhaps approaches nearer to the critical historian than any writer of antiquity, and it is Polybius upon whom Livy mainly relies through his third, fourth, and fifth decades. The works of Fabius and Cincius are lost. So also are those of the Lacedaemonian Sosilus and the Sicilian Silanus, who campaigned with Hannibal and wrote the Carthaginian side of the story; nor is there any evidence that either Polybius or Livy had access to their writings. Polybius, then, may be said to be the only reliable source from which Livy could draw for any of his extant books, and before condemning unqualifiedly in the cases where he deserts him and harks back to Roman authorities we must remember that Livy was a strong nationalist, one of a people who, despite their conquests, were essentially narrow, prejudiced, egotistical; and, thus remembering, we must marvel that he so fully recognises the merit of his unprejudiced guide and wanders as little as he does. All told, it is quite certain that he has dealt more fairly by Hannibal than have Alison and other English historians by Napoleon. His unreliability consists rather in his conclusions than in his facts, and it is unquestioned that through all the pages of the third decade he has so told the story of the man most hated by Rome — the deadliest enemy she had ever encountered — that the reader can not fail to feel the greatness of Hannibal dominating every chapter.

Referring again to the criticisms made so lavishly upon Livy's story of the earlier centuries, it is well to recall the contention of the hard-headed Scotchman Ferguson, that with all our critical acumen we have found no sure ground to rest upon until we reach the second Punic war. Niebuhr, on the other hand, whose German temperament is alike prone to delve or to theorize, is disposed to think — with considerable generosity to our abilities, it appears to me — that we may yet evolve a fairly true history of Rome from the foundation of the commonwealth. As to the times of the kings, it is admitted that we know nothing, while from the founding of the commonwealth to the second Punic war the field may be described as, at the best, but a battle-ground for rival theories.

The ancient historian had, as a rule, little to do with such considerations or controversies. In the lack of solid evidence he had only to write down the accepted story of the origin of things, as drawn from the lips of poetry, legend, or tradition, and it was for Livy to write thus or not at all. Even here the honesty of his intention is apparent. For much of his early history he does not claim more than is claimed for it by many of his modern critics, while time and again he pauses to express a doubt as to the credibility of some incident. A notable instance of this is found in his criticism of those stories most dear to the Roman heart — the stories of the birth and apotheosis of Romulus. On the other hand, if he has given free life to many beautiful legends that were undoubtedly current and believed for centuries, is it heresy to avow that these as such seem to me of more true value to the antiquary than if they had been subjected at their historical inception to the critical and theoretical methods of to-day? I can not hold Livy quite unpardonable even when following, as he often does, such authorities as the Furian family version of the redemption of the city by the arms of their progenitor Camillus, instead of by the payment of the agreed ransom, as modern writers consider proven, while his putting of set speeches into the mouths of his characters may be described as a conventional usage of ancient historians, which certainly added to the liveliness of the narrative and probably was neither intended to be taken literally nor resulted in deceiving any one.

Reverting for a moment to Livy's honesty and frankness, so far as his intent might govern such qualities, I think no stronger evidence in his favour can be found than his avowed republican leanings at the court of Augustus and his just estimate of Cicero's character in the face of the favour of a prince by whose consent the great orator had been assassinated. Above all, it must have been a fearless and honest man who could swing the scourge with which he lashed his degenerate countrymen in those stinging words, "The present times, when we can endure neither our vices nor their remedies."

Nevertheless, and despite the facts that Livy means to be honest and that he questions much on grounds that would not shame the repute of many of his modern critics, the charge is doubtless true that his writings are not free from prejudice in favour of his country. That he definitely regarded history rather as a moral agency and a lesson for the future than as an irrefutable narrative of the past, I consider highly hypothetical; but it is probable that his mind was not of the type that is most diligent in the close, exhaustive, and logical study so necessary to the historian of today. "Superficial," if we could eliminate the reproach in the word, would perhaps go far toward describing him. He is what we would call a popular rather than a scientific writer, and, since we think somewhat lightly of such when they write on what we consider scientific subjects, we are too apt to transfer their light repute to an author who wrote popularly at a time when this treatment was best adapted to his audience, his aims, and the material at his command. That he has survived through all these centuries, and has enjoyed, despite all criticism, the position in the literature of the world which his very critics have united in conceding to him, is perhaps a stronger commendation than any technical approval.

From the standpoint of the present work it was felt that selections aggregating seven books would accomplish all the purposes of a complete presentation. The editors have chosen the first three books of the first decade as telling what no one can better tell than Livy: the stories and legends connected with the foundation and early life of Rome. Here, as I have said, there was nothing for him to do but cut loose from all trammels and hang breathless, pen in hand, upon the lips of tradition. None can hold but that her faithful scribe has writ down her words with all their ancient colour, with reverence reigning over his heart; however doubts might lurk within his brain. These books close with the restoration of the consular power, after the downfall of the tyrannical rule of the Decemvirs, the revolution following upon the attempt of Appius Claudius to seize Virginia, the daughter of a citizen who, rather than see his child fall into the clutches of the cruel patrician, killed her with his own hand in the marketplace, and, rushing into the camp with the bloody knife, caused the soldiers to revolt. The second section comprises Books XXI-XXIV, a part of the narrative of the second Punic war, a military exploit the most remarkable the world has ever seen.

The question who was the greatest general that ever lived has been a fruitful source of discussion, and Alexander, Cæsar, and Napoleon have each found numerous and ardent supporters. Without decrying the signal abilities of these chiefs, it must nevertheless be remembered that each commanded a homogeneous army and had behind him a compact nation the most warlike and powerful of his time. The adversaries also of the Greek and the Roman were in the one instance an effete power already falling to pieces by its own internal weakness, and in the other, for the most part, scattered tribes of barbarians without unity of purpose or military discipline. Even in his civil wars Cæsar's armies were veterans, and those of the commonwealth were, comparatively speaking, recruits. But when the reader of these pages carefully considers the story of Hannibal's campaign in Italy, what does he find? Two nations — one Caucasian, young, warlike above all its contemporaries, with a record behind it of steady aggrandizement and almost unbroken victory, a nation every citizen of which was a soldier. On the other side, a race of merchants Semitic in blood, a city whose citizens had long since ceased to go to war, preferring that their gold should fight for them by the hands of mercenaries of every race and clime — hirelings whose ungoverned valour had proved almost as deadly to their employers and generals as to their enemies. Above all, the same battle had been joined before when Rome was weaker and Carthage stronger, and Carthage had already shown her weakness and Rome her strength.

And now in this renewed war we see a young man, aided only by a little group of compatriots, welding together army of the most heterogeneous elements — Spaniards, Gauls, Numidians, Moors, Greeks — men of almost every race except his own. We see him cutting loose from his base of supplies, leaving enemies behind him, to force his way through hostile races, through unknown lands bristling with almost impassable mountains and frigid with snow and ice. We see him conquering here, making friends and allies there, and, more wonderful than all, holding his mongrel horde together through hardships and losses by the force of his character alone. We see him at last descending into the plains of Italy. We see him not merely defeating but annihilating army after army more numerous than his own and composed of better raw material. We see him, unaided, ranging from end to end of the peninsula, none daring to meet him with opposing standards, and the greatest general of Rome winning laurels because he knew enough to recognise his own hopeless inferiority. All stories of reverses other than those of mere detachments may pretty safely be set down as the exaggeration of Roman writers. Situated as was Hannibal, the loss of one marshalled field would have meant immediate ruin, and ruin never came when he fought in Italy. On the contrary, without supplies save what his sword could take, without friends save what his genius and his fortune could win, he maintained his place and his superiority not for one or for two but through fourteen years, during all which time we hear no murmur of mutiny, no hint of aught but obedience and devotion among the incongruous and unruly elements from which he had fashioned his invincible army; and at the end we see him leaving Italy of his own free will, at the call of his country, to waste himself in a vain effort to save her from the blunders of other leaders and from the penalty of inherent weakness, which only his sword had so long warded off.

When I consider the means, the opposition, and the achievement — a combination of elements by which alone we can judge such questions with even approximate fairness — I can not but feel that of all military exploits this invasion of Italy, which we shall read of here, was the most remarkable; that of all commanders Hannibal has shown himself to be the greatest. Some of Livy's charges against him as a man are doubtless true. Avarice was in his blood; and cruelty also, though it ill became a Roman to chide an enemy on that score. Besides, Livy himself tells how Hannibal had sought for the bodies of the generals he had slain, that he might give them the rites of honourable sepulture; tells it, and in the next breath relates how the Roman commander mutilated the corpse of the fallen Hasdrubal and threw the head into his brother's camp. So, too, his naïve explanation that Hannibal's "more than Punic perfidy" consisted mainly of ambushes and similar military strategies goes to show, as I have said, that whatever is unjust in our author's estimate was rather the result of the prejudiced deductions of national egotism than of facts wilfully or carelessly distorted by partisan spite.

To the reader who bears well in mind the points I have ventured to make, I predict profit hardly less than pleasure in these pages; for Livy is perhaps the only historian who may be said to have been honest enough to furnish much of the material for criticism of himself, and to be, to a very considerable extent, self-adjusting.

Livy is believed to have died in his home city of Patavium (modern day Padua) in AD 17.
